SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.
Established 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

REDUCED GENTLEWOMEN.

THE Christian Public is aware by this time of the lamented death of my beloved sister, Julia Corke, the originator of the effort to establish the LUTHER MEMORIAL HOME, to grant rent-free rooms to the above class.

It is earnestly hoped and believed that this needed work may still be accomplished, that Christian Workers will take it up, and by their prayers, sympathy, and exertions to raise funds, to add to the £200 already subscribed, strengthen the hands of the Treasurer (Miss Julia Fox, 54, Kensington Park-road, Ladbroke-square, Bayswater,) and of myself, who, having worked in the cause from its commencement, will gladly take up this legacy of my beloved sister.

Funds continue to come in which bereavement has prevented my acknowledging as yet. Thanks for all. Shilling Collecting Cards will be gratefully supplied, and Contributions thankfully received by the Treasurer, or by—

ANNETTE CORKE, Hon. Sec.,
120, Ledbury-road, Bayswater, W.

"WOMAN AND THE SCRIPTURES."

SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

Superintendent.—Mr. JAMES SHARPLESS, 14, Sidney-square, Commercial-road, E.
Secretary—EDWARD GEO. HARVEY.

This Mission has been carried on for upwards of twenty years in one of the most degraded parts of the East End of London. To its foundation and management the well-known Mr. W. J. Lewis devoted many of the best years of his life. Ill-health has now compelled him to withdraw from active control, but the work is continued as vigorously as ever. By the operations of this Mission many an outcast has been gathered, from the streets and lanes of this great city, to the fold of Christ; and the work still goes on. By open-air Gospel preaching, house-to-house visitation, services for adults and children, ragged night schools, and lodging-house visitation, we seek, in obedience to the apostolic injunction, to "be instant in season and out of season." "That we might by all means save some" (1 Cor. ix. 22).

Help is sorely needed, and will be thankfully received at the above address; or at the office of The Christian.

FIRST SHEETS OF SCRIPTURAL PROOFS

That God gives us in our Lord Jesus Christ perfect deliverance from all sin, inward as well as outward, if we will but receive Him and believe on His name for all that God has made Him to be to us (John i. 12; 1 Cor. i. 30).

BY J. P. WILSON.

Copies may be obtained by writing to me at the undernoted address, sending Eightpence for price and postage, or without money. I hope that it is with a right motive that I introduce here the first letter received by me on the subject of the book, and that my doing so will not be misconstrued. But if it should be, I must bear with it, and cannot for fear of it withhold the letter. It is from a sister in the Lord unknown to me until I received it.—J. P. W.

"Dear Friend.—I have read your little book, lent me by a friend; and I do desire heartily to thank my God that it was put into my hands. Though for years I have known my Saviour's love, and experienced the incoming of the Holy Spirit in power in my soul, yet since reading the 'Scripture Proofs' I have had a fresh revelation of what Jesus is to me in his capacity of Saviour: and I have been able to grasp Him in a fuller and more comprehensive faith as my deliverer from indwelling sin; and that on the Truth of the living God, as shown so clearly in your little book. My heart goes with every line of it. I do trust and believe it will be blessed wherever it is read: there is so little of man in it and so much of God. Yours in the fellowship of His Spirit, ——."

A FRIEND INDEED.

A GOOD FRIDAY AND EASTER MEDITATION.

"I SHALL always remain your friend so long as you act rightly, and respect yourself." Thus wrote a prominent politician and philanthropist of the last generation to a young man he was befriending. The sentiment is good, so far as it goes. But, alas! in this world of erring mortals that is not very far. Life had been a hopeless failure to most of us had we not known friendship of a type totally different to this.

"Father, if I become wicked, will you stop loving me?" "No, my boy, I shall go on loving you: but it will be with a grieved, hurt kind of love."

Contrast this with the foregoing, and then compare it with the sacred words: "Having loved his own which were in the world, He loved them unto the end."

If you would learn how He loved unto the end, turn to the case of the apostle Peter, and, from each of the six distinct steps taken by our Lord for Peter's restoration, learn the wonderful tenacity, tenderness, and depth of the Saviour's friendship. Such a review can hardly fail to fire all your heart with love and praise, and woo it into a sweeter, closer confidence.

It is remarkable that each of these acts of restoration was Christ's, not Peter's. Is it not always so? Unless the Good Shepherd both seeks the strayed, and carries it home, there will be no return.

Further, two out of these six steps in the restoration of Peter were taken before ever the sin was committed, and may be called our Lord's prevenient acts of restoring grace. Here we see how heavenly love in its thoughtfulness and wisdom looks along the future, foresees and estimates the coming sin and danger, and lays up help accordingly. Who is a friend like our Friend?

1st Step. "I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not" (Luke xxii. 32).

The sin in all its vividness; also the need, misery, and danger that would come with it—all had been seen and prayed over. What reality does this give to the intercession of Christ, our High Priest! Wandering brother, take heart and return, since He has prayed for thee. And we, whose backslidings are healed, whose wanderings ended, let us afresh love and adore as we remember that all this is due to his personal pleadings for us.

"That thy faith fail not." The peculiar danger of a fallen believer lies less in the special sin that laid him low, however great that may be, than in the strong tendency to proud despair, which is sure to come in its train. "I have gone too far to return!" say many, who either go straightway into deeper sin, just because they have lost hope, or else, like miserable Judas, go out and destroy themselves. Is it not beautiful to see how the kind physician in his perfect understanding of the need made such special preparation for it? And, too, should not the sinful learn from this the awful danger of despair, and so rouse themselves to follow eagerly and at once the least ray of hope that enlightens their gloom?

2nd Step.—"I tell thee, Peter, the cock shall not crow this day, before that thou shalt thrice deny that thou knowest Me" (Luke xxii. 34).

Having laid up help for Peter in heaven, our Lord now proceeds to do the same on earth. His plan is the more wonderful in that He chooses a common cock as his servant. He so arranges the talk at the supper-table that the cock-crowing, which Peter is to hear twice on the following morning—a sound which would otherwise have no significance—shall speak for Christ Himself to his guilty conscience. By no chance work did those clear, clarion tones awake the sinner to his sin. It was all according to the pre-arrangement of the wise and watchful Friend. Nor is it mere chance-work to-day, when, the hymn or the text given out, the tune sung, or something in the words or manner of the preacher makes tender and holy memories, brings sorrow for sin, and longings for purity and pardon. Far, far back, perhaps in childhood's morning hours, the loving Lord was laying the train for this very event.

3rd Step.—"And the Lord turned and looked upon Peter" (Luke xxii. 61).

Doubtless that look was as tender as it was reproachful, yea, was reproachful in its very tenderness.

But note the time of it. It followed at once upon the second cock-crowing. A moment earlier had been too soon, when Peter, stubborn and impenitent, could not have understood it. A moment later had, doubtless, been too late, when Peter would, perhaps, have been out of sight, hurrying down the path of despair either to still more desperate sin or to self-inflicted death.

Note, further, that it followed almost immediately upon the sin. Scarcely a minute before he had stood there at the fire, anathematising (as the Greek has it), i.e., invoking the dire wrath of God, if he spoke falsely when he denied his Lord. Suddenly his foul speech is stopped short by the voice of the cock. He comes to himself and his sin, and then, just when the horror of a great darkness had begun to settle down upon him, came that gleam of tender reproof and compassion. The sin was hardly ended when "the Lord turned and looked upon Peter." "Thou, Lord, art good, and ready to forgive."

Again that look came from the suffering One. Out of the awful depths of his own indignities and sorrows his heart went forth to erring Peter.

Behold, here, a love that many waters cannot quench: shame and sorrow cannot; even the black, overwhelming flood of his disciple's shameful sin cannot. It is a love stronger than death—stronger, even, than sin.

4th Step.—"Go your way, tell his disciples and Peter" (Mark xvi. 7).

We have seen how, at the Last Supper, when the shadow of death rested heavily upon Him, his heart was at leisure to care for Peter, forewarning and laying up help for him; and how, in the midst of his trial, there were thought, and pity, and timely grace for Peter, snatching him from the very brink of despair. We now come to a new and, in some respects, greater wonder of friendship. The resurrection hour has come, the moment of the holiest and most splendid triumph ever won on earth's lowly stage, when He, the glorious Conqueror of Death and Hell, steps forth from the tomb, having burst its adamantine bars. But, as it was not in pain and shame, no, nor even in sin, to stay his love, so now it is not in victory's power to make Him forget his lowly, erring friend. Amid it all He remembers Peter. He knows him to be safe in his penitence; but He knows also that he grieves, being ready to say that he has sinned away his privilege as a disciple. His compassion makes Him in haste to comfort Peter, so he leaves behind Him with the radiant guardian of the empty tomb a message containing a special reference to Peter, that Peter may know his Lord still remembers him, and counts him among his disciples: "Go your way, tell his disciples, and Peter." It is not enough to save; He must also make haste to comfort. Who is a friend like our Friend?

5th Step.—"The Lord is risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon" (Luke xxiv. 34: See also 1 Cor. xv. 5).

Of this interview between Jesus and Peter, we know only that it occurred, and that it was the Lord's second appearance after resurrection. The first was granted to those holy women who "were last at the Cross, and first at the sepulchre." Little wonder! The second interview was not with John the beloved, but with Peter the penitent. Let those who mourn for sin take heed to this. Let them learn Christ's eagerness to heal the broken in heart, till they take courage to press closer, more lovingly and confidingly, to their compassionate Friend and Lord.

Though nothing is told us about that interview, one's imagination loves to dwell upon it. How did they meet? How did Christ look? What did He say? What did Peter feel, and say, and do? We know not. Only of this we are pretty sure, that Peter then entered into the perfect peace of pardon; that, bowing low at those pierced feet, he poured out all his heart in broken confession of sin; and that, in reply, the Lord made him understand the reality and tender glory of his forgiving love. Henceforth the hallowed gladness of pardon is his. Doubt is gone for ever. He will now be as conscious of the pardon as he is of the sin, and love to Christ, true, lowly, and tender, will dominate his life.

Is there not for every penitent who will seek it, an interview with Christ as personal, as healing, as satisfying, and gracious as this one was? Let all such seek Him, diligently and expectant, until He personally speaks peace to the soul, and the blissful reality of pardon becomes as vivid and deep as this sense of sin.

6th Step.—"Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou Me? . . . . Feed my lambs . . . . Feed my sheep" (John xxi. 15—17).

Answering to the threefold denial of Christ came the question, three times repeated, "Lovest thou Me?" This induced the threefold confession of love, which was followed by the thrice-given commission to tend the Saviour's flock. All this, observe, in the presence of the other disciples.

In effect, this was the public re-establishment of Peter in his place and authority as an apostle. His sin had lowered him in the opinion of his fellows, and they, in after years, might come to question his authority. The Lord takes care that this shall not be. It is not enough that Peter has repented, nor that Christ has comforted him. It is not even enough to satisfy his heart with the deep blessedness of assured pardon. He is jealous for his restored servant's damaged reputation, and so takes measures to establish him for all time in the esteem and honour of his Church.

Who is a friend like our Friend? "Let the children of Zion be joyful in their King." "Praise Him according to his excellent greatness."

THE REVISED BIBLE.—2.

IN completing the paper, commenced last week, on the approaching publication of the Revised Old Testament Scriptures, we may be met by the fact that the New Testament Revision, which was issued nearly four years ago, has not met the expectations raised respecting it. It must be acknowledged that the Revised Version has received scant praise. Weighty reasons have been given for this, which need not be repeated here. One, however, is obvious. The excellent principle of the New Testament Company of rendering, as far as possible, literally, has been carried to excess. The English of the translation has justified objections. Nevertheless, if the New Version is not used in public, as might have been anticipated, it is used by Bible students in private far more than is imagined. It has removed the old apprehension that the New Testament could be understood by those only who could read Greek. Confidence is felt that if the original text has not been rendered felicitously or forcefully, it has, on the whole, been most scrupulously reproduced. If elegance, pleasant punctuation, and idiomatic English have been too much sacrificed, it has been that the exact sense of Greek words, and the exact force of Greek particles and tenses, might be perfectly given. Of course there must be prejudices. This generation has drunk in, as their mother's milk, the beautiful phrases of the Authorised Version; but let a thoughtful and devout reader study the Revised rendering, and while less arrested, it may be, by single verses, the general course of argument in the Lord's discourses, and in the Apostolic Epistles, will, in wondrous and glorious meaning, be revealed to him. There will be untold advantage if the consecutive study of the New Testament is thus promoted.

While, however, we do not look for perfection in any work of man, we may anticipate that the revision of the Old Testament will create a greater sensation than marked the appearance of that of the New Testament. As was indicated in our first paper, no branch of investigation has yielded richer or larger results than the knowledge acquired of oriental languages since 1611. Especially has this been the case in the present century. In addition, the literature on the Old Testament has been of late years inestimable in value. Single Scriptural books have been subject to careful exposition; and light, beyond all conception, has been thrown on the inspired records. Biblical Archæology, in its bearing upon Babylonia, Assyria, and Egypt; Jewish antiquities and authorities; geographical and topographical explorations; ripe scholarship and Eastern learning, must have vastly aided the Old Testament Company, and it may be hoped the rich results will appear in their Revised Version.

Let us pause for a moment. We saw in the first of these papers that in relation to the supreme and vital articles of the Christian faith, there was among the MS. copies of the New Testament—copies from Greece, Rome, Carthage, the Persian frontier, slopes of Lebanon, the coasts of Malabar, the Egyptian deserts, monasteries of Gaul, and from the heights of Sinai—a marvellously substantial unanimity. Forgery in the light of such a fact must be held to have been absolutely impossible. So in relation to the Old Testament; modern investigations in matters of ancient languages, places, buildings, and events, all go to confirm the truthfulness of the books of the Bible. Surely we may conclude that another momentous page of the world's history is about to be opened: and before its disclosures dawn, the assurance is to be confirmed and strengthened that in the Scriptures of both Testaments is the voice to men of the living God.

To return to the subject of Old Testament translation. A collateral advantage will be secured in reference to English words. Changes in our mother tongue have been such that we have marked about a hundred places where words, which were common in 1611, are no longer in general use. Almost all these are in the Old Testament. There are, moreover, in the Authorised Version, about one hundred and seventy places where there are words which have changed their meaning. Three-fourths of these are also in the Old Testament (see Professor Newth on Bible Revision: Hodder & Stoughton). Certainly a Book that has to be circulated among the hundreds of millions who speak English should not contain archaic words, or those of doubtful meaning.

And now, in closing these papers, may we not fittingly ask what is that great spiritual principle which we hope will be shown to be even more plainly enforced and illustrated in the expected version? In making this inquiry there is no intention to suggest that the Old Testament teaches but one pervasive lesson. Such a method is facile and captivating, but is superficial. Nevertheless there is one dominating truth which is the very essence of the Old Testament. God's chosen people were witnesses on behalf of faith; their warfare was the warfare of faith; their whole history was an emphatic and everlasting record of the disasters or triumphs which followed the failure or the maintenance of faith. Against the materialism which attributed occult influences to nature, was set God; against the sham divinities which malign world-powers framed, was set the one Living God; against the corrupt demands of Polytheism was set the holy will of God; against the might of earthly kingdoms was set the dominion and almightiness of God. Yes, the Bible claims that ascendency for God to which the noblest men of all times have aspired. Abraham is called to be the father of a theocratic nation. Moses confronts the pride of Egypt by proofs of the reign of Jehovah. Samuel forms schools of prophets, who should bear messages of encouragement or monition from the Lord of Hosts. Israel goes into exile as apostate to the power of faith, and returns as a race of Puritans when faith has resumed its ministry. It is true that all is moving towards a Messianic destination, but that is to give a grander unveiling of the potency, safety, and blessedness of faith.

Most opportunely will the Revised Bible draw interest around it. Its testimony of faith will be more needed as the new future opens. About miracles men will come to ask, as has been well said, not how they were worked, but when, and why they were at special periods, a necessity. About "laws" of nature, they will learn from the Old Testament, as Bishop Butler has said, "That that which is natural as much requires an Intelligent Agent as that which is miraculous." All life will be shown to have its meaning, its best motives, its firmest supports, in that habitual recollection of God which the historians and prophets of Israel taught. The doctine of faith furnishes the key to the Old Testament, and gives grandeur and meaning to life. The present denial of God, either in the form of Atheism, or Agnosticism, cannot last. Man, ere long, will say, in the words of a modern poet, "I am all alone, I must have Thee." Yea, the race will learn that the final consummation and triumph of good over evil can come only when the goal, towards which all Revelation works, is realised, and GOD SHALL BE ALL IN ALL.

PRAYING FOR FISH.

DEAR SIR,—In the recent mission at St. Ives, conducted by Mr. Edward Hurditch and myself, we held a special meeting for sailors and fishermen and their wives,—in fact, all connected in any way with the sea. The large Primitive Chapel was filled, mostly with men, and the whole meeting was a first-rate affair. Only those who have witnessed a Cornish revival meeting can appreciate what that meeting was.

On the platform were four of the town ministers, and one of them related the following remarkable story.

About eighteen months ago the fishing season in St. Ives was very bad; for weeks scarcely anything had been caught. The depression in the town was very great, money was scarce, and many were wanting bread. It was a time of great trial, for starvation stared many in the face. Going on his rounds of visiting, the pastor called upon one of the officers of his church, a worthy old fisherman after the type of Billy Bray.

"You cannot see him, sir," said the daughter.

"Is he out?"

"No, sir; but he is in his chamber praying for fish, and he will not be disturbed."

"Does he often go to pray?" was the pastor's query.

"Yes, sir; three times every day."

This was on Wednesday, and that evening the week-night service was held.

As the pastor passed up the aisle, this worthy fisherman said, "Pastor, you must pray for fish." The pastor felt he must, and so he did. "Amen!" responded the congregation.

That evening, when the minister arrived home, he said to his little girl of six and a half years, "We have been praying for fish, dear, in chapel to-night."

"And you will get it, papa," said the little thing, "for I have been praying for fish too."

There were only few who had faith in God to answer that prayer, but the answer came, and that speedily. The nets were cast that night in faith upon God.

Next morning the work of drawing them to land commenced, and—will it be believed?—fish were caught that sold at market value for ten thousand pounds sterling. Here was the answer to the prayer.

If I had read this anywhere, I should have been disposed to discount it very liberally; but the reader must remember that this incident was related within two hundred yards of the place where the nets were drawn in, and in the presence of the very men who cast and drew in the nets. There was no possibility of fraud or exaggeration in the recital of it, for the living witnesses to this proof that God answers prayer were present, and heartily responded, "That's all true," as the speaker sat down.

Let this cheer the doubting ones, and bid them remember the promise, "My God shall supply all your need." Yours faithfully,

F. C. Spurr.

AUCKLAND, NEW ZEALAND.—In a Blue Ribbon Mission lately held by Mr. R. T. Booth in the above city, 200 signed the pledge each night, and in eight days 1787 have donned the blue. The largest theatre was packed every night.

FLORIDA, U.S.A.—I received so many applications in response to my note in The Christian that I could scarcely undertake to answer them all. Now I have fuller details drawn up in a concise form, which will enable me to do so more satisfactorily. It certainly is a very promising field for emigration to those possessed of a little capital, and Christians wishing to combine the Lord's work with agricultural pursuits, with care and perseverance are likely to do well. It will give me pleasure, therefore, to answer further inquiries.

TREASURE IN HEAVEN.

THERE are few ideas more serious in their results than the widely received one that only charity is needed in order to bridge over the widening gulf between the well-to-do and the poor, and that by gifts of money, perhaps easily spared, without the exercise of self-denial, men may satisfactorily fulfil their duty to their neighbour. The two pence are given willingly enough, but oftentimes only because it is felt that something must be done, and the giver is not ready to undertake the more practical and more precious service of binding up the wayfarer's wounds, and of pouring in oil and wine.

And it is due to the common acceptance of this mistaken view of Christian responsibility that so many charitable schemes for the amelioration of the evils around us fail to reach the goal of a noble success. The immediate duty of personal labour is deputed, and in lack of that consideration for the poor upon which the Bible places so much importance, there is that charity which, when it merely represents the fine paid by indolence in order to escape the performance of troublesome duties, is only a tinkling cymbal; and in consequence, from our slums and alleys there comes the reproachful cry that the harvest is indeed great but the labourers are few.

That much of our charity is as noble in its motive as in its manner, we are satisfied; but, on the other hand, there is a by no means small portion of it which represents the abundance estimated by the Master as of less value than the widow's mite, simply because it is cast into the treasury by those who might give along with it the greater gift of labour and time.

Sixteen years ago, the tender-hearted Edward Denison, living in a dreary street in the East-end of London, and giving up his life to the service of the unfortunate and miserable poor, struck at the root of this glaring misconception of duty when, in what would have been despair had he not been full of faith in God, he gazed at the labour-bent, hunger-pinched toilers about him, and cried, piteously: "It is not Christianity but Christians who are wanting;" not Christians to stand afar off, but followers of Jesus, prepared to go and deal personally with the wounded by the way; men and women not afraid to imitate the Divine Master, and touch the sin-stained and lost.

We are too ready to put aside the social questions of the day which are based upon the painful foundations of misery and degradation, quite overlooking the pathetically beautiful and tender side of Christ's life in contact with those whom society had trodden upon or cast out; but the touching facts that Jesus was known to his disciples in the breaking of bread, that with infinite pity He questioned them, "Children, have ye any meat?" and that after evidencing his power in the mighty miracle of bringing back the throbbing life into the hushed heart of the dead daughter of Jairus, He showed his heavenly thoughtfulness by commanding that they should give her to eat, ought to be sufficient warrant for benevolence of a keenly practical kind, concerned as well about the bodies as the souls of men.

It is not unlikely that there are many readers of THE CHRISTIAN who, carefully abstaining from the purchase of sweaters' goods and acting justly towards all whom they employ, yet, in face of the questions which of late have so deeply touched the hearts of Christian men and women, are asking if they cannot do more. Perhaps simply as purchasers it may not be easy, or even possible, for them to do so, but it is only a step from the passive into the active, and the line dividing charity and consideration can be easily stepped over.

"Go thou and do likewise," is the Master's command; and there are on every hand so many ways in which that Scriptural consideration may be exercised that it is not necessary to specify them. A recent experiment at 8, High-street, Shadwell, London, E., described in the following simple words, points, however, so unmistakably to two or three opportunities and possibilities within the reach of many of our readers to whom God has entrusted wealth and spare time, that we are certain they will be grateful to us for bringing the work and its need under their notice, and perhaps thereby relieving them from that anxiety which invariably accompanies a condition of doubt:—

"Six months ago, by the kindness of the public, I was enabled to open a workshop at 8, High-street, Shadwell, which I purposed to work on the principle of each worker being paid a salary fixed by the market value of her skill, but of each worker receiving an equal share of the profits, whatever they might be. The money entrusted to me was principally lent free of interest, but it is part of my plan to aim at repaying that even which was bestowed as a gift.

"I began with three machines and three workers; I have now ten machines and from 13 to 14 workers, who work only 48 hours in the week. In the six months we have executed 260 private orders for shirts, ladies' and children's underclothing, gentlemen's boating suits, and other garments both for rich and poor. I have found that in most cases the work has given satisfaction. I have been enabled to very materially increase the well-being of my workwomen, even at a time of great depression of trade; and instead of paying off hands at Christmas time, as is the ordinary case with factories, I have been able to take on hands. We have been paying our expenses for the last three months, and a large amount of the original capital is still in hand, besides the machines, furniture, and stock.

"What we want is an increase of orders, and I earnestly hope that your readers will help us to get these. I am very anxious for orders for ladies' mantles, ulsters, and articles of that description, which I am confident we should give satisfaction in. If anyone interested in this scheme would give us the opportunity of showing the work done at the association at a drawing-room meeting, it would aid us greatly. A great difficulty in our way is that, owing to the locality we are in, many persons who would like personally to inspect the work before giving an order refrain from visiting us. Any plan that would assist us in meeting this difficulty would be of great benefit to us. I think that I may truthfully say that the clothing we make for working people and their children is of very superior quality to what is generally bought for the same price."

The secret of the success of this noble endeavour to ameliorate the condition of needlewomen may be found in the unusual circumstance that there are no sweaters and middlemen to come between the purchaser or employer and the workwomen, and that therefore the worker is fairly paid and produces good work, and also in the gratifying fact that SARAH HECKFORD has been willing to organise an association the principle of which is based upon the simple teachings of Jesus.

To the modern political economist this Shadwell success may seem a failure, because its promoters are not heaping up capital at the cost of the bodies and souls of women; but to those who have learned somewhat of the Spirit of Christ the appeal will not be made in vain, and to them the undertaking will not be less noble because those who have originated, and who are guiding it, are laying up their treasure in heaven.

THE GORDON READERS.

Charles Gordon was essentially a reader of the Word, and his desire ever was to convey the guide to eternal life, through the Holy Spirit's teaching, to all his comrades. Three thousand pounds raised will enable the Army Scripture Readers Society to place at least two more readers permanently amongst the British forces. Sums have already been received for the "Gordon Readers," others are invited, and in due time a list shall be furnished. Receipts and information will be gladly given by the Secretary, Mr. Blake, at the office, as well as by yours truly, J. W. F. SANDWITH, Colonel and Hon. Sec., 4, Trafalgar-square, Charing-cross, W.—The Christian, March 19.

WHAT cared he for our medals,
  Or monuments vast and high?
Silver and gold, and the praise of men,
  Are things that his soul passed by.

But the word of God endureth,
  And a voice that word to speak,
A walking monument God has raised,
  Is a monument all might seek.

In Memoriam: Readers,
  Who carry the Spirit's sword;
Who seek to burnish the shields of faith,
  And fight for the world's true Lord.

In Memoriam: comrades,
  To suffer, and help, and bear,
To visit the wounded, the sick, the sad,
  With their captain's loving care.

In Memoriam: brothers,
  Showing the dying life;
Giving the thirsty the stream of God,
  Heaven's peace midst earth's wild strife.

God-speed to the "Gordon Readers,"
  God-speed to the true and brave;
Let us pray and give, let us give and pray,
  And our God will bless and save.

THIS cannot be called a first-class biography, but it is one we commend heartily, especially to those who are in any way acquainted with Scottish Church movements during the present century. The first 113 pages of this first volume were written by Dr. Begg himself, and are by far the most interesting part of the book. They are full of old-world Scottish life and thought, with quaint sketches of the ministerial giants of those days, and studded thickly with characteristic stories. Take the following as samples. An extreme Moderate, preaching for one Dr. Clason, had, after the manner of his sort, spoken much of the greatness of man's moral nature, and said nothing whatever about his natural depravity. After the sermon one of the hearers said to Dr. Clason: "Ye manna get yon man to preach ony mair." "Why?" said the doctor. "He's far back, verra far back in his information, yon man; he disna' ken that Adam's fallen yet." In the General Assembly a very young elder, an advocate, had made a speech breathing anything but an evangelical flavour. Mr. Campbell rose and said tersely: "In the speech, Moderator, to which we have just listened, there was a good deal of the young man, not a little of the old man, very little of the new man."

The principal faults of the biography are its diffuseness, and its failure in not showing us more of Dr. Begg himself. For the latter, however, Dr. Smith is not to blame. His materials were very scanty. Moreover, he has done much to atone for this, in the side lights thrown upon some of the great Church movements of these stirring times, as well as upon the characters of some of the great leaders. Foremost among the latter is Dr. Chalmers, the grandest figure perhaps in modern Church history, and, as many think, the greatest Scotchman that has appeared since the days of Knox.

In later years Dr. Begg greatly distinguished himself as a militant ecclesiastic. It is refreshing to the charity of any of us who thought of him only in this character, to read here the evidence of his solid work, his stern adherence to principle, his magnificent boldness in attacking what he believed to be error and defending truth. Better still is it to see the strong and resolute man as a pastor using all his power to win and elevate his people, preaching the Gospel with intense fervour and wonderful scripturalness of expression. Our opinions on very many questions differ not a little from those so tenaciously held by Dr. Begg; yet, for that very reason, we have found this biography exceedingly interesting and helpful, and we look with much interest for the second volume, promised at no distant date.

"The Christian" Pulpit.

CHRIST'S IDEAL MISSIONARY.*

By EDWARD IRVING.

THE missionary ordinance can never change, for the missionary work doth never change. His work is still to overthrow the prince of this world, seated upon the beauty and pleasantness, upon the magnificence and glory of the visible creation, and to deliver the souls of men into the worship of the invisible God. Kingdoms may undergo every vicissitude, and be found under every form of civil polity; nations may exist in every degree of culture or barbarism; they may be noble, high-minded, and proud; sordid, base, and given over to gain and sensual indulgence; vain-glorious, pompous, and fond of a thousand spectacles; they may be grovelling in superstition, sunk in ignorance, abandoned to sloth and effeminacy, or fierce, fiery, and uncontrollable; but never has a kingdom or nation been found possessed of the knowledge of the true God, devoted to the faith and pursuit of spiritual objects, or living in the practice of Christian precepts.

The maxims, the spirit of the laws and policy, the motives and principles of private conduct, the whole tenor of their society, and influence of their religion, have to be counteracted and overthrown in these times, as entirely as in the days of the Apostles. There is no relaxation of opposition, there is no mitigation of the difficulties of the work, which never changeth. And the Gospel which the missionary hath to preach, the Kingdom which he hath to propagate, is still the same spiritual Kingdom which flesh and blood cannot inherit, whose King hath no communion with Belial nor with Mammon, in whose sight iniquity cannot stand, and to whom the proud heart and the high look are an abomination. This Gospel, which hath toleration for no natural form of humanity however excellent, and condemneth every living man, which beginneth in sorrow and repentance for the past, proceedeth by the faith and preference of things unseen, and is perfected in a thousand acts of self-denial and self-discipline, is not now more agreeable to the nations than it was when first revealed by our Lord and Saviour.

And if the Gospel, after two thousand years, is still as unaccommodating to the world, and the world is still by nature as averse from its faith and discipline, how should the manner of its propagation be altered in any respect from what was laid down and followed at the first? If the first missionaries were made spiritual personages, in order to exhibit practically to the people that preference and all-sufficiency of spiritual things which they preached; if they were men of faith alone, in order to exhibit that principle which they sought to magnify over sight and sense, why should they not be so likewise in these times, in which the heathen are still as devoted to things seen and temporal, as they were in the days of Paul?

Even supposing the present missionaries had more divinity of nature than the Apostles, and that they could possess purse, scrip, and all other accommodations without being thereby unspiritualised, how shall they hinder the evil interpretation of the heathen, who see them hired, paid, accommodated, befriended, and, in all outward things, better conditioned than themselves? "They speak to us of faith; let them show us their own. They speak to us of the providence of God, but they ventured not hither without every security. They tell us of Christ's disinterestedness to us; but what lessons give they us of the same?" And so forth through every particular of their condition, by which Christ intended that they should evidence the doctrine which they taught.

I cannot understand, therefore, in any way, how the condition of the missionary work should be changed, when the work itself remaineth the same; or how the instruction which Christ gave for the propagation of his Kingdom should now be null and void, when it is the same Kingdom that is to be propagated, and the difficulties and impediments are still the same, over the head of which its propagation is to be effected.

I admire the steadiness with which the spiritual people of this day have stood out against the ignorant clamour, that the heathen must be civilised before they can be Christianised; I admire, also, the faith which they have shown in the power of God, to save men by the preaching of the Word, without any help of the arts of government or of civil life, and the simplicity with which they devote themselves to the circulation of the Scriptures, and the sending out of teachers and preachers; and they are never enough to be commended for standing aloof from the employment of force and power, and civil policy, in all these respects fulfilling the maxim of Christ, "My Kingdom is not of this world." But there are a few things which still savour of the spirit of the world, and which must be put away by the diligent perusal and faithful execution of this the missionary charter, which, instead of arguing against or pulling down, they should regard as the everlasting conditions of the missionary work, within which men have only to come in order to be ready for the high office, and ripe for scattering the everlasting seed amongst the nations.

There hath been much searching of the Scriptures for a platform of Church government, and every passage which can be forced into that application has been strained to the utmost, in order that a jus divinum might be made out for Episcopacy, Presbytery, and Independency in their turns. Sure I am that none, nor all of these put together, can make out such a divine right as the missionary work hath, in these instructions of our Lord; and had there been human interests concerned in the establishment of it,—as human interests there are none,—unspiritual men would long ere this have used it for securing them; but being the death of secularity, the essence of spiritual-mindedness, and the quintessence of self-denial, I perceive that it hath everything to contend with, scoffs, ridicule, and worldly wisdom, and cannot be generally acceptable in times when the secular and the spiritual have become strangely intermingled, when maxims current on the Exchange have become current in holy places, when the offices of the Church have come to be valued by their emoluments, and for their emoluments sought out, and as an emolument discoursed of amongst the people.

It is not now the time to discourse of the pastoral office, but it were easy to show from the epistles of the great Shepherd to the angels of the seven churches of Asia, that it is an office in its spirit consenting with that view of the missionary office which we labour to establish, and widely dissenting from those views of it which are now current amongst both priests and people. But while those erroneous views prevail of the pastoral office, which is under our eye at home, and from which we derive our notion of the missionary, it will be in vain to think that the latter notion can be a correct one. Therefore it is the more necessary among the many sources of error to which we are exposed in making up our idea of the missionary, to adhere to the divine platform contained in these verses (Matt. x. 5-42), and be governed by the jus divinum, the divine authority of that unrepealed constitution. Therefore, I say, let this type of the missionary stand, that he is a man without a purse, without a scrip, without a change of raiment, without a staff, without the care of making friends or keeping friends, without the hope or desire of worldly good, without the apprehension of worldly loss, without the care of life, without the fear of death; of no rank, of no country, of no condition; a man of one thought, the Gospel of Christ; a man of one purpose, the glory of God; a fool, and content to be reckoned a fool for Christ; a madman, and content to be reckoned a madman, for Christ. Let him be enthusiast, fanatic, babbler, or any other outlandish nondescript the world may choose to denominate him, but still let him be a nondescript, a man that cannot be classed under any of their catagories, or defined by any of their convenient and conventional names. When they can call him pensioner, trader, householder, citizen; man of substance, man of the world, man of science, man of learning, or even man of common sense: it is all over with his missionary character.

He may innocently have some of these forms of character, some of them he cannot innocently have; but they will be far subordinate, deep in the shade, covered and extinguished to the world's incurious gaze, by the strange, incoherent, and unaccountable character to which he surrendereth himself mainly. The world knoweth the missionary not, because it knew the Messiah not. The nature of his life is hid with Christ in God; he is not a man, but the spirit of a man; he is a spirit that hath divested itself of all earthiness, save the continent body, which it keepeth down and useth as its tabernacle, and its vehicle, and its mechanical tool for speech and for action. The standard is a high one, and suiteth not an easy and prudential age, and we that are bred in peaceful places may stumble at it, and some of our self-sufficient spirits may scoff at it. But our fathers held it in reputation when they suffered the loss of all things, and counted them dung, that they might win Christ; and the missionaries who came to our fathers were accustomed to it. And what is a missionary who shrinketh at it? Can he stand the stake or the cross, who cannot bear hunger, thirst, and nakedness? Was any man a martyr who could not be a hungered for Christ? What are purse, staff, scrip, raiment, and friendship, but the help and sustenance of life, taking their value from the love we have of life? And if we are prepared to scuttle the ship, are we not prepared to sink the timbers and cordage and tackle of the ship?

This unearthly dimension of the missionary character is in such keeping with the rest of the Christian dispensation as to commend itself to our mind on that very account. Had it not been perfect in this, its beau ideal; had it been accommodated to prudence and practice, a plausible, reasonable, fair-looking speculation like that which it seems hasting to become, I for one would have said: This is not like a character of Christ's delineation; it wanteth the touch of the Divine hand; it hath not the supernatural air. It is of the earth, earthy; it is not of the heavens, heavenly; it is born of flesh, it consorteth with Mammon, and hath fellowship with Belial. I doubt whether it be an original or not; for here, in Christ's style, is a description of faith as a substance of things hoped for, and here is a cloud of witnesses, who by faith substantiated invisible things; and here is a description of the Christian life, as a walk by faith, and not by sight; and here is a description of charity so perfect as to make the holiest man abhor himself; and here is a law which condemneth the justest men; and here is a rule of chastity, and a rule for behaving to enemies, and a rule for almsgiving, and a thousand other schemes and rules of Christ; not one of which is calculated in accommodation to man's imperfections, but in accommodation to God's perfections; not in measure with man's weakness, but in measure with the Spirit's power; not for the strength of fallen nature, but for the sufficiency of the grace of God. And shall the individual traits of the Christian character be superhuman, and the whole Christian not be superhuman? shall the Christian be superhuman, and the missionary not be three times superhuman? Stumble, therefore, who pleaseth at the severity of these institutions of the missionary; I glory in them. Tame them down who pleaseth; I, while I live, will uphold their sublimity. Temporise with them who please, they do it at their proper risk; let it be mine to love and reverence my Saviour's words. Nay, moreover, let them who please cool down the temper of the missionary, and lower the mark of his high calling; be it mine to rouse his spirit, and if duty hindered not, to rouse my own spirit to the height of the undertaking.

When the missionaries, the forlorn hope of our warfare, issue from the gate of our camp, let us cheer them with songs of ancient chivalry, with examples of ancient victory; let the daughter of Zion brace the heart of her warlike sons with her heaven-derived minstrelsy, that they may go forth in the spirit of the mighty men of old, and scale the steep which frowneth upon flesh and blood, and plant the good standard of the faith upon the loftiest battlement of the enemy's strongest hold—which, strong and lofty though it be, is not more strong than the strength of our God, nor more lofty than the flights of our faith—which, strong and lofty though it be, is permitted thus high to rise and thus sternly to frown, only that it may prove the good temper of the warrior's soul, and prove before the high witnesses of the contest how humanity, in the weakest of Christ's servants, is stronger than death and the grave, than earth and hell, and can triumph over them, and lead them captives, as did the great Founder and everlasting Captain of the missionary work.

* An extract from the memorable sermon preached by Edward Irving before the London Missionary Society.

Therefore, I say, let the lineament of perfection stand flaming forth, because it is the failing of human nature to rest satisfied with its attainments, and to come to a stand in its progress, through the might and multitude of surrounding objects. Unto feeble and faithless man there needeth always a voice like to that which was given unto Moses, when the people, pressed between the angry sword of Pharaoh and the raging sea, stood still in sore dismay: "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward." And of all men the missionary needeth this voice the most, because his course is the roughest, and his enemies the most inveterate. As the Baptist came in the desert, so he cometh in the moral wilderness and spiritual desert of human life; and, though he be nothing but a voice, he crieth out, "Prepare the way of the Lord, make his paths straight; let every valley be filled, and every mountain and hill be brought low; let the crooked be made straight, and the rough places be made smooth." Such a one shall have in his teeth a phalanx of opposition, and he hath need of a heart like a lion's heart, and of a wing like an eagle's wing. There must be upon his banner: "Forward! Forward!". and that he may never faint or fail, his banner should be this divine portrait of a perfect missionary, this safe-conduct and assurance of ultimate success, to flame over the darkness of his path, like the pillar of fire which directed Israel in the watches of the night.

MR. RICHARD WEAVER AT DORKING.

A FIFTEEN days' mission by Mr. Richard Weaver was concluded here on Sunday week, when the spacious hall was crowded in every corner. A deep interest was aroused from the beginning, and gradually increased until the close of the mission. It was deeply touching to see strong men and hardened sinners melted under the power of the preached word. In the after-meetings many affecting scenes were witnessed.

A mother, who had heard Mr. Weaver twenty years ago, brought her two daughters. In the prayer-meeting before service she pleaded with God to save them. In the after-meeting they professed to find their mother's Saviour, and walked six miles home rejoicing in the Lord. Among the inquirers one night were three fine young fellows, working as gardeners on the same estate; all three found peace in believing.

At a converts' tea on Tuesday week, short addresses were given by Mr. Joseph Todman, Mr. C. J. Peirson, and Mr. A. H. Brace. Sir Arthur Cotton presented to each convert a hundred chapters from the Bible, selected by himself, neatly bound for the pocket. The testimonies given at this meeting showed the reality of the work. A pitman said, "Who would have thought three weeks ago, when I was in darkness, a drunken swearing man, that God would have revealed to me that the Light of the World is Jesus, and that I should be here to-night saved and washed in his Blood." One and another, and another, rose in quick succession telling of their conversion. At Mr. Weaver's last meeting he had an unanimous and hearty invitation from the crowded meeting to visit Dorking again.

SEEKING AND SAVING THE LOST.

DEAR FRIENDS,—I desire to thank you for your sympathy and help in our work among the poor fallen girls of London. Friendless, homeless, hopeless, diseased in body, with anguish of spirit unto despair, longing to die, and yet dreading the "death that never dies," apparently incapable of anything but to suffer, and, alas! to sin—such are many of those who come to us, and for whom our hearts are filled with love, albeit with sorrow also, for Jesus' sake.

We are daily overwhelmed and appalled by the magnitude of the evil we are combating. For every one rescued from this life of sin, probably ten are lost to virtue and chastity. Impurity is everywhere. More and more the barriers, which our forefathers had built up for the safety of the young and the poor, are broken down. Even home ceases to offer security to the weakness it ought to shield. Alike from the cottage of the working-man and from the mansions of the rich, from the dwellings of the godly, ignorant—may I not say, sinfully ignorant—of the doings of their own household, and from the hearth of the solitary widow, have come to our tiny shelter in Whitechapel these daughters of sin, perishing through the ignorance, or the negligence, or the vile wickedness of others.

But for the manifest grace of God, enabling us to behold the consequences of sin, and to hear the tales of woe, poured with mingled sobs from broken hearts into our ears, we should long since have ceased to labour. Perhaps the Master has been teaching us that in suffering with those who suffer, we more readily touch the inner places of the heart, and bring back, by the sympathy of human love, the blessed hope in love Divine.

We have been able to receive and send out in all 86 girls. Of these 66 are now doing well, 12 are unsatisfactory, while 8 have, for various reasons, been passed on to other Homes. Of the first, 56 are now in situations or with their friends, giving daily evidence of a change of heart by faith in Jesus Christ; 6 others are earning honest livelihoods in various ways, most of them lodging near to us and doing right; 3 very hopeful cases are in hospital, 2 of them at Mrs. Josephine Butler's Convalescent Home at Winchester. The 12 unsatisfactory cases are chiefly slaves to drink—of some of them we have little hope; of others we have much, and we despair about none of them. The seed has been sown in their hearts with prayers and tears, and, though they refused to obey the truth, I am sure the Spirit of God still follows them.

But what are sixty-six amongst the thousands of fallen women in London alone. We are taking a larger house in the hope of doubling our accommodation. We hope also to add to our work a systematic visitation of certain places in the hope of rescuing young girls just entering upon a life of sin.

We need Bibles and Testaments, clothes and situations for our girls. Parcels should be addressed to Mrs. Bramwell Booth, 272, Whitechapel-road, E., and should contain the name and address of the sender.

Dear friends, will you help to continue this work, and to deliver the poor that cry and the fatherless and them that have none to help? If you will, the blessing of those that were ready to perish shall come upon you, and you shall cause he widow's heart to sing for joy.

Letters may be addressed to my dear friend and colleague, Miss Sapsworth, Melford House, Clapton, E., or to yours seeking the lost, FLORENCE E. BOOTH.

THE BIBLE FLOWER MISSION.—Friends and helpers of the City depot of this Mission will find much to interest them in the report just issued. The most suitable flowers to send, as well as how and when to forward them, may here be learnt. The past year registers nearly half a million bouquets, cards, lavender bags, &c., as having gone forth from the Mission. The Hon. Secretary, 110, Cannon-street, E.C., earnestly solicits increased aid, and will gladly furnish additional information, or forward the report.

THE TRAINING OF OUR GIRLS.

DEAR SIR, — Having received many letters making inquiries about my place, I should be very glad if you will kindly insert the following short explanation. I have begun a school called "The English Girls' Garten," an outcome of three systems—the usual English education, the German "Kindergarten," and the American "Kitchen-garden." Nothing is forgotten that is necessary to the education of women, and last, but not least, that which is at the very foundation of all true womanhood—love to God and love to each other. The novel feature of the school is a system of household object lessons, a development of the Kindergarten; these lessons are the result of the fact forced upon one's notice—that many girls grow up to be women, ignorant of housework, and womanly, thrifty, nice home-ways—and of a strong desire to raise the tone of domestic work and household economy, so that it may not be thought by some "menial," by others "drudgery."

It is desired that these object-lessons may be adopted by all schools and institutions having to do with the education of our girls, and by training them in this attractive way it is hoped to impress upon them that labour of any sort, which makes home comfortable, is the true calling of every woman.

There is room for several pupils in addition to those already in the house, and as Easter is a good time for beginning, I should like to make arrangements for receiving more. Evening classes, too, are held for the poor children in the village. Are there any ladies willing to start similar classes in their own neighbourhoods? If so, will they arrange with me about coming here for a short time during the next few months, or sending some one to be rained to teach the system. M. E. HEADDON.

The Villa, Bull, Newnham-on-Severn.

YOUNG ENGLISHWOMEN IN PARIS.

BY the kind permission of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Bevan, a meeting was held at their residence on Tuesday, March 24, on behalf of Miss Leigh's Homes in Paris. Mr. Bevan said that having visited the Homes he was prepared to bear a warm testimony to the value of the work.

Miss Leigh described the different branches of the institution. A batch of English girls recently arrived in Paris under the impression that a good salary would be secured to them, but found that they had been pitiably deceived and misled by agents. Miss Leigh urged the forming of associations of ladies in England whose aim would be the protection and help of young girls, and from whom all information relative to going to Paris and elsewhere on the Continent could be obtained. The deplorable spiritual ignorance of many who go over was recently seen in the case of six English girls who could not name a single clergyman to whom reference could be made. The Governess and Artists' Association is a large branch, providing a restaurant, and having Bible readings, &c. The yearly expenses of the entire institution amount to over £3000. Last year there was a deficit of £900. Strict economy is studied, but there should be no stint, for the girls require to be well fed.

Bishop Titcomb said that a better company of Christian workers he had never met with than those under Miss Leigh; the only thing in which they erred was in doing too much work. Rev. A. J. Harrison, as chaplain of Christ Church, Neuilly, appealed for help to complete the church. The Men's Home had proved a wonderful boon, shutting the men out of temptation, and securing them at the regular Gospel service, at which two found peace only the previous Sunday. Scores must have died of starvation during the recent distress but for the Home.

Mr. Bevan's drawing-room was crowded with a deeply interested audience, who gave practical evidence of this at the close, led off by a donation of £5 from the Bishop.

THE SOCIETY FOR DISTRIBUTING SCRIPTURE TRUTH.—We have lately been sending large supplies of our Scripture Rolls and Good Words for Soldiers and Sailors, through a variety of channels, for the troops employed in Egypt and the Soudan. These publications have been specially owned and blessed by God in the past. I have also received a letter from the Rev. C. S. Harington, of Calcutta, in which he tells me that the first edition of our "Scripture Truths" is now in circulation in the native Urdu language. F. WOODHOUSE, 47, Pevensey-road, Eastbourne. Secretary.

APRIL 2.—MATTHEW XXVII. 27–38.

v. 38.—"One on the right hand, and another on the left."—Jesus crucified between two thieves! What a humiliation! (Phil. ii. 8.) What a fulfilment of prophecy! (Isa. liii. 12.) What wondrous love! (Rom. v. 6—8.) There were points of resemblance between these two thieves; they were both great sinners, both were within a few hours of death, both were near Jesus, and both at first railed at Him (v. 44). There were also points of difference. One repented of his sin; confessed it; sought mercy of Jesus, believing in Him, and saying, "Lord remember me when Thou comest in thy kingdom." This one received forgiveness, was assured of eternal life, and in dying went with Jesus to paradise. The other remained hard-hearted, and died in unbelief. What a difference between trusting Jesus and rejecting Him.

APRIL 3.—MATTHEW XXVII. 39–54.

v. 54.—"Truly this was the Son of God."—This confession of faith was made by a Roman soldier, one of those for whom, just before, Jesus had prayed, saying, "Father forgive them, they know not what they do." See how soon the prayer of Jesus began to be answered, and how ready God is for Jesus' sake to save sinners, and lead them into the ways of truth. What a glorious testimony the centurion bore to Christ; though He was thus humbled unto death He was really the Son of God, that "Only Begotten Son," whom the Father gave "that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Truly He is "a Saviour, and a great one."

APRIL 4.—MATTHEW XXVII. 55–66.

v. 63.—"After three days I will rise again."

Sing aloud, children! sing, to the glorious King
Of Redemption, who sits on the throne;
For the seraphim high veil their faces, and cry,
And the angels are praising the Son.

With his raiment blood-dyed, and with wounds in
He returns like a chief from the war, [his side,
Where his champion blow hath laid death and hell
And hath driven destruction afar. [low,

Not a helper stood by, when the foemen drew nigh,
And arrayed their leagued hosts for the fight;
But He met them alone, and the victory won
By his own irresistible might.

Yes! the triumph He won! Give the crucified Son Hallelujahs of praise ever new;
Hail Him, children, and say, Hallelujah! to-day;
For the Saviour is risen for you.

APRIL 5.—MATTHEW XXVIII. 1–20.

v. 18.—"All power is given unto Me in heaven and on earth."—Jesus is a mighty Saviour. Try to think of his mighty power. What must it be? "All things were made by Him." And now He is "upholding all things by the word of his power." Hence He is called "The mighty God." But do you know the meaning of that word God? It means good. And because Jesus is so good, is so pure, and has such great love, He is "mighty to save." A good man can pity you, pray for you, teach you, give you books, and a great many other things; but he cannot make you good; he cannot save your soul. But Jesus can, He is so mighty in goodness that He can destroy sin, and save the sinner. He can save every body that trusts in Him, whether they be men, women, or children. "He is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him." Don't forget that.—James Dunckley.

APRIL 6.—JOB I. 1–12.

v. 8.—"Hast thou considered my servant Job?"—Few Bible characters are better worth considering than Job. Satan looked upon him, as he does upon all God's people, with malice, and desired to do him harm, but we may consider Job as an example for ourselves. He is said to have been "perfect," that is, sincere and thorough, whole-hearted in his desire to please God. He "feared God," not with terror, as though he was afraid of Him, but with reverence and godly fear, such as made him careful to shun whatever displeased the Lord. Hence it is said he "eschewed evil;" that is, he departed from it, hated it, and constantly resisted it in every form. See, too, in ver. 5, how anxious he was that his children should also hate evil, and be accepted of God. Then he was a servant of the Lord, delighting to do his will, so God delighted in him, and said, "There was none like him in all the earth." (See Ezek. xiv. 14; also Jas. v. 11.) Let us pray for grace to follow in his steps.

APRIL 7.—JOB I. 13–22.

v. 21.—"The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."—Though Job was a good man, yet he was sorely tried; all the children of God pass through tribulation on their way to the kingdom. But Job's trials were specially severe, yet "he sinned not, nor charged God foolishly." How beautiful is the resignation he showed in the words above; he learned to praise God even in the midst of sorrow. Let us learn not to be fretful, self-willed, and discontented when things are not as we would like to have them. God's mercy and wisdom has to do with our sorrows as well as our joys. All our times are in his hand.

APRIL 8.—JOB II. 1–13.

v. 10.—"Shall we receive good at the hand of God . . . ?"—Evil here is not to be understood as referring to sin, but, as in many other places in God's Word, to affliction and temporal trouble. Satan said that all Job's piety would go if trouble visited him, that he was only righteous because things went well with him. So God allowed heavy sorrows to befall his servant, to show that he was really in heart what he professed to be. His submission to the will of God proved the reality of his faith. We must learn to say, with Dr. Bonar:—

"Thy way, not mine, O Lord,
However dark it be!
Lead me by thine own hand,
Choose out the path for me.
Smooth let it be or rough,
It will be still the best;
Winding or straight, it matters not,
It leads me to thy rest."

BOBBY'S FIVE SHILLINGS.

A TRUE STORY.

Of all the little boys who attend the grand new board-school in our village, Tom and Bobby B— appear to me among the brightest and merriest. Owing to their good mother's care of them they leave home in the morning with clean, shining faces, well brushed hair, their clothing in good order, finished off by the whitest of collars, and the corner of a handkerchief sticking out of the little breast-pockets. We sometimes think their mother (who is a coachman's wife) must be quite extravagant in the matter of soap. The boys enjoy themselves on the road to school in running races and many a bit of fun.

But Tom, as the eldest of four little sons, has been taught to set a good example to the younger ones, so he takes care to be at the school punctually by nine o'clock. At the door he parts from Bobby, who takes his place in a lower class-room, with directions to him to be sure not to get into mischief. The boys are helped every night by their father in preparing their lessons for the next day, so they are among the scholars who by their diligence give real pleasure to the teachers. On returning to school after the Christmas holidays, Tom became ambitious to learn Latin, but was told by his father he could not afford to buy him a new lesson-book at that time, having a doctor's bill to pay, and other extra expenses. So on this occasion Tom received a little lesson in patience.

Very earnestly do the parents of these dear boys train them from God's own Word to love and trust Him, to give them all that is good for them, and they are taught also from the same holy book to love one another. I think you will say they have learned this lesson very well, when I tell you the voice of quarrelling is never heard in their little cottage, and every night and morning the voice of prayer is heard, going up to the Father in heaven, who gives his blessing.

Tom and Bobby were returning from school one day lately, when a very ill-behaved, cross little dog ran barking towards them, and tried to bite a piece out of Bobby's leg. The lady who owned the dog was much distressed, for though Bobby was not much hurt, he was terribly frightened, and began to scream loudly. The lady followed the boys home, saw there was not much injury done to the leg, and on going away presented Bobby with five shillings. The gift caused great excitement and pleasure, making the little wounded man quite forget his pain. All the little brothers handled the money in turn, but to Bobby was given the honour of deciding how it should be spent. On this point he had made up his mind before bed-time. "Father," he said, "please buy Tom his Latin grammar, and a pair of shoes for Jimmy, you know his are quite done; and if there's any money left, I should like a new slate." These three purchases have been made, and dear, unselfish little Bobby seems to have forgotten the fright and the pain caused by the dog, and only to remember the pleasure he had in receiving that wonderful present of five shillings. UNION HALL MISSION.

THE annual gatherings of this Mission were held last Thursday at the hall in Carlisle-street, Edgware-road. In the afternoon, many friends and helpers were present to join in praise and prayer. Mr. J. Churchill, Mr. Frank White, Mr. W. R. Lane, and Mr. Wilbraham Taylor gave appropriate words of counsel to those assembled.

The large hall was none too large for the evening meeting. An account of the work was given by Mr. Robert Bilke. The various departments of the Mission are evidently prospering, and many souls are being saved. At Kensal-green a good field is opening up. The mothers' meeting and men's meeting have had special blessing during the year; also, the services for children. The Bible carriages and tents for Gospel preaching have been greatly owned of God. The work could be much extended were more funds provided.

Mr. Frank Bevan, who presided, gave an excellent address, pointing out the importance and blessedness of having an assuredness of our salvation in these days of Agnosticism, when men are almost boasting of being sure of nothing. Very forcibly did Mr. Bevan urge consistency of character on all professing to be followers of Christ, as nothing serves so much to help on the work we do as a Christlike life and demeanour. We have not space for the addresses that followed from Colonel Puget, Major Michael, Mr. Berry, and Mr. J. E. Hawkins. The last-named gentleman vividly brought out the necessity of contact with God, so as to derive from Him strength for service and light for teaching.

THE MANCHESTER Y.M.C.A. has for some years had a Holiday Home at Llandudno for young men from all parts of the country. About 300 visitors have stayed there yearly, but the Home has been too small for the large number wishing to use it. A larger house has been secured, beautifully situated in its own garden, on the slope of the Great Orme, commanding a view of both Llandudno and Conway Bays. The Bishop of Manchester and Mrs. Fraser have kindly contributed the first ten pounds towards the cost of furnishing the new "Sherwood House."

HALF A MILLION YOUNG WOMEN.

THERE are computed to be nearly half a million of young women in London. Many thousands of these are earning their own living in shops, workrooms, factories, and service. They have but little leisure time, but that must be spent somewhere. Where shall they go? What shall they do? Music halls, dancing saloons, and a multitude of other agencies are eagerly at work drawing thousands into the toils of sin and misery. Coming up from the country to situations in town, many a thoughtful, carefully-trained girl gets rapidly accustomed to scenes, habits, and associates from which in her home life she would have shrunk with dismay. But who is there to hold out a kind hand of safe and real friendship, and draw her to a pleasant, wholesome scene of recreation, and into the sphere of influences that will help, not harm?

This is just what our Young Women's Christian Association is doing for the girls of London. With an income of £3000 to £4000, it has already established ninety Branches (thirty of these being Institutes and Homes), with a membership of over 7000 young women, which could be rapidly doubled if means were supplied. But unless this can be done, even present efforts must be curtailed.

At railway refreshment bars and restaurants some thousands of young women are employed and exposed to certain temptation and risk. Our Restaurant Visitor, after one year's work, is already in communication with 512 of these girls; 50 of them have joined the Y.W.C.A., 27 belong to the Penny Bank, 22 have become total abstainers; 33 ladies have undertaken a Letter Mission, and 106 girls receive letters. 1800 packets of magazines are distributed regularly among them, and 48 subscribe for good monthly magazines. A weekly Bible Reading is held for them at a lady's house, and monthly evening drawing-room meetings are also given and largely attended. Our Visitor has more on her hands than she can overtake. We desire to appoint another for those employed in public-houses, music halls, &c. Will anyone give us £50 per annum for this purpose?

"Find one puir lassie and be kind to her," was the reply of Carlyle to a lady who asked him how she could best turn her life to account. Will not the fathers and mothers of England, whose own daughters are cared for and protected, charge themselves each with the care of helping one other girl less fortunate? Through the Y.W.C.A. this may easily be done. A gift placed at the disposal of its Committee will go direct to bringing kindly, genial, Christian influences to bear upon the life of girls, many of whom have no other wise and loving friend to care personally for them, and to watch whether they sink or swim in the heaving ocean of London life.

WHAT THE YOUNG WOMEN SAY.

The following sentences, written by Members, will leave little doubt as to their feeling about the Y.W.C.A.: "How thankful I am for such a thing as a Y.W.C.A.! How nice it is to be able to make friends in a strange place! I have never been away from my own people before, therefore I can appreciate it." "I often picture the room at the Institute, with the cheery fire, and many bright faces there, and wish I might join you." "I always look forward to Thursday (Bible Class) evenings as the one bright spot in a weary week." "I never can thank God enough for the happy times I had at the Institute.' "I shall always recollect that unhappy winter in London, with little sunshine, except that I met in the evenings at the Institute." "What we poor girls want is someone to love us a little, and to show us the way to heaven."

PRESSING CLAIMS.

We want £2000 to meet our present deficit and carry on existing work. £130 to furnish and pay the rent of an opening Institute at Hackney. £100 for an Institute room in a central locality, where we can gather the girls from restaurant and railway bars for classes, &c. £50 to send an urgently-needed helper to an Evening Home at Brixton. £50 for a Visitor to young women employed in public-houses, music halls, &c. £20 for the rent of a room for work among laundry girls at Kensal New Town.

In a recent letter to one of the Secretaries, Mr. S. Morley, M.P., expressed his very high appreciation of the work of the Y.W.C·A., and enclosed a cheque for £200. If any feel moved to follow his generous lead, according to the measure of their ability, we append for their information the names and addresses of the Hon. Secretaries:—Mrs. H. Arbuthnot, 15, Craven Hill-gardens, W.; Hon. Emily Kinnaird, 2, Pall-mall East, S.W.

THE GOSPEL BY JOHN.*

WHILE those who have used the fourfold emblem of the Cherubim to indicate the peculiar features of the four Gospels have differed in their applications of the first three, all with one consent have regarded John as answering to the fourth, which "had the face of an eagle." Its lofty flight, its penetrating glance, its majestic careering in the heights of heaven, all mark out the king of birds as a fitting symbol of the Evangelist who, more than any other sacred writer, dwells on the person and work of Jesus as the "Son of God." In the very first verse of his Gospel, Trapp says, "we find this heavenly eagle soaring out of sight," and so all through we are shown the Divine and celestial side of that inimitable character and unique work developed and accomplished by the incarnate God.

This characteristic feature is so strongly marked, as to fully justify Professor Williams in saying, "It would appear as unnatural, if we may so express it, for this Evangelist to speak of things merely human, as for the eagle to walk the earth." The same writer calls attention to "the extraordinary tendency there is in St. John always to arise into the mention of Divine attributes, to notice indications and emanations of divinity, as ever breaking through the veil of the flesh by which He became visible to mortal eyes." This is so not only in connection with miracles and discourses of a specially elevated character, but also in connection with minute details and intensely human incidents. As, for instance, when in recording the washing of the disciples' feet, he adds the words: "Jesus knowing that the Father had given all things into his hand, and that He was come from God, and went to God." See another instance in xviii. 4.

Yet with all its majesty and sublimity of teaching there is a tenderness and simplicity which makes this Gospel peculiarly precious to the devout reader. "Such is the style of this Gospel, that it appears no style at all. Soft as the dew that fell noiseless on the hill of Hermon; soft as the oil that came on the head of Aaron, and went to the skirts of his clothing: so full of the unction of Divine charity is the very style. A little child at the point of death has been known to ask to hear the reading of St. John's Gospel, mentioning, as a reason for it, the soothing and softening influence of that Evangelist. Of such little children is the kingdom of heaven; something of that Divine wisdom which this Gospel contains is revealed unto babes; it contains abundantly milk for babes, and at the same time in all its fulness meat too strong for all but perfect men. This Gospel is that Divine stream wherein the elephant may swim, and yet a child may ford the same, and pass thereby to the heavenly Canaan."

No marvel that the attacks of rationalists upon this hallowed book have been so sharp and severe. It has been termed "the battle-field of the New Testament;" but whether we think of the genuineness of its authorship or the authenticity and integrity of its records, of every battle fought, it may be said, victory remains with those who regard it as an inspired record of the Saviour's life, written by the "disciple whom Jesus loved," who leaned upon his breast at the supper, and who, more than any other, entered into the heart-breathings of his Lord. This Gospel is an impregnable citadel of refuge and strength to the believer,—a citadel which, spite of all assaults, remains secure, its towers rising high and glowing bright with the glory of the Sun of Righteousness shining full upon them; its defences unbroken, and its foundations unmoved.

Dr. Sinclair Paterson in his "Fourfold Life" makes the following helpful and suggestive remarks on John: "I cannot too often repeat that this Gospel is the Gospel of faith. Herein we have the story of faith in its beginning, growth, and completion. Here we see the blade, the ear, and the full corn in the ear. The grand statement of the Godhead of Jesus standing at the beginning is the argument of the book, and all that follows is the progressive development of the method by which it is reached. 'These are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Son of God, and believing, might have life through his name.' You find this key-word 'believe,' in one or other of its forms, occurring again and again throughout this Gospel. It occurs 98 times, as against 35 in the other three Gospels —as against 115 in the whole of the New Testament, omitting only the First Epistle of John. This word 'faith,' then, with its derivatives, is, I repeat, the key-word to the Gospel. It is the word which suggests to us the reason why John wrote the narrative, and it also forms the connective and explanatory framework in which all the facts are placed."

Invaluable in its distinctive and special characters as thus indicated, this Gospel is also to be regarded as the priceless complement or filling up of the three former records. Written among the latest of all the canonical books of Scripture, it is one of the choicest and most noble gems contained in the sacred casket, and that, not because it is more Divine in its inspiration, but because it tells us most of the Divine fulness and infinite love which dwells in the heart of Him who is indeed "the Only Begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." As we read may we so perceive the glory of the Son of Man and Son of God, as that from each one of us may burst forth in fullest confidence the grand confession of Thomas, recorded in chapter xx.—"My Lord and my God."

YOUNG TOILERS IN THE CITY.

A NEAT little pamphlet lately issued, entitled "Golden Sheaves from the City Harvest-field," gives an interesting account of the progress of Mrs. Fisher's work among young women employed in City warehouses. The scope of the mission is continually being extended, and the workers meet with much encouragement in seeing definite fruit of their labours on behalf of a tried and tempted class. The Letter Mission is a branch of the work that yields excellent results. The young women confide their individual trials and difficulties to the lady who conducts this department; it sometimes happens that very beneficial and timely counsel is given.

The Bible-readings and short services in work-rooms continue to be greatly appreciated, and to be abundantly blessed to the spiritual good of the young women. The same may be said of the dinner half-hour services at 186, Aldersgate-street. By the way, if ladies attending the usual noon prayer-meetings held there were to linger a little and be present at the young women's meeting that follows, they would discover many reasons for thanksgiving, and would perchance find opportunities for useful service. The facilities for getting midday refreshment at Cross Keys-square, and at The Welcome, Jewin-street, continue to be a highly prized boon to many, and also furnish the occasion of catering for their spiritual as well as their physical well-being.

We would very earnestly commend these efforts to the best consideration and sympathy of our readers. Any who can give personal help, by visitation or giving Gospel addresses, or who can aid by the gift of money, are invited to communicate with Mrs. Fisher, care of Porter, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

Notes and Comments.

MR. MOODY'S Conference at Northfield, Mass., this year, will be held in August, beginning probably on the 5th, and lasting ten days.

A Society journal, which is probably indebted for its title to John Bunyan, reflects as follows on the transitoriness of earthly fame:—

> "An example of how soon the best-known people are forgotten, was afforded lately by the death of Colonel Maberley. For many years Secretary of the Post Office, his name was familiar years ago in every household, but his death passed almost unnoticed. So, too, is it with even Cabinet Ministers, unless of the very first order. How many people to-day know aught about Lords Glenelg and Broughton, or even Sir James Graham, or could name five members of Pitt's or even Peel's Cabinets?

The forty-ninth Psalm might have been the text of this meditation. But that divine song also anticipates the good tidings of "Jesus and the Resurrection," and teaches the man of God to say, "But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave; for He shall receive me."

Again Society utters itself through the same medium, and ruminating on "The Durham nullity suit," observes that "Society has been much edified, but the thing is all over, and in nine days it will be forgotten. With the exception, perhaps, of an unusually good dinner, is there anything in this ridiculous planet which is worthy of a longer recollection?" What a very ridiculous entity Society must be if its edification evaporates in nine days, and how selfish and cruel if an unusually good dinner gives it more to think about than the wrecked reason of a mismatched wife. But the planet which has been the stage of such a drama as the Incarnation, Crucifixion, and Resurrection of the Son of God, cannot be ridiculous. On the contrary, it is the scene of a mystery hidden from eternity in God, whose manifold wisdom is to be made known to the mightiest angelic powers through the Church redeemed from among men.

There can be little doubt that one of the first results of the extended franchise will be to limit the warlike tendencies of "the governing classes," and an excellent suggestion is made by a correspondent of The Nonconformist to the effect that "the responsibility of declaring war and making treaties, which has been shifted from the Crown to the Cabinet, must now be primarily and definitely in the hands of the House of Commons."

All who are concerned in upholding our national morality and in securing the complete repeal of the Acts that sanction and foster vice under the guise of promoting health, should peruse and circulate some important literature on this subject, just issued by the Hon. Secretary of the London Repeal Committee, 16, Basinghall-street, E.C.

It may freely be conceded that the British Government have had many difficulties to encounter of late with respect to foreign affairs, but surely this is no justification for the neglect of pressing social reforms at home. Mr. Hoyle tells us that our drink bill for 1884 is considerably in excess of that of the previous year. Yet our rulers have shown no inclination to secure the passing of a measure granting Local Option to the people, who suffer so grievously from the many evils that follow in the wake of "the traffic." The same indifference seems to be extended to questions relating to social vice, though many of our London streets are a disgrace to any civilised country. What has become of the "Infants' Protection Bill"?

A statement and appeal on behalf of a new meeting-place for the congregation to which Mr. D. Cameron, evangelist, ministers, in Battersea, has been issued by Mr. J. E. Mathieson, of Mildmay, and Mr. Robert Paton, Hon. Secretary of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Committee. We recently reported Mr. Cameron's "recognition service," and heartily commend this effort to the practical sympathies of our readers. The field is a large and needy one, and if the required accommodation is provided, there can be no doubt a good work will be done among the masses of the neighbourhood. Dr. Dunbar, 2, The Cedars, Clapham-common, S.W., has consented to act as treasurer.

We have given, nearly uncurtailed, in another column, a letter by Colonel Dewé White. We are entirely at one with him in his desire for peace, but in more than one point we think he is mistaken. In certain circles, opinion and feeling may be in favour of the war in the Soudan, but we are satisfied that there is no torrent of public opinion in this direction. The opinion and feeling of "the people" is, we believe, all the other way.

It is strange to a civilian to see how the instincts and prepossessions of the military man are manifested in the letter of our correspondent. It reads strangely from an advocate of peace, that "having beaten the enemy in every encounter, and slain many thousands of Arabs to boot, we ought to conduct a dignified, calm, and honourable retreat." If we commenced doing evil by the bombardment of Alexandria, we have murdered all who have since been slain, and we have little cause for a calm and dignified retreat.

We are asked to write a paper on the responsibility of every head of a household for the care of servants and others living under their roof. We give, for the present, a brief extract from the note of our correspondent, Mrs. Bramwell Booth, accompanying an article to be found in another column:—"A little care and kindly oversight would save so much sin and sorrow. Almost entirely through the want of a little of this, many of the girls who come to me were led astray. God seems to have recognised as a good point in Abraham that he 'will command his children and his household after him.' And a bishop is 'to rule well his own house.' Experience leads me to say that gross ignorance of what is actually going on is a characteristic of very large numbers of parents and householders." We are quite sure that this is painfully and shamefully true, and the results are often painful and shameful accordingly.

An article in a recent issue of The Nonconformist and Independent gives a comprehensive and vivid sketch of the scheme of work in the East of London in connection with "Toynbee Hall." Mr. Toynbee, an Oxford student, was very enthusiastic about questions of social reform, and this institution has been planted in Whitechapel as a memorial of him. There are at present thirteen gentlemen in residence; some are engaged in various secular pursuits, but the larger number give their whole time to philanthropic work, such as school visitation, the organising of charity, evening classes, social gatherings, &c. "Many of the men take Sunday-school classes, visit the homes of the people, and do much work of a real spiritual order."

The writer of the sketch is very sanguine in his estimate of the project, and of its prospects:—

> "For some two months I have seen the life and work done by the Toynbee Hall men. I say that it is earnest, fresh, and Christian—nothing more so, I believe, in London to-day. . . . It is but a beginning. Larger plans, fuller purposes, more generous aims rise before the hopeful minds of those who dwell in the East-end University Hall. But in all these purposes and aims one thing will ever be kept in view—life reached by life; life which is down to be lifted, and life that is lost to be regained."

It is always well when the rich and poor meet together; mutual sympathy and respect must follow, with a deeper conviction that "the Lord is the maker of them all." The visit paid last week to Collier's Rents by the Princess Louise and Mrs. Gladstone, besides other ladies and gentlemen of high social position, will doubtless help to awaken a fresh and practical interest in such quarters, in the condition of the unemployed and destitute masses.

Dr. Sinclair Paterson last week closed his interesting series of lectures to the members of the Bankers' Prayer Union by one on Evolution. He dealt in detail with the varied and not always consistent theories of so-called "scientists," with respect to the evolutionary scheme of the world. Granted that scheme were proven, instead of being a mere speculation, it would still leave untouched the great questions of a First Cause, of the introduction of life, and of the different forms of life that are found in the world. Dr. Paterson said he believed the Evolution theory had had its day, and would soon disappear. His own confession of faith may be summed up in the following brief paragraph:—

> "If the world has not existed from all eternity, which is generally granted, there are but two alternatives—creation and evolution. I accept creation, not because I can prove it, but because God tells me of it. It is impossible for me to understand creation. I am but a creature. The Creator alone understands what creation means. So far as He has been pleased to communicate to me any knowledge concerning creation, I may understand his work. For my own part I confess, 'By faith I understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear.'"

"As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up. . . And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me." These are Scriptures on which it is fitting that we meditate at this time, when we specially commemorate the death of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. And the fruit of our meditation should be Jesus Christ evidently set forth crucified before the eyes of men, and his people "always bearing about in our body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body." In the portion of Edward Irving's Missionary Sermon which is printed on another page, the calling of the Church of Christ to this high privilege is so grandly dwelt upon that we know no human words more suitable for our meditation in connection with the Death and Resurrection of the Lord Jesus.

CHRISTIANS AT WORK IN AMERICA.

GAMBLING IN THE WEST.

WRITING from Montana, U.S., Mr. J. Parment, late of the Open-air Mission, says:—If the United States are ahead of England in some matters pertaining to rule and government, they are ahead of us in the sin of gambling. Connected with the Open-air Mission for five years, I saw a good deal of the systematic gambling of the racecourse, but I have seen more here in proportion to the time and the place in which I am located, than at home. This little city is cursed with eight or nine saloons, four of them open day and night seven days a week for the purpose of gambling, and all of them have gaming tables.

NEGROES IN FLORIDA.

Sir,—In this State we have a large coloured population, many of whom are extremely ignorant. Deploring much the state of affairs, a few of us have orginated in this district semi-weekly meetings, which are spent in initiating the poor negroes into the mysteries of the alphabet and reading to them simple Bible stories. These old sweet tales have never lost their charm. The eager attention and frequent ejaculations of sympathy from our dusky brethren lead us to hope for better things, and make us believe that our feeble efforts are not altogether uncrowned with success.

We would fain enlist the sympathies of some of your Christian readers at home, and ask their assistance by sending us a few pictorial cards, hymns, tracts, or illustrated papers, for which they have no further use, and which we would distribute amongst them. We ask for no pecuniary aid, but there are few of your readers who cannot help us on by sending us the little things we have asked for, the postage on which will be trifling. It is sometimes hard to sustain the wandering attention of the negroes, and we find that by presenting them with trifles of this kind we ensure their more constant attendance at our meetings. I will be happy to take charge of, and distribute all contributions.

W. N. Jackson, Secretary, Y.M.C.A.
Lane-park, Sumter Co., Florida, U.S.A.

Y.M.C.A.S IN NEW YORK STATE.

The growth of these Associations in New York State is seen by the increased interest in their annual meetings. Over 400 young men were present, from all sections of the State, at the annual meeting held in Syracuse last month. From the report of the State Executive Committee, read by Mr. E. P. Platt, of Poughkeepsie, it was found that there are 100 Associations now in the State. Of these, 14 are railroad, 10 are college, and 3 are German branches. The State Secretary, Rev. Geo. A. Hall, has had supervision over the work the entire year. He made last year 102 Association visits, held 92 conferences with workers, besides many calls in all directions for new Associations and for securing secretaries. There are 71 general secretaries now employed in the State.

The different phases of special work for young men were discussed with a great deal of interest. A remarkable feature of the meeting was the development of business-men in Christian work, especially for young men. Another fact very encouraging was the attention given to Bible study, and the effort made to teach young men how to use the Bible. For this purpose four training-classes were conducted, illustrating how each Association should seek to teach young men to become leaders of others.

About seventy delegates were present from the colleges of the State, and as many more from the railroad branch. The work among each of these classes made a deep impression upon the convention. A new feature of the meeting this year was the presence of about forty delegates from the boys' branches.

An experience meeting, in which the delegates testified what, by the blessing of God, the Association had done for them, and a praise-meeting, were both of them seasons of very marked interest. On the Lord's-day a consecration meeting, a young men's evangelistic Bible-class, and a service of song, were the special features of the day. Each was for young men only, and was largely attended; in the two latter services inquirers were found and pointed to Christ. An impulse was given by this meeting to the work, and it is believed all the agencies, both secular and distinctively religious, will be better used than ever before. Will the readers of The Christian pray for the young men of New York State?

THE DAKOTA PRAIRIES.

Dear Sir,—Emigration to the fertile prairies of Dakota during the last three or four years has been very great. This has opened a large field for Christian enterprise, into which the American Sabbath-school Union, with its missionaries, has entered. It is nobly doing its part, by planting and aiding Sabbath-schools wherever the way may open. As soon as a neighbourhood is sufficiently settled, a neat little school-house is erected by the township board; thus a suitable building is supplied for the Sabbath-school as well as the district school. These Sunday-schools are a great help towards supplying the spiritual needs of the people, and it is not uncommon for Church organisations to be the result; in my school this is likely to take place.

During the last two weeks revival meetings have been held in our school-house by Mr. Kimball, the Sabbath-school missionary, Mr. Greg, Congregational minister, and Mr. Atkinson, a Wesleyan minister, formerly of Sheffield, England. These brethren have been greatly blessed in declaring the Gospel message. Several adults have been hopefully converted, a number of Sabbath-school children have confessed their trust in Jesus. Christians generally have been roused to see their need of a deeper work of grace.—Yours in the love of the Gospel, Herbert Gregory.

A PRAIRIE REVIVAL.

I came here last fall, to a pastorate of three churches—one in this small town, one about sixteen miles north, in the prairies, and the other seven miles south. These prairie churches are in the midst of homes at least half a mile apart, not inhabited by heathen, but by most intelligent people, many of them from Eastern Churches. Of course there are very many careless ones and backsliders.

Gloversville Church stands on a hill, and is seen several miles off, with its white spire. At first my congregations were from thirty to forty; but when visiting an Irish sceptic, who ignored the inspiration of Scripture, the word was with power, and he began to search the Soiptures. It was not long before he decided for Christ. His influence being great, he got the people together for prayer, and soon came to me to hold a protracted series of services. The result has been a full month of services every night, with crowded congregations. I concluded this series of meetings on Wednesday night, with about fifty converts, of whom thirty-four have joined our Church, and the remainder are awaiting the next communion.

We expect our new church, which seats 120, will be far too small this summer. It would indeed surprise my friends in England to see the many waggons, buggies, and horses coming to church from the surrounding and distant homesteads; some come six miles (a two hours' ride over rough roads). I do not remember any occasion when the power of God was so manifest. Many men of hard character asked prayer, and very soon testified for Jesus. This church had only nine members, and is not a year old. The people are rejoicing in the Lord.

I have also had crowded congregations at Willow Valley (sixteen miles north) and the Lord is there enabling me to reach many unbelievers.

In this town my special work is just beginning. The town is coming together in the school-house to hear the word of God, and I am looking forword to a revival of God's work here; this is a place for sin and gambling, but God has given me favour with the people, and even the worst men are at the services. May I ask the prayers of your many readers, that I may be able to feed the flock of God, and that God's work here may still go on.—Yours in Gospel service,

W. Stevenson, Congregational Minister.

JERSEY CITY AND NEW YORK.

Mr. George Soltau writes from Brooklyn on March 11:—I have concluded a fortnight's work in Jersey City, in connection with the Tabernacle of which Rev. Addison P. Foster is pastor. A large number of children and young people have confessed Christ, and there has been a remarkable deepening of spiritual life amongst the Christians attending the Bible readings. Spare evenings have been spent at Jerry M'Auley's Water-street Mission, New York, where our good Brother Shorey is in charge. Night after night the most blessed cases of conversion occur of the hardest kind. It has been soul-stirring and refreshing to hear the ringing testimonies of the Lord's power to save and keep from sin.

The Florence All-night Mission, Blecker-street, New York, is another spot of great interest, where men and women are being taken out of the gutter and sent on their way rejoicing. Four devoted labourers have charge of this work. They live in the mission-house, and devote all the night to seeking for the lost. On my last visit to them, two nights ago, I found one of them in bed with bad quinsy, another in bed with fever, and a third had a badly sprained ankle; yet the Gospel work was not allowed to stop, and the fourth one, still able-bodied, was busy at work in the meeting. The Lord abundantly bless and sustain such devoted servants as these are.

I expect to be next at the town of Westfield, New Jersey, for a series of meetings.

THE POLITICAL OUTLOOK.

THE quarterly prayer-meeting of the Evangelical Alliance was held at Adam-street, last Friday morning. Rev. H. E. Brooke in a brief address said: The words of the poet Cowper, "His purposes will ripen fast," express my feelings largely in reference to the present political outlook. We are not to be indifferent to national affairs nor unconcerned as to whether there is to be peace or war; but we must remember always that God has his own purposes to fulfil in connection with all these events, and that these divine purposes are bound to be fulfilled. On no account, then, let us give way to despair. There can be no doubt the advent of Christ draws nigh, and also the fulfilment of prophecy bearing upon the restoration of the Jews. It is a remarkable fact that the Afghans claim to be the descendants of the lost Ten Tribes, and if this be the case our present relations with them as defenders of their territory from Russian invasion is equally striking. It appears to me equally clear that the great Northern Power spoken of in Ezekiel xxxviii. is no other than Russia represented by Gog, and concerning whom God says, "I am against thee." Contrary to our wishes we have been drawn also into close contact with Egypt and the Soudan, and the issues are at present unknown.

What we as Christians need to do is to be found upon our watchtower to hear what God will say to us. These events should also lead us to study the Scriptures more closely, to be more united in heart, to work more zealously for the Master, and to become more and more separate from the world. Let us not be ashamed of the truths which teach the separation of believers from the world, and which are so clearly set forth. Be it ours to look for the coming of Jesus, and meanwhile do all we can to spread abroad to others the knowledge of his Name.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND IN GLASGOW.

We have had a visit at Cowcaddens from Mr. Hammond. There had been much prayer for months, and now we expected great things from our covenant God. We had a large number of children in the afternoon on March 15, and at the close many were spoken with in regard to their salvation. In the evening the church was crowded by an audience of upwards of 1500 of old and young. The Pillar Hall was nearly filled by the overflow, while many went away, unable to get into the church. We had a very remarkable blessing. Every night of the week the meetings were large, the impression was manifest, and the interest unabated to the end. Several adults who came in charge of children were impressed, and now they profess to be changed.

Never have our minds been more intent upon any work than we have been during the last eight days upon this. We believe the work to be invaluable, as we feel assured the fruits will be lasting. We have learned to esteem Mr. Hammond as a friend, as well as a Christian worker; while we cannot but admire his wisdom, quick-sightedness, zeal, and power to concentrate attention upon one thing, "Christ, and Him crucified." He takes definite aim, avoids discursiveness, illustrates the truth, presses it home, and the Spirit of God has evidently made use of it. From a storehouse rich in illustration, a heart in living sympathy with his work and full of love for the little ones, he, by the grace given to him, is able to meet the constant drain made upon his powers.

The results have not all come yet into my hands, but I shall be surprised if the Lord has not given him over 600 souls of young and old in this district. We praise the Lord for his great goodness, and pray earnestly that in the East-end of the city he may be more richly blessed still, and multitudes gathered into the kingdom of God's dear Son.—Yours faithfully,

William Ross.

Cowcaddens F.C., Glasgow.

During the past week, the meetings in Glasgow have made rapid progress. On the evening of Sabbath week over two thousand persons crowded into James Morrison-street Hall. Every night during the week the number of young people in attendance has been very large. Even the heavy rain on some evenings has scarcely diminished the attendance.

On Friday evening, Rev. Mr. Inglis came as a delegate from Dundee, to invite Mr. Hammond there to hold a series of meetings. In the noon meeting, Mr. Inglis gave an interesting address referring to his first acquaintance with Mr. Hammond in Annan and Dumfries, in 1861. He said that the fruits of those revivals were permanent and widespread. Such meetings at the time in the southern part of Scotland were entirely new. In Annan, a man addicted to drink was converted at the meetings, and had since been a "burning Seraph." A while after he retired from business, and gave himself up entirely to Gospel work. For a long time he was in the habit of coming three times a week to Glasgow in a third-class carriage, expressly that he might talk with the people about salvation. The directors, learning of his benevolent work, gave him a free pass, that he might continue it as long as his health permitted. This the good man did. Mr. Inglis related several other striking conversions in connection with Mr. Hammond's meetings in the south of Scotland. He said he was greatly impressed with what he saw in the meeting the previous evening.

During the twenty-six days Mr. Hammond has been here over seventeen hundred young people have been examined and re-examined by Christians appointed for the work, and have professed to have found Christ. This number may seem great, but it must be remembered that the meetings have been large, and that numbers of workers from all parts of the city have been engaged in them. K.

OUR COUNTRYMEN IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—Since 1870 I have been often cheered at Simla, or during evangelistic tours in the plains of India, by your notices in The Christian of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society. Now that I have returned to Britain, at the call of the Directors, to extend and deepen the interest of the Churches in our widely-scattered countrymen in India, you would greatly oblige by admitting a brief statement.

(1) The work is needed. Many thousands are to be found in all the provinces in units, tens, and fifties, far from ministers, churches, or missions. Their own souls are precious, and their influence for good or evil among the heathen is incalculable.

(2) The Society's plans are adapted to the work. Its agents travel extensively on railways and rivers, and among planters and others, preaching the Gospel of the grace of God, without raising questions about denominational differences.

(3) God has graciously set his seal on the work in individual conversions, in connection with the Winter Mission of the Rev. Dr. Somerville, the visit of Rev. C. Melville Pym, and the more sustained labours of myself and others.

(4) Whilst the work for India's 250,000,000 is almost unlimited, requiring thousands of labourers, it is otherwise with 250,000 Europeans and Eurasians. With a growing readiness in India to contribute, an income of £5000 a year would enable the Society to do its special work. If the lesser work for Europeans be neglected, the greater enterprise for the natives will be sadly hindered.

(5) After travelling far more than 100,000 miles in the service of the Society as its Commissioner, pioneering and planning, preaching and superintending, I appeal for help to Anglo-Indians at home, to relatives of those still in India, and to Christian patriots and the friends of missions generally—help to extend the work. Thus we may all combine to "say among the heathen that the Lord reigneth," not only by the lips of the messengers of the Churches, but also by the greater emphasis of the loyal lives of our countrymen in India.

(6) If this appeal touch the heart of any of your many readers, a direct response would greatly gratify. If it seem desirable to any of the friends of India that I should visit the towns or cities where they reside, in order to extend the interest in the Society, I shall meet their wishes if I can.

(7) At every turn I meet difficulties arising from an increasing number of claims for really good objects. Commercial depression intensifies these difficulties. Does not this lay a special temporary responsibility on those whose means are not diminished by the present distress?

(8) Lord Radstock presided at a meeting of the Society at Bombay before I left for England, and gave an impressive address. It was held in the large hall of the Bombay Young Men's Christian Association, which is one of the fruits of Dr. Somerville's visit to Bombay in 1875.

(9) Whilst money is required to support most of the agents, the recent consecration of a noble band of men for China awakens the hope that the hearts of others will be touched by the Lord for India. Then some will follow Lord Radstock and his son, the Hon. Granville Waldegrave, for a season, whilst others may go for more permanent work.

(10) The claims of China are greater and more romantic than even those of India, and the A.I.E. Society opens singularly suitable spheres for men of means and culture. They could commence work at once in their mother tongue among their own people, and by and by extend their usefulness as they acquire the native languages. Difficulties would be fewer than in the heart of China, but they would be quite sufficient to require self-denial, faith, and courage. Long ago I engaged in evangelistic work in Scotland and England, but it was only in India that I learnt why Paul wrote to Timothy, "Endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist."

(11) The society is non-denominational, or rather, as the Rev. Mr. Squires, of the Church Missionary Society, said at Bombay, pan-denominational. Its agents have been Baptist, Congregational, Episcopalian, Methodist, and Presbyterian.

(12) Sir William Muir, who has known thoroughly the work of the Society from the first, said at a public meeting, in London, on the 4th of February last, "I do not know any Society by which so much is done for so little money." Such a testimony will, I hope, encourage Christian friends to contribute towards its extension. Aid may be sent either to the General Treasurer, the Rev. S. Bannatyne, 9, London-street, Edinburgh, and 7, Adam-street, Strand, London, or to Yours faithfully, John Fordyce.

EVANGELISTIC WORK IN NORTH IRELAND.

Some of your readers may be aware that the Presbyterian churches of Belfast—thirty in number—agreed to hold a simultaneous Mission in order to reach the non-church-going classes of the town. The mission was a success. Ministers from different parts of Ireland were invited to deliver the addresses. Each spoke in a different church every night. Bands of workers went round many districts of the town inviting the people to attend; others, more urgent, waited in the homes until the people were ready to come with them. In this way numbers of those for whom the Mission was mainly intended were reached and, we believe, blessed.

In a number of the churches inquiry-meetings were held, with satisfactory results, and the workers were happily employed in pointing sinners to the Saviour. In some cases the mission has been carried on a second week with continued tokens of God's presence and power.

A most stimulating feature of the mission was the central noon-meeting. Here all the labourers of the previous evening met for praise, prayer, and report of work. These reports revealed a condition of spiritual life, in several districts in the North of Ireland, for which few were prepared. Minister after minister told of God having revived his work and of sinners being saved. Stirring accounts of this gracious visitation were given by the ministers of Burt, Waterside (Derry), Newington (Belfast), Rasharkin, Hyde-park, and Castlecaulfield.

It was also stated that blessing had attended meetings held in several congregations around Coleraine. A similar story may be told of other districts. One spot which was said to have been the most careless and hardened, has been visited by the Spirit of God. Crowded meetings have been held, and numbers have professed decision for Christ.

In another district some little time ago, two or three young people made their way to the manse of a minister as inquirers. It was a gratifying sight. On the next Saturday they returned with others, and now the two or three have grown to a band of over one hundred inquirers and young Christians. Now that God is giving to us these tokens for good, will not his children ask for larger blessings for Ireland? "Wilt Thou not revive us again that thy people may rejoice in Thee?"

Belfast, March 28. Henry Montgomery.

OBITUARY.—E. Jefferey, Weston-super-Mare, was called home on March 23, after severe suffering, borne with joyful submission. His life bore the stamp of a whole-hearted surrender to God. Giving to the Lord was his joy, whilst he shone by his great humbleness of mind. What he knew and what he possessed he held as a trust for his fellow-men.

Y.W.C.A. AT GLOUCESTER.—We started, on Tuesday last week, a Young Women's Christian Association, at very suitable premises in this city, and are greatly cheered with the measure of sympathy received from Christians of all denominations. We have taken a house, with an abundance of room, and there is scope for much and varied work to be done for our beloved Lord. Our special need is this—a fully consecrated Christian lady, with private means, who would be willing to live on the premises and superintend the work. We are waiting daily upon God for such a worker, and we trust that it will not be long before one offers herself willingly to the Lord for this service. Perhaps some reader of The Christian may be God's own chosen servant. May I ask that any communication on this subject be addressed to me at St. Nicholas Vicarage, Gloucester? John J. Luce.

Notices of Books, &c.

GENERAL GORDON: A Biography, with musical lustrations. 4d. Curwen. A very good résumé f the hero's life; it provides pure literature and musement of two kinds in a very cheap form.

CONFIRMATION AND FIRST COMMUNION. J. Vhitaker. We cannot recommend this book. It nay be written with excellent intentions, but its eaching is confused, misleading, and unscriptural.

A MANUAL FOR MINISTERS AND DEACONS. By . MCALL. W. Mack. We specially recommend he chapters on Deaconesses, Pulpit Preparation, Pastoral Visitation, Conduct of Public Service, and Concluding Hints.

YOUR SAVIOUR. By Rev. JAMES STEPHENS. 2d. Shaw & Co. This address, written specially for the nxious, and based on Matt. i. 21, beautifully ortrays Jesus as the Saviour from sin's penalty nd power. Missionaries and after-meeting workers vill find it well adapted to the purpose.

HIS PERSONAL PRESENCE. By Rev. T. W. THOMAS. Nisbet. A choice book, of which every age is in harmony with the simple but lofty title. The Christian sufferer will be cheered, the Christian oldier and runner stimulated, while ripe believers vill be more deeply instructed by its perusal.

THE DIVINITY OF OUR LORD. By W. ARTHUR. d. Religious Tract Society. Mr. Arthur's treatise, which forms one of the series of "Present Day Tracts," is admirable. By appeal to inspired witesses he proves how the Divinity and atoning work f Christ must stand or fall together.

WON OVER; or, The Story of a Boy's Life. By NELLIE HOLLIS. T. Woolmer, 66, Paternoster-row. healthy story, told in clear and racy style, and vell calculated to win the hearts of youthful eaders. Gospel truth is presented in an attractive orm, and other useful lessons taught.

"THE RESCUE." Such is the title of a new enny Monthly Record of Christian Work in conection with Mr. Fegan's Institution for Boys. It s a most creditable production, and we heartily wish t God-speed in its interesting and philanthropic nission. Communications should be addressed to he Editor, the Boys' Home, Southwark-street, S.E.

THE OFFICIAL YEAR BOOK OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND gives in a portly tome full and detailed nformation relating to the varied agencies and epartments of work attached to or in connection vith the establishment. As a work of reference, it vill prove of great service to Episcopalians S.P.C.K.)

FROM THE ZAMBESI TO BENGUELLA: Extracts rom the diary and letters of FREDERICK STANLEY ARNOT. 2d. Hawkins. Most interesting, full of imple faith in God; a plain, unvarnished account f eleven months' remarkable travel. The writer's rust in God is of that practical kind which He ever fails to honour.

SOME ACCOUNT OF THE DESTRUCTION OF BHAMO, nd Escape of the Christians. By HENRY SOLTAU. d. Hawkins. The words, "In perils by the eathen," fitly describe the marvellous escapes ecorded in this booklet, in which everything but fe was lost. It is another testimony to God's care f his own.

THE CASKET OF SONG: An original collection of acred music for Sunday-school and the home ircle. 1s. and 6d. Pitman. There is nothing pecially new about this collection, and it is hardly kely to become a popular one. "Satisfied By and By" is one of those anticipatory hymns which vould make the world believe that Christians get othing satisfactory out of their Saviour here.

JOEL BULU. T. Woolmer. By Rev. MARK GUY PEARSE. A striking proof of the power of the Gospel as displayed in heathen lands is furnished y this neat little volume. It is the autobiography f a native of one of the Friendly Islands, who, onverted by the grace of God in his own land, ecame a missionary to Fiji, where he was instrunental in doing much for the cause of Christ. Its vide circulation must be productive of good results n promoting and deepening the spirit of misionary zeal, and strengthening confidence in the esults of mission work.

CHURCH ORDINANCES, FROM THE LAYMAN'S STANDPOINT. By Major SETON CHURCHILL. Nisbet & Co. A most able and seasonable book. The hapters on baptism and confirmation are specially vorth reading. Major Churchill is neither afraid to hink for himself nor does he disdain the teaching f others. The man who has read Dean Stanley, Deans Alford and Goulburn, Charles Kingsley, F. W. Robertson, C. H. Spurgeon, Professor Houghon, Bishops H. Brown, Ryle, and Wilkinson, &c., annot be called narrow-minded, yet his conclusions re scriptural and evangelical.

CHRIST MAGNIFIED: The Life of Mrs. N. Thomas. By Rev. DAVID DAVIS. Alexander & Shepheard, Castle-street, E.C. A well-written account of a saintly woman. As a maiden, who for Christ's sake could give up a home of luxury, and as a minister's wife who devoted her energies and talents to Christ's service, Mrs. Thomas was a noble example to Christian women. Admirers of Mrs. Prentiss and Miss Havergal will here learn how Christ can be magnified in a very different sphere.

We have received specimens of very pretty floral Easter cards from Messrs. Marcus Ward & Co., Oriel House, Farringdon-street, E.C.

YOUNG MAN—ARISE! By W. OGLE. 1d. Bemrose & Sons. An excellent address to young men; practical, rousing, and instructive.

In a little penny pamphlet (Nisbet & Co.), entitled HARD TIMES, "a Friend of the People" enumerates various causes that have combined to produce the prevailing distress.

We lately noticed a little book published by Messrs. Shaw & Co., giving an account of mission work among "Lepers in India," the price of which was stated to be 6d. We are desired to say that there is an edition at 1d.

SABBATH SCHOOL WORK IN THEORY AND IN PRACTICE: An Address to Teachers. By Rev. WM. ROBERTSON. Macniven & Wallace. The essential qualifications for this work, too often under-estimated, are here lovingly but zealously advocated.

A pamphlet on "Self-supporting Penny Dinners for School Children: How to Establish and Manage Them," is published by Messrs. Alexander & Shepheard (1d.). Much information is given, with numerous "dinner recipes," and a menu for change of diet every day in the week.

TEMPERANCE PAMPHLETS. 337, Strand. The Depression of Trade: Its Cause and Cure. 3d. In this pamphlet Mr. Wm. Hoyle, a recognised authority on Temperance statistics, sets forth that the enormous sum of 200 millions annually spent on drink is a sufficient explanation of the present commercial depression. A valuable declaration on this subject.—Wines of the Bible, by Dr. Norman Kerr (1d.), is an address recently delivered in the City. It deals comprehensively with this disputed topic, and strongly urges the use of unfermented wine at the Communion.—In Travels in a Strange Land (1d.) Mr. J. Dyer Ball recites his experiences of the medicine takers, poison takers, thirsty men, and the religious tribe dwelling in "Allmen's Land."—Local Option in Bessbrook describes the Temperance Colony in Ireland, where there are no public-houses, no paupers, no religious disturbances, no pawnshops, and no constable. An irresistible argument for abstinence. (1s. 6d. per 100.)

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.—A well-attended drawing-room meeting was held last week at 84, Portland-place, W., on behalf of this agency, which seeks to bring Gospel truth before stage employés. Rev. Sholto Douglas took the chair. Mr. Courthope Todd, the secretary, gave a very interesting sketch of work done, and expressed a hope that other ladies would follow the example of their kind hostess in opening their drawing-rooms for similar purposes.

SOLDIERS AT MALTA.—The following is an extract from a letter written by a lady at Malta, on March 1:—Our chief interest of late has been the coming and going of troops for Egypt. On Friday the Shropshire Regiment (53rd) sailed away. The regiment was here 800 strong; 400 of them are total abstainers, and a considerable number of them are earnest, consistent Christians. The night before they sailed there was a farewell tea in the Presbyterian Soldiers' Institute. Others were entertained by the Episcopal and the Wesleyan clergy. We went to the Presbyterian Institute. I never was at so interesting a meeting, the prayers were so earnest and touching; prayers for the "outward bound," prayers for Egypt, that good might be brought out of evil, and that in some way God would over-rule the war for the spread of the Gospel and the suppression of slavery. I was told by one of the officers present that he knew every man there, and that with them the change had been definite, their conversion a right-about-face one, from going in one way to marching right in the opposite direction now.

MR. FEGAN AND HIS BOY EMIGRANTS.—In a circular-letter dated The Boys' Home, 95, Southwark-street, S.E., Mr. J. W. Fegan writes:—On Thursday, May 14, I wish to leave Liverpool for Canada with about one hundred emigrant boys. Towards the £1000 required to meet the expenses of this party, the noble donor of £500 to our emigration work last year has again contributed £500, and other friends have already subscribed about £200 more. The remaining £300 will, I have no doubt, be forthcoming by the date of departure. By this effort, through God's mercy, there will not only be 100 boys settled in comfortable Canadian farmhouses at good wages, but vacancies will be created in our Homes for another 100 boys, to be rescued forthwith from London street-misery. My place here will be filled once more by my friend who takes such a loving interest in our boys, and has so ably acted as locum tenens for me on other occasions. I feel, however, that it will be impossible for me to go to Canada and leave him with any financial anxiety in addition to the other weighty responsibilities he voluntarily undertakes in the management of the Homes while I am away.

EASTERTIDE.

O JOYFUL morn of glad surprise,
That saw the dear Redeemer rise,
And death's dominion broken;
Of life in Christ to men revealed,
Of sin destroyed, the grave unsealed,
The sure and sacred token.

His head He bowed in death that He Might reconcile to God, and free
The captive from his prison;
The place is empty where He laid,
He lives for ever who was dead,
And we in Him are risen.

Our buried friends but sleep awhile,
They rest from sorrow, care, and toil,
Anon to live for ever;
Soon shall they wake who dwell in dust,
The sea shall render up her trust,
And friends no more shall sever.

O wondrous love! for me He died,
O may I in that love confide
With all my heart's affection;
By his own word assured of this,
Awake or sleeping I am his,
Himself the Resurrection.

Henceforth the grave I may not dread;
Since He hath made it once his bed,
In peace in Him I'll slumber:
Until that holy, happy morn,
Upon the sons of light shall dawn,
And God his saints shall number.

Maldon. C. M. HANDLEY.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAYER.—For blessing to rest upon meetings at Kirton, in Lindsey, by James Neech, from April 3 to 12.——For a children's meeting to be held at Down Lodge Hall, Wandsworth, next Saturday afternoon.——That a young man may have guidance at a critical point in his life.

PRAISE.—For blessing given at Framlingham.

HAMPTON'S MISSION FOR THE AGED BLIND.—The fourteenth Annual Report of this Mission gives details of some sad cases received into the home. The Mission continues to provide three or four meals weekly to the blind poor. Clothing is distributed, firing given, and lodging provided as need arises. Mr. Hampton, a portrait of whom is given, appeals for increased help, and invites helpers to send aid to him at The Mission, Webber-row, Waterloo-road, S.E.

INTEMPERANCE AND AGRICULTURE. — Public opinion throughout the country is rapidly changing in favour of a money payment in place of the usual allowance of beer. The Church of England Temperance Society has taken up this question, and made it a special department of its operations. Wherever Conferences and meetings have been held on the subject, whether of employers or men, resolutions have been passed to the effect that it was desirable to substitute money for beer.

THE SOCIAL PURITY MOVEMENT.—On Sunday week Mr. Charles James delivered a lecture in the Town Hall, Brighouse, in connection with the Friends' Adult School. About 500 young men were present. Mr. James dealt very faithfully and forcibly with the subject. On Monday Mr. James addressed a mixed audience in the Friends' Meeting-house. On Tuesday an enthusiastic meeting of men was held at the Salvation Mission-room, Wyke, near Bradford. The place was full, and the lecture was given amidst the closest attention. At the close about 100 pledges were taken, and Mr. James received an invitation to address them again.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—The work of this society has been carried on with vigour in some large northern towns since Christmas. At Sheffield the numbers gathered were 120 each night, and more pitiable, lost, and wretched creatures it would be difficult to find. Through the kindness of the Mayor of Birmingham, permission was given to use the committee-room of the Town Hall, in order to get together the better-dressed women who crowd its neighbourhood at night. Inquirers were invited to another meeting the next day; a number came, and some were helped in various ways. Greatly to his regret, Mr. Christien, the organising secretary, has been obliged to postpone further meetings at present, through indisposition.

Letters to the Editor.

"A REASONABLE FAITH."

SEVERAL correspondents, members of the Society of Friends, are anxious to disclaim, on behalf of the great bulk of that community, any participation in the doctrinal views set forth in this book, which we briefly reviewed last week. We did not state in our notice, and have never for a moment supposed, that the teaching of the book represented the current belief of Friends generally.

One correspondent says:—"The book has caused much controversy among us, and the majority of those who have written are agreed that it contains grave heresy touching the Atonement and the inspiration of Holy Scripture."

SALVATION ARMY ON THE CONTINENT.

Sir,—An error has slipped into your note in last week's issue referring to my meeting in Exeter Hall. The amount I am seeking to raise is £3000 towards the expenses of the current year. £1350 was the amount promised at Exeter Hall, and not £2000.

During the year our officers have increased from 30 to 60, our stations from 8 to 19, and the circulation of our paper, En Avant, from 11,000 fortnightly to 11,000 weekly. One-third of our stations are now self-supporting. No one with us receives any salary. In the very place in Switzerland where three of our people were all but murdered at the beginning of the year, we have subsequently had upwards of 200 conversions, and the corps numbers 150 soldiers.

We long to respond to some of the pressing calls which reach us from all sides.—Yours,

Catherine Booth.

THE THEATRE.

Sir,—Referring to Mr. Hollis's letter of last week, I regret that he, as a Christian, does not disavow all sympathy with the Theatre. "Acting," as a simple amusement, may, in the abstract, be harmless, but it is astonishing how, when elaborated into a science and accompanied by all the paraphernalia of scenery, costume, &c., it is thick-set with snares, and snares which lead to moral ruin.

The object of managers is not to promote righteousness and purity, but to amuse the public, i.e., the world. This is done nowadays by presenting phases of life of such exceeding worldliness, that none having a claim to be regarded as followers of the Saviour could be identified with them in real life. The weaknesses, follies, and vices of society are exposed or travestied, not for the sake of reforming them, but simply to afford people something to laugh at or to cry at. And because the mere presentation of life, such as it is, does not satisfy satiated audiences, the greatest exaggerations are introduced; the frivolity is appalling, and beautiful music is employed to cast a glamour over the whole.

This is not all. Vicious scenes are sometimes produced—scenes which to see once is moral contamination. Some of the most successful plays during the last few years have been those in which large numbers of women, more or less slenderly clad, have performed. I think I am right in saying that those theatres are always crammed where this kind of thing is carried to the greatest extreme.

Do your readers know anything of the lives of actors, actresses, ballet-dancers, and those armies of girl-children who act in our pantomimes at Christmas? I deplore their lives, but pity them on account of their overwhelming temptations. I gathered the other day, from one who knows and loves the theatre, that some theatres may be classed as "respectable," some "only moderately so," some "very doubtful," some "decidedly immoral," and some "sinks of iniquity."

If I send my son of seventeen to London, into a house of business, how am I to guard him against the bad or doubtful theatres, except by a total prohibition? Is he to gain experience by patronising them all round? My evident duty to the lad is to say, "Avoid them altogether." This is his only safety. Some say that by going to see theatre he would see the world, and, if they mean its wickedness, no doubt they are right. But I am not of that opinion. There are many things it is better not to know, and to pass from this world never having known them would be an unmixed blessing.

Many are moderate and discriminating theatre-goers, and appear to take no harm. They are outwardly correct, and perhaps are members of Christian Churches. But are they hungering and thirsting after righteousness? Are their lives hid with Christ in God? Are they realising their glorious privileges as "sons of God"?

Wolverhampton. M. J. S.

Esteemed Sir,—I think some writers and speakers err in the qualified way in which they condemn the stage. We often meet with some such phrase as "the theatre, as at present conducted," &c. Does not this naturally allow of the inference that if the playhouse were of a certain character, there would be no longer any objection to it from a Christian point of view? There are many worldly-minded people, of refined tastes, who object to the theatre, when the pieces contain questionable situations or indecent inuendoes, quite as much, perhaps, as Christians do; and, indeed, there is a large and increasing class who are urging greater purity of the drama. And the hint has already been taken, for, as your correspondent, Mr. Hollis says, "some of the high-class theatres would not on any account" perform pieces of an indecent tendency. Demand in this, as in everything else, will be answered by supply. But, surely, the Christian teacher should not merely denounce the theatre because of some adventitious passage that offends against good morals; many books, many things besides, about the lawful use of which there can be no doubt, might just as much be condemned as the theatre on such grounds.

The Christian must go further; there must be no compromise between him and one of the most worldly forms of worldliness. In saying this, I know I am opposed by bishops and laity, and the great in the walks of literature. But I would remonstrate with such. Are not these gaieties of the world altogether alien in spirit to that of the Word of God? Has the holy injunction any binding upon us which says, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world: if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him"? Is it still true that "all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world"? Has not the Holy Ghost in these words drawn a white line of demarcation between the Church and the world, and dare we cross it?

Moreover, if we do indeed know the peace and joy and preciousness of communion with our risen Lord, how can we mix with and enjoy the gaieties of this poor sinful world of which Satan is "Prince," and in whose arms it lies? Rather, amidst the deadness and darkness of this present age, let us, as children of the light, be sober, vigilant, and watchful, avoiding the very appearance of evil. I cannot but think, if the grace of Christ be in the heart, it must spoil the appetite for theatres and the like.

Manchester. J. R.

THE USE OF MONEY.

Four correspondents write in reply to the letter by "T.H.N." on this subject in last week's issue; we have not space for these communications in full, and therefore summarise the most important of them:—

"Dicipulus" thinks that a man whose desires are heavenwards will not need to spend £150 on a rare orchid in order to have his mind raised towards God. A primrose or a violet will suffice. On the other hand, all the costly flowers in the world will not lift an earthly-minded man one inch nearer heaven "In whatever way a man spends his money, he no doubt employs labour, so that the question is not whether labour ought to be employed, but in what way it can be employed so as to do the most good. A rich man who spends ten thousand pounds in making his own house magnificent employs labour; and so also does another rich man who spends the same sum in making the dwellings of the labourers on his estate healthy and comfortable. The difference is that the one pays masons, carpenters, &c., to minister to his own luxury, and the other to minister to the comfort of his poor neighbours. Who of these is acting most according to the mind of Christ it is not hard to say."

"A Christian," referring to the large sum paid for "a rare orchid," says:—No one objects to the possession of beautiful things; it is the fictitious value placed upon them that constitutes the evil. We want more of John Wesley's self-abnegating spirit. Allowing a wide margin for the enjoyment of the beautiful, and remembering that costliness is not really beauty, we must admit that this indulgence in sensuous luxuries has become a "cult," and there is a danger of this pseudo-culture and taste becoming the religion of many, to the death of love.

"Christiana" says:—Christians need not fear that trade, or commerce, or art, or anything else of the kind will stagnate, if instead of spending large sums on an orchid, or a picture, or a china vase, they give the money to help to spread the knowledge of the Gospel or to relieve the sufferings of the poor. Neither need they fear that they will help to add to the number of paupers by obeying the Lord's command to share what He has given them with those who are in want. The poor will always be among us, and woe to us if we do not succour them.

A SOLDIER'S PLEA FOR PEACE.

Sir,—England just now is in the throes of a wild delirium for the prolongation of an aggressive, unnecessary, and most costly war, and it seems almost as useless to attempt to restrain the torrent of public opinion as it would be to attempt to stop an express train by putting a shilling on the line. However, despite all this the few who are not down with the war fever should raise their voices and use their pens in opposition to the angry taunts and sneers of the many.

But what are our spiritual watchmen—the ministers of the Gospel of peace—doing at this crisis? Are they inculcating the love of peace, or are they saying, it is no use trying to calm the public feeling on account of its being too intense for them to grapple with. Or are they preaching in favour of war, as the Rev. J. Llewelyn Davies did at Christ Church, St. Marylebone, in a sermon which occupies more than two columns of The Guardian of March 4. It is very sad to find Mr. Bradlaugh, the Atheist, taking the place of our Gospel ministers in advocating the cause of suffering humanity, as he did at the recent Demonstration on Clerkenwell-green, held under the auspices of the Patriotic Club, for protesting against the war in the Soudan.

There was a time when I delighted in war, but my opinions on the subject have undergone a great change since my retirement from the service, and having during the Sutlej Campaign of 1845-46, and the Indian Mutiny Campaigns of 1857-58-59, seen much of the horrors of war, and heard the piteous and heartrending groans of the dying, I now entertain very strong feelings in regard to all aggressive wars, whether undertaken by Conservative or Liberal ministers, as also in regard to the awful responsibility incurred by such Ministers. Now, from the very beginning I was opposed to the Egyptian war, which might set Europe in a blaze at any moment, and which might lead to serious complications with the Sultan of Turkey, who, as Khalif, is the Pope of nearly a quarter of the population of India (many of whom doubtless regard the Mehndee as the Imam who is to restore the glories of Islam). Moreover, I was oppressed with the feeling that our recent humiliating reverses in three successive years, namely, the annihilation of a British force by Zulu savages at Isandula in 1879, the terrific defeat of General Burrows' brigade by the Afghans at Maiwand in 1880, and the complete defeat of Sir George Colley by the Boers in 1881, were signs of the Divine displeasure with us as a nation.

Anyhow, in 1882, an unchristian war, that might and ought to have been avoided, was ruthlessly entered into—a war that has proved a most dreary muddle, pregnant with wretched and melancholy events, and cheered by no sunshine beyond barren victories over barbarians. Moreover, no one can tell when it is to terminate, for the Arabs in their struggle for liberty seem to be determined to fight to the bitter end. The loss of so many brave officers in our futile military operations in Egypt is of itself most deplorable. Burns truly says—

> "Man's inhumanity to man > Makes countless thousands mourn."

But it is very sad to find the Lord's children so blinded by politics as to be advocates of this and other recent aggressive wars that of late years have stained our hands as a nation with blood. Such warlike enterprises, however commendable they may appear to many, can only be defended on the principles of Statecraft, and by departing from the holy maxims of our blessed Saviour, whose mission on earth was "peace, goodwill towards men;" and who declared, "Blessed are the peacemakers;" and whose inspired Apostle stated that "the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace;" and declared God to be "the Lord of Peace;" and exhorted the Hebrews to "follow peace with all men."

There can be no reasonable doubt what we ought to do, if we take the Bible for our standpoint to inquire into the matter. That oracle says, "Cease to do evil" (Isaiah i. 16). Now, we commenced doing evil by the bombardment of Alexandria, and we have continued doing evil in employing British troops to fight against a Mahommedan people who, Mr. Gladstone declared, were struggling for their berty. I maintain, therefore, that it is clear that ar first duty is to discontinue the course of evil- oing by entirely giving up all thoughts of besieging hartoum and putting an end to this wretched war, pecially as the object for which it was undertaken o longer exists. Our noble Bayard is dead, and ordon's black troops have disappeared from the ene. It is cruelty to our brave soldiers to coop em up in straw huts in the Soudan during the ven months of intense heat, as I fear that the orching blasts there will prove more destructive the lives and physique of our soldiers than even e spears and rifles of the Arabs.

To avoid a vast amount of needless suffering and rofitless carnage, and as England has really ustained no disgrace, having beaten the enemy in very encounter, and slain many thousands of rabs to boot, I do think that we ought to conduct dignified, calm, and honourable retreat from the oudan, fighting the Arabs only in self-defense hen attacked, and that we leave Egypt with as ttle delay as possible, and leave the Egyptians to anage their own affairs, which do not really cern us as much as most people say they do.

Doubtless, many of our soldiers would be killed y the sun in effecting a retreat to Upper Egypt; ut will not the casualties in the ranks be much reater by the seven months' sojourn in the Soudan? he friendly tribes, no doubt, require to be con- dered, but the distribution amongst them of a illion pounds, and an abundant supply of rifles d cannons and ammunition, might make it pretty raight between them and the Mehndee. But the ief concern ought to be to discontinue this wicked rife. However, if the war is to be carried on as oposed, then the people will rue it bitterly in the d, and perhaps Mr. Gladstone will be made the apegoat for their faults.

A clergyman's wife, the other day, objecting to y views, said, "But what will the world say?" he Christian question, however, ought to be, not hat the world will say, but what is right in the ght of God? Christian principle, rather than orldly expediency, ought to influence our conduct a nation; since I maintain that the same code of erals that is binding on us as individuals is also inding on us collectively as a nation.

"Your arguments," said one to me, "are good; ut they are impracticable." Others have replied my objections to aggressive wars by dilating on e good that has frequently resulted therefrom. y reply is that we must not do evil that good may me; that God often allows that to happen which e disapproves of, and by his matchless skill makes e wrath of man to praise Him by producing good t of evil. Hence it was that the atrocious selling Joseph as a slave was overruled by God to the reservation of a posterity to Jacob's seed, and the reatest crime ever committed by man, namely, the rucifixion of our Blessed Saviour was made sub- rvient to the salvation of countless millions of lievers, and of those dying as infants, whether e children of Pagans or Christians. I must not ow trespass further on your space than just to press a wish that a day for humiliation before od and confession of sin might be appointed by royal proclamation. S. Dewé White, Col.

"A PERPLEXING PROBLEM."

Sir,—Can you, or any of your contributors who ave written on "Commerce," and "Cheap Trad- g," offer a word that may guide me on a point at has often painfully exercised me? Ought a hristian who wishes to carry out the principles of e Gospel in all the details of life to purchase his oods at a co-operative store?

The common proverb, "Live and let live," and e more sacred precept known as the "Golden le," might seem to indicate that one ought, by ne's custom, to help to support one's neighbour, e local tradesman. On the other hand, it is lleged that the ordinary tradesman is a speculator ho does business on the credit system, making rge advances in kind in all directions, and that r many of these transactions he will get no return all from the customer who has given the order. hen "bad debts" constitute so serious a diminu- on from his profits that the tradesman has no ther chance of doing a lucrative business than to et all he can from his ready-money customers.

Thus, he cannot afford to allow them discount or give them quite such a good article as they could et at the stores for the same market price, nor, ndeed, are his prices quite the same to all his ustomers, but those who are supposed to be in the osition of gentlefolks are expected to be willing to business on somewhat less advantageous terms an their humbler neighbours.

Possibly this may not always be the case, but I peak as I have found it.

As a matter of fact, I have only very rarely gone to the stores, and on these occasions when the parcel has come I have felt like a smuggler receiving contraband goods, who dreads lest anyone should know of their arrival.

I am told that my scruples are morbid, and that I shall best consult the interests of society at large, and of trade itself, by doing as other excellent Christians do, and getting my provisions regularly at the stores, and that thus I shall help to bring retail trade into a more equitable and healthful condition.

A few words on the morality of this perplexing problem would be a help to me, and, perhaps, to others besides me. Dubitans.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. T. P. Sinel has joined Mr. H. Cook's mission ship Mystery, at Cherbourg. In a recent note he reports much eagerness to hear the word of life.

Mr. Catlin, of the Cow-cross Mission, will be pleased to go or send one of his helpers to conduct Gospel services in country towns and villages. Address, 17, Claremont-square, Pentonville, N.

Mr. J. H. Penfold, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded an eight days' mission in Park Hall, Barking, in connection with the Y.M.C.A. Several professed to have found the Saviour. The mission closed on Sunday evening, March 22, with a crowded house, when a thankoffering was collected for the Society.

Mr. and Mrs. C. King have conducted a week of special services at the Tryphenas Gospel mission, Bow Common. The meetings have been conducted in the manifested power of the Spirit of God. Many have been led to a saving knowledge of the truth, while those who know Him have been drawn nearer to the Master. W. H. P.

Morecambe.—In the Temporary Free Church of England a week's Gospel services have been held, and have been well attended. Many openly state that they have received more light than they ever before received. The pure Gospel has been clearly set forth. The Mission closed March 25, and was conducted by Bishop Myers and Rev. G. H. Jones, Free Church of England.

Dorchester.—Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wiggan have held a fortnight's Gospel Mission in Dorchester, on Sunday, March 22. Durngate-street Chapel has been crowded to excess at many of the week-night meetings, and on Sunday, for the last service, every available space was packed. The church has been greatly strengthened and encouraged, and between 30 and 40 persons have professed faith in Jesus.

Edinboro' Castle.—Much interest was awakened by the presence and the speech of several Oxford undergraduates at the Edinboro' Castle last Lord's Day. Hon. W. T. Rice gave the address in the afternoon. In the evening there were short but impressive exhortations from Messrs. Ralt, Symonds, and Heathcote. Many remained for the after-meeting, and some professed to have found peace through believing.

Newcastle-on-Tyne.—Since the opening of the new premises of the Y.M.C.A. in this city, there have been uninterrupted mission services carried on. In this work the Association has had the co-operation of Capt. Robertson, R.A., at present stationed here. Early in the year four halls were opened for Sunday services all within a few yards of the Y.M.C.A., accommodating close on 3000 people. On Saturday week a profitable all-day meeting was held, preparatory to a mission by Mr. H. Thorne, which is now being held.

Hyde Park Hall.—A two weeks' Gospel Mission was held at Hyde Park Hall, and the Metropolitan Music Hall, Edgware-road, from March 1 to 17, by Mr. Charles Cook and his helpers. At the thanksgiving service on Sunday, March 22, many briefly testified to their having given their hearts to Christ for the first time, while others have been restored from a course of backsliding. Mr. Cook writes to us that it has been a season of unprecedented blessing; he and others have been constantly occupied in dealing with anxious inquirers.

Westbury-on-Trym, near Bristol.—A Gospel mission is being carried on in this place. During the year about 260 services in all have been held, including open-air meetings, children's meetings, cottage meetings, &c. There have been occasional meetings at the Southmead Steam Laundry, and last summer five weeks' special services were held in a Gospel tent, which were productive of great blessing. There is reason to hope that a real work is going on in the hearts of some of the little ones. Prayer is asked for a blessing upon this work.

J. H. W.

Mr. Charles Inglis has been holding meetings for nearly two months past in Dublin. Not only have many heard the word of life, but Christians have been refreshed, backsliders restored, and not a few of the unsaved have been brought to a knowledge of the truth.

Leigh, Tonbridge.—We had the chapel very full on March 19 and 20, to hear Mr. and Mrs. C. King, who followed up a twelve days' mission of M. Ogram Webb. The singing and earnest addresses of Mr. Webb are much esteemed in these parts and always well attended; but "the voice from the stage" drew larger numbers, and many of a different class. John Maxted.

All Soul's Church, Langham-place.—In connection with the recent special evangelistic mission at this church, two testimony meetings were held last week, one for women and the other for men. There was a full attendance at the former, and many of those present told the circumstances of their conversion. Some had not been inside a church for years until they were induced to attend the late mission. At both meetings there were many expressions of gratitude for blessing received through attendance at the Bible-classes, Temperance and mothers' meetings, &c.

Ashford, Kent.—Evangelistic services, lasting eleven days, were held in the Baptist Chapel, Marsh-street, Ashford, by Messrs. Mateer and Parker. Each evening the word was with power, as evidenced by those who went into the inquiry-room, and there sought and found the Saviour. The closing services on Sunday, March 8, were richly blest. In the evening the chapel was densely packed in every part. Mr. Mateer preached a very powerful sermon from the words, "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation," and many were led to instant decision for Christ. Altogether the mission has been a very blessed one.

Kingstown, co. Dublin.—Kingstown being one of the seaboard places included in the programme of a nine days' mission, there has been during the period a very notable work, commencing daily with a morning prayer-meeting, and followed by an afternoon Bible-reading in Christ Church, and a mission service in the large Mariners' Church each evening; the mission preacher conducting the gatherings has been Rev. F. A. Lillingston, M.A., Vicar of St. Barnabas, Holloway, London. The day meetings have been largely attended, and each night the Mariners' Church has been filled by an attentive audience of all classes, the preacher's great powers and remarkable simplicity of language, joined to an evident burning desire for the salvation of souls, producing a marked effect upon all present. With every gift which a mission preacher should possess to fit him for his work, Mr. Lillingston knows nothing and preaches nothing but Christ and Him crucified, and many will have cause to be thankful for his visit to Kingstown. The inquiry-meetings were fully appreciated by numbers who remained behind, and altogether the mission has been greatly blessed.

NEWCASTLE.—Canon Lloyd recently delivered a series of half-hour addresses to business men and others in the Guildhall. There were large audiences, which listened with the deepest interest to the Canon's earnest words on such topics as "Doubt," "Manliness," "Independence," "Courage." At the close the speaker said he would be glad to meet and converse with any who had mental or spiritual difficulties.

EVANGELISATION IN SUBURBAN PARIS.—In our last issue, in a paragraph from Pastor Perronoud under this title, reference was made to a "Mission in Belleville." Our readers will, of course, have understood that the effort referred to was altogether distinct from the well-known Belleville Mission of Miss de Broen. Dr. Ker, who labours in conjunction with Miss de Broen, writes:—"M. Perronoud is the colleague of M. Robin, pasteur of the Protestant Established Church of France in Belleville; Miss de Broen's Mission is entirely amongst the nominal Roman Catholic population."

WORKING GIRLS IN KINGSLAND.—Dear Sir,—May I appeal to your readers for help for the factory girls during the Easter holidays, and also to provide a weekly tea for them on Saturday evenings? These are times of terrible temptation for them; many, alas! spend their evenings in the low theatres and music halls. One pitiful case came under our notice only last week of a girl who traces all her misery to a visit to one of these places. We are anxious to provide tea for them on each night of the holidays, and on Easter Monday; at all events to take them out for the afternoon.—Yours faithfully, E. Robarts, Hon. Supt.

MILITARY CHURCH IN ROME.

IN our last issue we gave a deeply interesting sketch of the work carried on by Signor Cappellini, among Italian soldiers. We have received a further statement prepared by a lately appointed committee, the English representatives of which are Admiral Fishbourne and Mr. J. E. Mathieson, of Mildmay. It is earnestly desired to provide a suitable building for the purpose of Signor Cappellini's Military Church. In supporting an appeal on this behalf the Committee say:—

During thirteen years of unremitting and zealous labour by the evangelist, more than 1000 soldiers have left the Church of Rome, and have been admitted as members of the Evangelical Military Church. Yet this fact, important as it is, only represents a part of the work which has been accomplished, and of its far-reaching influence. When Signor Cappellini preaches to a hundred soldiers he is making known the Gospel to the representatives of a hundred different towns and villages, who, when their three years' term of service has expired, return to their homes in all parts of Italy, taking the Holy Scriptures with them. Centres of evangelisation have thus actually been originated in several localities on the mainland, as well as in Sicily and Sardinia. The mission-hall which he has had the use of for some years from Rev. Henry Piggott is at a great distance from most of the barracks. He has long been anxious to purchase a building in which to have a hall for the meetings, with a reading-room and class-room for the non-commissioned officers, who receive lessons in French, English, book-keeping, &c., and thus many have been attracted to attend the meetings. A little over 17,000 francs has already been received. A block of buildings is now for sale in a good, central position, in which a suitable mission-hall could be erected, while leaving nearly the whole of the existing apartments untouched; so that the rents would ensure an annual income which would go far towards rendering the work self-supporting. The sum required is £10,200. There is as yet no other purchaser in the field, but we cannot tell how long this may continue to be the case. The Committee earnestly commend this matter to the kind consideration of Christian friends. Further information can be obtained on application to either of the following: Signor Cav. Luigi Cappellini, 14, Pozzo delle Cornacchie, Rome; and Mr. J. E. Mathieson, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, London, N.

A COTTAGE HOME.—Miss Johnson, Ventnor House, Canterbury, writes:—Now that spring is again cheering us, I would remind ladies and others labouring in the interest of poor needlewomen and other women and girls toiling in London warehouses and shops, that I am ready to receive such as need change and rest, at the nominal charge of from 2s. to 4s. a week. Last year 46 benefited by a few weeks' stay, returning strengthened and refreshed to their work; their enjoyment of the country is beyond description, and I have every reason to feel thankful and encouraged in the work.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

Miss Sarah F. Smiley has been licensed by Bishop Doane, of Albany, U.S.A., to read and explain the Scriptures "in such parishes as she is invited to teach in by the rectors."

President Cleveland.—The small Bible upon which the oath of inauguration was administered was one which the President's mother gave him when he left home as a boy, and was used on this occasion at his special request.

A French Celebration.—It is proposed by the Society of French Protestant History, that October 18, the bicentenary of the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, shall be celebrated by earnest prayer that God would give to France the light that she so much needs, and that justice and righteousness may reign in the land.

The English Grand Lodge of Freemasons has separated from the French Lodge because the latter has cancelled "belief in God" as one of the conditions of admission. Many explanations have been given and received, but the Grand Master of the English Lodge, the Prince of Wales, has declared that faith in God was one of the essential bases of English Freemasonry.—Témoin.

Italian Evangelisation.—The fourteenth annual report of the Free Italian Church, just published, details the various steps in the present Union negotiations between this Church and the Waldenses with efforts of a wider confederation between all denominations. The year's progress is satisfactory, and the report abounds with details of a good sound evangelical work carried on in all the cities where this Church operates.

Lord Radstock in India.—Writing a friend in this country, an Allahabad correspondent says:—We have just had Lord Radstock on a three days' visit. Believers have been greatly helped through him, and it is quite evident the Lord had a very special purpose in leading him to India. . . Church of England people stood wholly aloof. . . The quiet Conferences in my house (Lord Radstock lived with me), after breakfast and dinner every day, were even more delightful than the open, believers' meetings. . .

Lisbon.—While attending the recent International Postal Congress here in his official capacity as Secretary of the Post-office, Mr. S. A. Blackwood preached in the Presbyterian Church on several Sabbaths as well as week-days. Besides the regular congregation and other English residents, there were present many of the foreign delegates with their families. He also preached through an interpreter to the Portuguese congregation in connection with the Presbyterian Church. Considerable blessing is believed to have accompanied Mr. Blackwood's earnest ministrations.

Mormons at Salt Lake.—We are assured by a trustworthy correspondent from Salt Lake, says the Boston Congregationalist, that the Mormon Church is evidently at its wit's end, and knows not which way to turn. The pressure resulting from the late convictions for polygamy is almost unendurable. Long immunity had made both leaders and people bold and reckless, but now dire consternation is universal. There is little room for doubt that if District Attorney Dickson and Judge Zane are sustained, by midsummer the Mormon Church will succumb and obey the law.

Slavery in Burmah.—The most mischievous feature of the Burmese, in common with other Indo-Chinese Governments, is the recognised claim of the Sovereign to the services of the whole adult male population, which is exacted to an incredible extent. Burmah shares with Siam and Cambodia the disgrace of having in her midst a vile system of slavery. Many of the victims of this system are hereditary slaves, such as those condemned to serve at the Pagodas; others are bond slaves, who could obtain their liberty by paying their debts. The Kachyens and Red Karens still carry on a shameful traffic in kidnapped captives.—The Times.

St. Louis.—The Evangelist of this city, referring to the letter by Mr. Henry Varley which appeared in our columns, says: "While there is much to deplore in the apathy of Christian people for the Master's service, there is no such apostacy as his letter represents among the evangelical churches of this city. In all of them there has been a hopeful interest, and more than usual Christian activity during the winter. There were some, and not a few, who enjoyed Mr. Varley's Bible-readings and were profited by them. They will deeply regret his unjust animadversions upon the churches, and upon men who are respected and beloved as able, faithful, and earnest ministers of the Gospel, and whose work is approved of God."

City Mission, New York.—Once a year the indefatigable secretary of the New York City Mission Society, Mr. Lewis E. Jackson, publishes an edition of his "Christian Work." In addition to the report of the City Mission operations for the previous twelve months, this pamphlet contains a list of the most important statistics, as well as of all churches, chapels, missions, and charitable and benevolent organisations in the city. In some way or other an effort is made by some branch of Christ's church to reach all classes and conditions of men. Many nationalities are to be found dwelling within our city limits, and yet if they will, they may almost all hear, "every man in his own tongue," the glad news of salvation. Two pages of the pamphlet are devoted to a record of "Woman's Work," and give the names and objects of sixty-one different societies managed by women.—Christian Intelligencer.

Slavery in Dongola.—Mr. Cameron the late special correspondent of The Standard wrote: "Dongola is a nest of slavery. The trade goes on under our noses. I know, on the best authority, that twenty-five slaves were very recently sent down to Wady Halfa for private sale to the Egyptian officials and troops there. In one of his engagements with the rebels over thirty negroes were captured by the Mudir, and the delight of these was unbounded when, instead of being sold into slavery according to the usual custom, they were turned into soldiers. All the work here is done by slaves, and the town literally swarms with negro slave girls, who, of course, are gradually drafted on to Lower Egypt, and replaced by fresh arrivals from the interior. To render slave dealing again illegal in the Soudan will not, however, put an end to the traffic, which will never entirely cease until slavery in the Mahometan countries bordering the Mediterranean is entirely abolished.

MR. SPENCER WALTON AT BRIGHTON.

THIS evangelist concluded on Monday, March 23, a week's mission at the Emmanuel Church Lecture-room, Hove. The presence and power of the Holy Ghost were abundantly manifested at all the meetings. The meeting on Saturday night was for men only, and was a time of much heart-searching as to the need of entire surrender to God. The afternoon Bible-readings were well attended, and were most helpful.

On the 25th, Mr. Walton commenced a week's mission at the Hove Town Hall.

SYRIAN ORPHANAGE IN JERUSALEM.—We have already stated that Miss Hue, Merton House, Teddington, S.W., gladly receives old postage stamps to be sold for the benefit of this institution. She desires to say that she will be glad to supply responsible friends with collecting-cards.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—Funds are urgently needed for carrying on the work of distributing Bibles for the bedrooms and libraries to the commercial rooms of hotels throughout the kingdom. Office, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C. Secretary, John Wells Thatcher.

STUDENTS IN EDINBURGH.—A reunion of the students who have received blessing in connection with the recent meetings was held on Saturday, March 21, in the large saloon of the Waterloo Hotel, when 300 to 400 students were present. They were addressed by Principal Cairns, Rev. Dr. Valentine, Principal of the Agra Medical Missionary College, Professors Charteris, Simpson, Drummond, and others. At the close of the meeting the students formed themselves into an association for the purpose of carrying on evangelistic services in various parts of the kingdom. Upwards of 100 students volunteered for this important work. Prayer is very earnestly requested on behalf of this important movement.

THE EAST LONDON Y.M.C.A. is situated in a dense population of young men, for whom there is no other branch of the Y.M.C.A. The fact of its being contiguous to the East and West India, Victoria, Millwall, and New South Docks is ample evidence for its necessity as a centre of Christian effort for the spiritual, social, intellectual, and physical welfare of the thousands of young men employed in these docks, factories, and other large establishments in the neighbourhood. Since the formation of this Association a debt of £60 has been entailed, which we trust our friends will help us to clear off. I will gladly forward particulars and prospectuses on application.

Notes on Daily Readings.

These notes on the chapters of Scripture arranged for the "Bible and Prayer Union" are not intended in any way to interfere with the "Monthly Notes." Those who desire to become members of the Union should communicate with Rev. T. Richardson, St. Benet's Vicarage, Mile End-road, London, E.

APRIL 2.—LUKE XX.

v. 4.—"The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men?"—The baptism of John was a most explicit testimony to our Lord's Messiahship, and carried with it the weight of strong conviction that He was the Son of God, so that this question really answered the inquiry of the pharisees, as well as silenced their cavils. It is said in chap. vii. 36, "the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of Him." This question, therefore, was a sharp home-thrust upon their consciences, and their reply "we cannot tell," plainly indicated their hollowness and deceit.

v. 18.—"Whosoever shall fall upon that stone shall be broken. . . ."—The first clause speaks of the passive operation of unbelief, while the Gospel is being preached; the latter clause speaks about the active agency of Christ when the end shall have come, and the preaching of the Gospel shall have merged into the act of judgment. In a lonely Highland valley, beneath a tall black cliff, there lies on the greensward, that creeps round its base, a huge rock, that has fallen from the face of the cliff. A shepherd was passing beneath it; and suddenly, when the finger of God's will touched it, and rent it from its ancient bed in the everlasting rock, it came down, leaping and bounding from pinnacle to pinnacle—and it fell; and the man that was beneath it is there now! "Ground to powder." That is not my illustration—that is Christ's. Therefore, I say unto you, since all that stand against Him shall be swept utterly away, make Him the foundation on which you build.—Dr. A. Maclaren.

v. 38.—"He is not a God of the dead, but of the living."—Two important truths are taught us here, the fact of life after death prior to resurrection, and of the first resurrection at the end of the present age. Those who now live unto God are spoken of as "the children of God," and "the children of the resurrection." Bright and blessed contrasts to "the children of this world."

vv. 39-44.—David's Son and David's Lord.—Note how Christ in these verses fastens attention on Himself as the Lord of glory, and intimates that He is about to take his place, not on the throne of David, but on the throne of God. This great truth, while it fills the friends of Christ with joy, brings confusion to his foes. The distinct promise made in Luke i. 32 is meanwhile deferred, not set aside, as see Rev. iii. 21.

APRIL 3.—LUKE XXI.

vv. 1-4.—"A certain poor widow."—These words sketch a story of singular pathos. "It was one pauper widow." We can see her coming alone, as if ashamed to mingle with the crowd of rich givers; ashamed to have her offering seen; ashamed, perhaps, to bring it; a widow in the garb of a desolate mourner, her condition and bearing that of a "pauper." He observed her closely and read her truly. She held in her hand only the smallest coins, "two perutahs," but it was "all her living," and of this she now made humble offering to God. He spake not to her words of encouragement, for she walked by faith; He offered not promise of return, for her reward was in heaven. She knew not that any had seen it, for the knowledge of eyes turned on her, even his, would have flushed with shame the pure cheek of her love; and any word, conscious notice, or promise, would have marred and turned aside the rising incense of her sacrifice. But to all time has it remained in the Church, like the perfume of Mary's alabaster that filled the house, this deed of self-denying sacrifice. More, far more, than the great gifts of their "superfluity," which the rich cast in, was, and is to all time, the gift of absolute self-surrender and sacrifice, tremblingly offered by the solitary mourner. Would that always its lesson had been cherished, not theoretically, but practically, by the Church. How much richer would have been her "treasury," twice blessed in gift and givers?—Edersheim.

vv. 5-36.—The prophecy on Olivet.—Note in this chapter Luke's characteristic references to Gentile aspects of prophetic truth. In v. 24, we have "the times of the Gentiles" referred to as covering the period of Jewish dispensation, and so also "Jerusalem trodden down of the Gentiles," the Jews being "led away captive into all nations." In v. 29, we find not only the budding of the Jewish fig-tree spoken of as one of the concomitants of the Lord's return, but also "of all the trees," indicating blessing on the Gentile world, as well as on the Jew in connection with that event. Then in vv. 34-36, the Gentile Church represented by the disciples, is specially exhorted to watchfulness and prayer, in order to being accounted worthy to escape the judgment which must fall on the Anti-Christian world.

v. 18.—"I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come."—The phrase in Luke does not import some future dispensation or state of things about to be above or below, in visible power, but an imminent coming of God's kingdom really and truly here. The other Gospels connect it with the future; Luke speaks of what was to be made good shortly—"righteousness, and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost."—Kelly.

vv. 31-34.—"Simon, Simon, behold, Satan. . ."—The mention of Satan's part, in respect of the disciples, seems to be suggested by the abrupt departure of Judas, in which Satan had played a decisive part. The tempter is present; he has gained the mastery of Judas; he threatens the other disciples also; he is preparing to attack Jesus Himself. And the danger to each is in proportion to the greater or lesser amount of alloy which his heart contains. This is why Jesus more directly addresses Peter. By the address, Simon, twice repeated, He alludes to his natural character, and puts him on his guard against that presumption which is its dominant characteristic. Satan asks the right to put the twelve to the proof; and he undertakes to prove that at bottom the best among the disciples is but a Judas. It appears from the intercession of Jesus that the desire of Satan was granted, but while the enemy was spying out the weak side of the disciples to destroy them, Jesus was watching and praying to parry the blow, or at least prevent it from being mortal to any of them. This saying of Jesus is one of those which lift the curtain that covers the invisible world from view.—Godet.

v. 35.—"When I sent you forth . . . lacked ye any thing?"

"He was better to me than all my hopes,
He was better than all my fears;
He made a bridge of my broken works,
And a rainbow of my tears.
The billows that guarded my sea-girt path
Carried my Lord on their crest; [march,
When I dwell on the days of my wilderness
I can lean on his love for the rest."
Anna Shipton.

APRIL 5.—LUKE XXIII.

v. 8.—"When Herod saw Jesus, he was exceeding glad."—The powerful seldom meet Jesus; and are usually the last to know the things of the kingdom of God. The Christian faith was not originally propagated by worldly rulers. Wretched are they who, like Herod, seek in Christ nought but the gratification of sense. Such gladness as his is not profitable.—Bengel.

v. 11.—"Herod . . . set him at nought."—He did not think Jesus of sufficient importance to trouble himself about Him, whatever accusations the priests might make. He thought our Lord's wisdom and power had departed. The elder Herod feared too soon (Matt. ii. 16). This one, when Christ's kingdom was close at hand, is now self-secure. The way of the world is perverse.—Ibid.

v. 34.—"Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them."—This is Christ's first word upon the cross. There are seven such words in the four Gospels. The Saviour endured his crucifixion in silence mostly; but his seven utterances contain a recapitulation of doctrine designed to profit us in our last hours. For his thoughts are turned to his enemies, to a repentant sinner, to his mother, to one of his disciples, and to his heavenly Father. These seven words may also be compared with the seven petitions in the Lord's prayer. Their very order conceals mysteries; from which may be illustrated the steps of every persecution, affliction, and struggle of the Christian.—Ibid.

vv. 39-43.—The conversion of the Dying Thief.—In the dying robber we have the first and most conspicuous instance on Gospel record of a sinner's conversion. He is the first of the first; his case precedes all precedents. When our spirits stand with John on Patmos, we see the armies in heaven riding after the conquering Christ. When we stand with Luke on Calvary we see the man who rode first in that procession. Mark that man—what he is, a thief; where he is, on a cross; when he speaks, when dying; to whom, to the dying Christ. Next mark his prayer; and next, the answer to it. . . . Let us think of the old commentary on the fact that this is the one man mentioned in Holy Writ as saved when dying. "Only one, that none may presume; one, that none need despair . . ."—Dr. Stanford.

APRIL 6—LUKE XXIV.

v. 17.—"As ye walk, and are sad."—Who can tell what power that sadness had in drawing the man of sorrows to their side? It was to Mary, weeping in her lonely grief; to Peter, drowned in tears of penitence, that he had already appeared. And now it is to these two disciples in their sorrow that he joins them himself, so early did the risen Saviour assume the gracious office of comforting those that mourn, of binding up the broken heart.—Dr. Hanna.

v. 25.—"O fools, and slow of heart to believe."—Our blessed Lord's disciples were reproved for not perceiving the force of the Scriptures in the same way that they were for not understanding his own words; not as implying in them slowness of reason, but of faith. It is not that Holy Scripture is against reason, or independent of reason, but that it requires faith together with reason to explain, and enter into the divine fulness of its meaning. Truth is the essential and primary requisite, without which reason is quite unavailing, and unable to proceed one step.—Prof. I. Williams.

v. 35.—"He was known unto them in breaking of bread."—It was not the Lord's Supper, but Jesus made use of that act of breaking the bread significantly, which the Lord's Supper brings before us continually. In it bread is broken—the sign of his death. The death of Jesus is the only ground of safety for a sinful man. This is the true way of knowing Jesus for a Christian. Jesus is dead and risen, and so must be known, if He is to be known aright. Note his immediate disappearance after He was thus made known. We walk by faith, not by sight.—Kelly.

APRIL 7.—JOHN I.

vv. 1-18.—The Prologue.—The first thing that strikes one on examining the paragraph is a certain subtle affinity to the first chapter of Genesis, which is an introduction to the story of the first man, as this is an introduction to the story of the Second Man, the Lord from heaven. The great words are the same in both cases, though they have evidently deepened in their later use—the Beginning, God, the Word ("God said"), All Things, Light, Darkness, Life, to Be, to Become. While the evangelist begins with creation, he goes very far beyond, and consequently uses many words that were not needed in the Book of Genesis, but are indispensable to his purpose, such as these—Law, Grace, Truth, Faith, Sons of God, and so on.—Dr. Culross.

v. 39.—"He saith unto them, Come and see."—Come! we catch here already the key-note of all his preaching and doctrine. Behold—the Baptist had said—and now they shall behold. The challenge to come and see, was an ordinary manner of speech in common life; but it was, in some circumstances, used with great solemnity, as of the grave of Lazarus (John xi. 34); with great majesty in the Canticles (iii. 11), concerning the magnificence of King Solomon; as in the Revelation (vi. 1, 3, 5, 7) of the heavenly visions; and in the Psalms (lxvi. 5; xlvi. 9), concerning the wonderful works of God. They tarried with Him, as St. John adds with emphasis, and saw all they might see in Him, his glory full of grace and truth; they tasted and saw that the Lord was gracious (Ps. xxxiv. 9); they beheld in faith the heaven open upon the Son of Man. All this the Lord promised them in that lowly-sublime invitation, which conceals his majesty, yet permits some rays of it to pierce through: Come, and ye shall see, experience, receive, and find all that ye seek.—Stier.

APRIL 8.—JOHN II.

v. 4.—"Mine hour is not yet come."—This "yet" was the bow in the dark cloud. It was the silver lining to the darkness of an apparent refusal. It was the rock for faith to rest upon, bidding the soul hope and wait and watch. The Lord often deals thus with his people. He leaves us a "yet" in the midst of all that seems against us. There is some precious promise, some past mercy experienced, some present blessing enjoyed, something of mercy even in judgment, that gives the soul encouragement. It lays hold of this and hopes. It stays itself upon the Lord.—F. Whitfield.

vv. 14-17.—The cleansing the Temple.—How great is the contrast between the manifestation of his lovingkindness before his mother and disciples at the humble Galilean wedding-festival, and that of his judicial severity before the Jews and their rulers in the temple at Jerusalem! The glory that was full of grace was also full of truth. He who came to diffuse joy, is come also to fan the threshing-floor, and vigorously to correct all that is ungodly in God's people and God's house. . . . The messenger sent before his face had prepared his way. Now came to his Temple the Lord whom they had sought there in all their worship, the Angel of the Covenant whom they desired, but could not abide the day of his coming.—Stier.

THE HEATHEN & MOHAMMEDAN WORLD.

SELDOM has Exeter Hall been more crowded than on Tuesday week. Hundreds who could not gain entrance repaired to the theatre of King's College, which was also closely packed, and hundreds more went away. The most remarkable feature in the audience was the number of young men which it contained. They were of all classes. Some fifty undergraduates from Cambridge filled the left side of the front platform. Highbury and Islington sent strong contingents. Scores of young professional men, clerks, shopmen, and working men were to be seen all over the hall and on the platform, which was filled to the back. Even the organ gallery was invaded. The great gallery at the other end of the hall was filled as we have very rarely seen it filled before. In the ladies' gallery, Lady Cairns, Lady Kennaway, Lady Victoria Buxton, Miss Marsh, and other well-known friends were present. The audience was not only exceptionally large, it was also exceptionally attentive. The tone of earnestness which was clearly perceptible in the speeches, was, to some degree, caught from the meeting itself. Most of those present were in their places a good half-hour before seven o'clock struck.

At two minutes before seven, Lord Cairns appeared, attended by the Rev. F. E. Wigram (hon. sec.), Canon Hoare, and other speakers. Lord Cairns looked well, although suffering from cold, which rather marred the effect of his fine voice. He spoke with the almost stately dignity and strong earnestness—a rare combination—which is, perhaps, the special characteristic of his oratory. His lordship's description of General Gordon, as having lived animated by a missionary spirit, and having died a martyr's death, called forth a tremendous response from the meeting. Canon Hoare, whom Lord Cairns introduced as his own and the Society's old friend, spoke earnestly and affectionately. There was something very pathetic about his reference to his son, Rev. Joseph Hoare, in China, and the cheerful determination with which, amid bereavement, isolation, and difficulties, he was carrying on his work. Mr. Moule, the Principal of Ridley Hall, was received with hearty cheers, especially by the Cambridge contingent. His speech may, without any disparagement of the others, be described as having struck the true key-note of the meeting. Its special object was not to recount missionary triumphs nor to do honour either to individuals or societies but to discuss and try to realise, in the presence of the Master, the overwhelming needs of the heathen world. Rev. P. Ireland Jones, the Vice-Principal of Ridley, who is himself on the eve of departure for the mission-field in India, spoke a few earnest words.

The four missionary speakers were listened to with deep interest and attention. Mr. Pearson's recital, in simple, unadorned style, of his connection with General Gordon in the Sôudan, of Gordon's unaffected piety, of their prayer-meetings and Bible-readings together in that palace at Khartoum, most probably the scene of his murder, was extremely touching, and eloquently corroborated the Chairman's description of his missionary life and martyr death. Rev. E. A. Stuart's speech evoked more enthusiasm than any other during the evening. His references to Gordon and his appeal to the young men around him produced a tremendous effect. A remarkable evidence of the speaker's power was noticeable in the fact that, although he spoke almost last, scarcely anyone left the hall until he sat down.

Before the meeting, fifty undergraduates assembled at 5 p.m. for tea in the Council-room, Mr. and Mrs. Barton, and Mr. and Mrs. Moule presiding. There were briefly addressed by Mr. Wigram and Mr. Eugene Stock. At the same hour nearly three hundred City men were entertained at tea in the Parlour at the Gymnasium by Mr. Robert Williams and Mr. Herbert Arbuthnot. The overflow-meeting held, by the kindness of Dr. Wace, at King's College, was thronged. Mr. Robert Williams, jun., presided, and Mr. Moule, General Haig, Mr. Hughes, Mr. Piper, Mr. Townsend, and Mr. Pearson re-delivered their speeches to an enthusiastic audience.—Record.

Coote, followed by a heart-stirring testimony from about twenty-five policemen and blue-jackets, to the preciousness of a living Saviour and his keeping power. A handsome Bible was presented to the Association by Mr. H. L. Emmanuel, T.C., and Sir H. Drummond Wolfe sent a donation of £5 5s.

Give the Children a Chance for Life!

Our overcrowded English cities teem with young life needing to be transplanted if it is to be saved from ruin.

Our Colonies require, more than anything else, to be replenished by the importation of boys and girls, carefully trained in industrious and virtuous ways.

Will the readers of "The Christian" encourage us to persevere in the work of rescuing, training, and emigrating destitute and orphan little ones?

£8 - 10 - 0 will pay the entire cost of outfit, passage-money, &c., for one boy or girl emigrated to Canada, and thereby in all probability saved from untold perils.

£102 will defray all expenses for 12 children.

Or £8 - 10 - 0 will pay for one.

Who will help, and help quickly?

Please reply to Dr. T. J. BARNARDO,

18 & 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

OF WEEKLY CASES.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "The Christian," WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

OBSTINATE THROAT AND BRONCHIAL AFFECTION.—CASE of Mrs. E. TOMKINS.

This case was brought under my notice about two years since. Diseases of the lungs and throat had been very prevalent in the family.

The patient's first symptoms were weakness and aching in the neck, with relaxed throat. A troublesome cough followed, which had become exhausting from its severity, distracting the head, and accompanied with heavy, difficult muco-purulent expectoration :—pains in the breast became troublesome, and were unrelieved by various rubbings of turpentine and other applications; weakness of the voice and extreme general debility. Homœopathic and allopathic remedies had all failed to effect relief, until she applied to me.

In one month there was decided improvement, which increased after the use of prescription for gargle, and embrocation, tonics, &c. The patient continued with the balsam in manner specially directed. The correspondence lasted through the year and part of the next in consequence of her leaving off medicine too early, and removing her residence from Whitchurch to Dundry during the prevalence of bleak winds, which caused a slight relapse, from which she speedily recovered.

Four months ago (I am noting particulars of this case in February) I received a letter, five months after her finally discontinuing my treatment, in which she says:—

"It is my duty to acknowledge the great good you have done me. I never expected to be well again. I am now strong and well, and advise anyone suffering with weak chest or throat, bronchitis, and any obstinate lung disease to write to you. Make any use of my case you please.—Yours thankfully, ELIZA TOMKINS, Prospect House, Dundry, near BRISTOL."

I venture to say that all the usually prescribed means would have utterly failed in this case, which (humanly speaking) is one of the most obstinate and unconquerable in character.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

"MANNA CAKE."

Children take it readily; they do not suspect its properties; they like its sweet, strong flavour. Truly termed by an Agent, "The Children's Friend." Manna Cake is the mildest and yet the most certain in action of all aperients; it does not gripe, and leaves no after constipation. A singularly mild, pleasant, and efficacious substitute for Castor Oil.

From W. H. HAYWARD, Chemist, Trowbridge:—"A Physician in the West of England says he gave Calomel and Jalap in repeated doses without effect, but a Manna Cake acted almost immediately."

Ask for Manna Cake, price 1½d. per cake, or 1s. 3d. per doz. of any chemist or medicine vendor. Wholesale of BARCLAY'S; EDWARDS; HOVENDEN'S; NEWBERY'S; MAY ROBERTS; SANGER & SONS; SUTTON & CO.; &c., &c

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

(UNABRIDGED).

The special features of this Edition are the NEW TRANSLATION, Revision, and Extension of the PROPER NAMES OF THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS, with their meanings in the Original Languages. The Twelve following exquisite Steel Plate Engravings:—

Samaria.
Elisha's Fountain, Jericho.
Rephidim.
Damascus.
Mount Tabor.
Tyre.
Hebron.
Jerusalem from the South.
Shechem—Sychar.
Tiberias.
Bethany.
Athens.

And Six beautifully-coloured Maps.

The Rev. J. L. PORTER, D.D., Professor of Biblical Criticism, speaking of the Steel Plate Engravings, says:—

"I have examined with care the views for Biblical Illustration. . . . The Engravings are very beautiful. In clearness, accuracy, and general effect, they surpass, I think, any I have seen. The places represented are all familiar to me; and I have been particularly struck by the fidelity with which your artist has reproduced Frith's admirable photographs."—J. L. PORTER.

"It is beautifully got up, carefully edited, and all has been done to make the work as useful as possible. Every Christian home ought to have a copy.—Oldham Chronicle.

Also being published in 18 Monthly Parts at Sixpence each.

A 5s. CHEAP EDITION of the above work may be had, without the Plates and Maps.

CONTENTS.

THE HEART:
A broken heart.
A new heart.
A clean heart.
A perfect heart.
A heart kept.
An enlarged heart.
An untroubled heart.

THE HANDS:
Clean hands.
The hand restrained.
Diligent hands.
Strong hands.

THE EYES:
A single eye.
Undistorted sight.
An eye observant of God's ways.
The eye searching God's Word.
The eye turned from temptation.
The eye of calm courage.
The unselfish eye.

THE EARS:
Hear the Son!
Hearing only for God.
Hearing aright.

THE LIPS:
Purified lips.
Watched lips.
Opened lips.
The lip of prayer.
The lip of praise.
The lip of truth.
The lip of wisdom.

THE FEET:
Walking in God's ways.
Walking circumspectly.
Walking perseveringly.

"It is a prettily printed manual, compiled by the worthy incumbent of Christ Church, Pau. He justly as well as quaintly claims three P's as descriptive of his purpose. He intended to be personal, particular, and practical. And he has certainly succeeded. He starts from the fact that we are saved for service; and his suggestions are founded on the certainty that He who has saved us will help us to serve. Busy folk will find here a thought for every day connected with the service of the body. Each week is devoted to a particular part; beginning with the heart and ending with the feet. The compendium has, it will be perceived, a distinct character of its own; and those who use it can hardly fail to find it edifying."
Christian Leader, March 26.

MARRIAGE AND HOME.

A Volume of Friendly Counsels to the Newly Married.

A very appropriate Present for the Wedding Day: and equally suitable as a Gift on the arrival of the Bride and Bridegroom at Home.

"A Wedding-gift, beautifully got up. A Casket which contains within many precious pearls. It is all we could wish such a gift to be."—Our Own Fireside.

"A gem, both in print and binding; and full of wholesome counsel to those just about to enter upon the battle of life. This is an admirable Wedding Gift-book."
Gospel Magazine.

"One of the daintiest little volumes we have seen for a long time. Most tastefully printed, and full of wise counsel and Christian teaching. There is certainly no better book for a bridal present."—The Freeman.

"This is a gem to be placed on the table of newly-married people. And if homes are modelled on the fashion here indicated, then will happy and pious families be multiplied, and be at once the honour and joy of our land. Its exterior is the perfection of taste and delicacy. It has our heartiest recommendation."
British Messenger.

LAMB AND FLAG
RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION,
10, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

The many calls daily made on Christian benevolence have for some years kept me silent, but the time has now come when I must ask for help.

Larger premises are absolutely required for the increased work of this School and Mission, and I cannot, without making the facts known, continue to turn away from our doors the many boys and girls who are eagerly seeking admission, at the dangerous age of 14 and upwards. Will some of those who are blessed with means help me to raise £1,500? This would provide the accommodation needed to gather in the wanderers.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged School has taken for the sixth year consecutively, the largest number of prizes for long service and good conduct at the hands of the Ragged School Union.

Contributions will be thankfully received by J. C. Sherrard, Hon. Director and Treasurer, 7, Oxford-square, Hyde-park.

GEORGE YARD RAGGED SCHOOLS.
Infant Day Nursery, and Mission to Grown-up People,

High-street, Whitechapel, E.

Parcel received from M. R., with many thanks.

THE ANNUAL MEETING (D.V.) will be held on Monday evening, April 27, 1885, in the large room, George-yard, Whitechapel, at 7 o'clock.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G., will preside.

George Holland will gladly forward tickets to any friends requiring them.

There are more than 30 Missionary Agencies in operation. The weekly attendances of men, women, and children exceed 6,000.

ZENANA AND MEDICAL MISSION, School and Home, 58, St. George's-road, S.W. Christian ladies trained for Foreign Medical Mission Work, in two years' curriculum. Ladies so desirous may attend midwifery alone. Dr. Griffith, Hon. Sec. Treasurer, G. J. Green, Esq., L. and C. Bank, Victoria-street, S.W.
Funds urgently needed.

SAILORS' REST AID SOCIETY.—Rests for Naples, Messina, Pozzuoli, &c. Mission ship for Mediterranean. Seamen's Gospel Temperance League. Treasurer, J. S. Alexander, Esq., Ashfield, Leominster; or office of The Christian.

THE BENEVOLENT OR STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.
Treasurer, Alderman R. N. Fowler, M.P. (Ex-Lord Mayor); J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman; Mr. Ex-Sheriff Clarence Smith, Hon. Secretary.

For ninety-nine years this Institution has visited and relieved the destitute sick, by an entirely unpaid agency, consisting of over 280 Christian men and women. Many sad cases have constantly to be passed over from want of funds.

The Committee will be thankful for the Society being remembered in the testamentary arrangements of the benevolent.—Office of the Society, 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

EAT COLEMAN'S. — Gentlefolk of limited means needing change and rest, will find all advantages of a gentleman's country house. Drives given. Terms 21s. per week, inclusive. For particulars apply to
Mrs. Griffith, 45, Finsbury-square, E.C.

CRIPPLED BOYS' HOME, Kensington, W.—Instituted in 1865 to feed, clothe, educate on Christian principles, and teach a trade to crippled boys between 12 and 18 years of age. 80 boys now in the Home; accommodation for 100, if funds allowed. Several candidates waiting admission. Funds urgently needed.
H. R. Knipe, Hon. Sec.

HOME FOR BLIND CHILDREN, College Avenue, Hackney.—Subscriptions are much needed to maintain the children, and to pay off the small debt upon the Home. Contributions will be gratefully received by Miss S. Rye, or Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

RESCUE WORK IN POPLAR.—Manor Cottage, Kerbey-street, Poplar, E. Founded by Mrs. Wilkes, 1878. Treasurer, Henry Green, Esq., Blackwall, E. Miss Cooke, 68, Mildmay-park, will also receive contributions for this work of mercy. Mrs. Wilkes at home Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays, to see friends and give information respecting this effort to seek and save the lost.

LONDON FEMALE PENITENTIARY, 191, High-street, Stoke Newington, N. Founded at Pentonville, 1807.—This Institution has been carrying on its saving work for nearly 80 years, and about 6000 fallen young women have participated in its benefits, and many orphaned and homeless have been rescued. The help of all who sympathise with this Christian work is greatly needed. Donations, however small, will be thankfully received through the Society's Bankers, Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street; the Office of "The Christian;" and at the above Institution.—W. E. Page, Secretary.

THE CHURCH ARMY and Church Mission Band Union, 36, Southampton-street, Strand, W.C., now also supplies, if due notice be given, qualified Evangelists (formerly working-men) to conduct ten day Missions in schools, tents, &c., among their own class. Particulars on application. Funds are most urgently needed.

LIVERPOOL BETHSHAN Faith Healing Home 161, Islington. Meetings for Holiness, Healing, and Testimony, Tuesdays, 3 p.m.; Thursdays, 7.30 p.m.
For further particulars, apply Miss Gibbs.

FAITH-HEALING and Power for Service.—Meetings conducted by the Rev. John Allen or his helpers. Trinity Church, Triangle, Hackney, London, E., Sundays, 3 p.m., Mondays, 7 p.m. The Hall, Horsley-street, near Camberwell-gate and Walworth-road station, Tuesdays, 7 p.m. The Hall, 110, Shoreditch, Thursdays, 7 p.m. Special: Fridays, 7 p.m., Trinity Church, Triangle, Hackney: Baptism of the Holy Ghost and Power for Service.

ANXIETY OF SOUL.—Any to whom the way of salvation is not clear, are invited to communicate, either personally or by letter, to W. S., care of Evangelistic Secretary, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

THE COMMITTEE of the Ladies' Samaritan Society of the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, 25, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, earnestly plead for contributions in aid of the poorer patients and their families. The smallest gifts in money or clothing will be thankfully acknowledged by the Committee.

Educational.

SEASIDE, Southport.—Superior School for Young Ladies. Conducted by a member of the Church of England (Evangelical), assisted by English and foreign governesses, and eminent visiting professors. Pupils prepared for Trinity College examinations.—Miss Poole, Eagley Bank, Southport. Referees, Rev. Canon Clarke, Southport, and Rev. John Burbidge, Everton-road, Liverpool.

LONDON.—First-class Education for the Daughters of Gentlemen in an establishment of long standing, conducted by members of the Church of England, occupying a spacious house in a most healthy locality in the West-end. The pupils have the advantage of loving care and safe training while pursuing their studies under first-rate Professors—their health, individual temper, and disposition carefully and tenderly watched over, and the whole system based on Christian principles.—Delta, Boddington's Library, Notting-hill-gate, W.

BELLE VUE, Ambleside.—Good School for Girls.—Having increased accommodation, Mrs. Fleming can now receive six additional Pupils. House well and healthily situated, with large rooms, garden, tennis ground. Careful, Christian training, and thorough teaching. Distinguished success in Cambridge Examinations—which are optional. Resident foreign and English governesses. Visiting masters. 50 to 60 guineas.

EDUCATION. — Belle Vue, Corseaux, Vevey, Switzerland.—Mdlle. Alida Chatelain, assisted by her sister and a resident German Governess, offers a Christian home and thorough education to Young Ladies wishing to finish their education abroad. Escort in April. MAGNETIC TREATMENT OF RHEUMATISM.

To those who suppose there is no cure for Rheumatism we commend the following :—We do not know of any chemistry outside the human organism which can eliminate the morbid products of a Rheumatic Diathesis ; but that which chemistry and medicine cannot accomplish, the human organism can, when the right conditions are afforded, and one of the most effective conditions is that which tends to establish an equilibrium of functional action in all the organs. Our arrangement is simply this, that by Magnetic Treatment, an unhealthy condition of the system or the blood, culminating in the morbid and consequent functional derangement of some organ and predisposing to formations, even to cancers as admitted by medical men, is checked, and counteracting conditions of dispersion or absorption are set up, a more vigorous tone being communicated to the system in general, and to each organ in particular.

We admit the value of medicine, as of primary importance in acute affections, but Magnetism has a direct relation to the cause, giving, as it does, vitality and energy to the system, by which the tendency to a recurrence of the symptoms is overcome.

FROM MR. JAMES ADAMS,
250, Darnall Road, Darnall, Sheffield.

April 1, 1885.—"I am happy to be able to give a good account of myself, thanks to your treatment. You will see, by referring back to my letters, that when I first sought your help I was in such a condition from Rheumatism, that I could not sit down for more than ten minutes without having severe pain from the lumbar region to the feet. My sufferings were such that I was cruelly punished while walking, and altogether I got into a very weak state. Now, however, though not altogether free from my ailment, I am a different sort of man to what I was then, and I am anticipating a perfect cure.

"I have cause to speak very highly of your treatment, and I have not been idle in recommending it to my friends and acquaintances."

Having spent many years of patient, laborious, and continued study in adapting his treatment to some of the most obscure and intractable affections, Mr. Garratt now claims, as the result of his professional career, to have attained a success unparalleled in the Healing Art. Those who desire further information on his method of treatment should peruse his essays, explaining the radical effect of Magnetism upon the human organism in health and disease. It is Mr. Garratt's careful study to adapt the remedy to the requirements of each case—a practice based upon the principles laid down in his published essays, which can be obtained post free on application. He will always be happy to confer with any scientific or medical gentleman, either personally or by letter, upon any phase of the subject, or any case for treatment, and will send to any address a private list of 950 names as referees.—B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

FIRST SHEETS OF SCRIPTURAL PROOFS

That God gives us in our Lord Jesus Christ perfect deliverance from all sin, inward as well as outward, if we will but receive Him and believe on His name for all that God has made Him to be to us (John i. 12 ; 1 Cor. i. 30).

BY J. P. WILSON.

Copies may be obtained by writing to me at the undernoted address, sending Eightpence for price and postage, or without money. I hope that it is with a right motive that I introduce here the first letter received by me on the subject of the book, and that my doing so will not be misconstrued. But if it should be, I must bear with it, and cannot for fear of it withhold the letter. It is from a sister in the Lord unknown to me until I received it.—J. P. W., 88, North Side, Wandsworth Common, London, S.W.

"Dear Friend.—I have read your little book, lent me by a friend ; and I do desire heartily to thank my God that it was put into my hands. Though for years I have known my Saviour's love, and experienced the incoming of the Holy Spirit in power in my soul, yet since reading the 'Scriptural Proofs' I have had a fresh revelation of what Jesus is to me in his capacity of Saviour : and I have been able to grasp Him in a fuller and more comprehensive faith as my deliverer from indwelling sin ; and that on the Truth of the living God, as shown so clearly in your little book. My heart goes with every line of it. I do trust and believe it will be blessed wherever it is read : there is so little of man in it and so much of God. Yours in the fellowship of His Spirit, ——."

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.
Established 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

INFLUENCE OF BAD READING.

PARENTS, guardians, and everyone interested in the welfare of the young ought to watch with jealous care the literature brought before their young minds. It is said, "Men are known by the books they read;" if books should so much affect and influence the lives of men, how much more so the susceptible minds of the young? How important to keep before them such books and literature as treat of high and noble subjects, worthy of imitation, and stimulating to lives of usefulness and blessing. Good books are the best society; how many a noble life has been moulded through the perusal of records of noble and worthy lives.

Thomas Hood said, "A natural turn for reading and intellectual pursuits probably preserved me from the moral shipwreck so apt to befall those who are deprived in early life of parental pilotage."

But a few weeks ago we read an account in a local newspaper of a lad of but fourteen years of age having stolen no less than £82 from his employer. That lad, whose prospects were bright and promising, is now suffering the penalty of his sin; and, in his own words, "This all comes of reading The Boys of England." Parents who have sons of that tender age, think of your son leaving home. After a few months you may have the news of his arrest for dishonesty; he is sentenced to twenty-one or more days' hard labour, and at the expiration of that term he is to be sent from the country. Would you not then do your utmost to stop the circulation of such corrupt literature as has caused this deplorable event? Yours may not be such an unhappy reality, but other mothers' sons have been led astray by this "light and entertaining" reading.

Like our words and actions, books ofttimes bear an influence farther than we know or think. Such is taught by the Russian fable of "The Author and the Robber," which runs: In the gloomy realm of shadows, two sinners came before the judges for sentence at the same time. The one was a robber who used to exact tribute on the highway, and who had at last come to the gallows; the other an author covered with glory, who had infused a subtle poison into his works, had promoted atheism, and had preached immorality. In Hades judicial ceremonies are brief. Sentence was pronounced immediately. Two huge iron cauldrons were suspended in the air by two tremendous iron chains; in each of these one of the sinners was placed. Under the robber a great pile of wood was heaped up, and then one of the furies set it on fire, kindling such a terrible flame that the very stones in the roof of the Imperial halls began to crack. The author's sentence did not seem so severe. Under him, at first, a little fire scarcely glowed, but the longer it burned the larger it became.

Centuries rolled by but the fire had not gone out; beneath the robber the flames are extinguished, beneath the author they grow hourly worse and worse. Seeing that there is no mitigation of his torment, the writer at last cries out, "There is no justice among the gods;" that he had filled the world with renown, and if he had written a little too freely he had been punished enough, and that he did not think he had sinned more than the robber. Then before him appeared one of the infernal sisters: "Wretch," she exclaimed, "dost thou upbraid Providence? Dost thou compare thyself with the robber? His crime is as nothing compared with thine. Only as long as he lived did his cruelty and lawlessness render him hurtful. But thou long ago hadst thy bones crumbled to dust, yet the sun never rises without bringing to light fresh evils of which thou art the cause.

"Look there," and for a moment she enabled him to look once more upon the world; "look at the crimes, the miseries, of which thou art the cause; look at the children who have brought shame upon their families, who have reduced their parents to despair. By whom were their heads and hearts corrupted? Who strove to rend asunder the bonds of society, ridiculing as childish follies all ideas of the sanctity of marriage, and the right of authority and law? Thou art the man. Didst thou not dignify unbelief with the name of enlightenment? Didst thou not place vice and passion in the most charming and alluring of lights? And now look—a whole country perverted by thy teaching is full of murder and robbery, of strife and rebellion, and is being led onward by thee to ruin. How much evil have thy books yet to bring upon the world! Continue, then, to suffer, for here the measure of thy punishment shall be according to thy deserts." Thus spoke the angry fury, and slammed down the cover on the cauldron.

Surely a great and everlasting principle of truth and justice underlies this grimly fearful fable. The Scriptures tell us that all shall be judged and recompensed according to their deeds, whether good or bad. How immeasurably terrible must be the punishment that will be meted out to the writer of poisonous books—the wholesale corrupter of generations!

LONDON LADIES AND PUBLIC MORALITY.

AN organisation of very earnest, determined, and influential ladies exists in the metropolis under the title of the "London Branch of the Ladies' National Association for the Abolition of the State Regulation of Vice." At the last meeting of the Council of this Society, it was resolved "That the secretary obtain from all local secretaries the names of all gentlemen coming forward as candidates for Parliament in all the wards of their boroughs; and that the Hon. Secretary then write on behalf of the Society, inquiring the views of these candidates, and informing them that local friends will call a Repeal meeting in the district unless the candidates are decidedly favourable to our movement; this Society having resolved to do all in its power to hinder the acceptance of any man as representative of any part of London who is not in favour of the repeal of the Acts of '66 and '69 concerning women.

It is understood that these ladies will have the co-operation of the Working Men's National League for the same object.

GENIUS NO EXCUSE FOR WRONG-DOING.

IN Good Words for April, Mrs. Craik has a very courageous paper, in which she denounces the immorality of excusing wrong-doing on account of genius. The wretchedness of the domestic life of Thomas Carlyle sprang, not from his genius, but from the bad qualities of "a self-absorbed, egotistical, bad-tempered man, who had ruined his constitution by his persistent breaking of every law of health." Goethe, stripped of the glamour which enthusiastic admirers of his great powers have thrown over him, is "a Sybarite, whose god was himself, and who did not hesitate to sacrifice, to his supposed artistic culture, manly honour and womanly happiness;" yet there are those who declare that he was but exercising the prerogative of all men of genius, "who learn in suffering" (generally the suffering of others) "what they teach in song."

For the genius of Robert Burns and Richard Brinsley Sheridan the world excuses them everything, declaring that an impudent and blasphemous falsehood; as if any light which led astray could come from heaven.

> "The light which led astray > Was light from heaven,"

But if it is a pitiful thing when a man of genius has to entrench himself behind his works, as being so much better than himself, in a woman of genius it is even worse. "Can any writings of the two greatest female novelists of the age, French and English, and one the Englishwoman full of the most noble qualities, atone for the lack of that crown of stainless matronhood, which should have adorned either brow, making the life a consecration of the books, not the books an apology for the life? . . . We cannot exaggerate the danger it is to the young to teach them that genius is an excuse for error; that an author's books are the condonation of his life; that what is moral turpitude in a small man is in a great man only a venial error; nay, perhaps, that if he had been a better man, he would not have been so great a genius. Satan would probably, be to such confounders of right and wrong the most transcendant genius. But we, believing that genius comes direct from Him 'with whom is no darkness at all,' exact from it, not a lower, but a higher standard than that of ordinary men."

These are wholesome words, which ought to be well heeded by all to whom is committed the training of our youth.

THE TRAINING OF GIRLS.—Writing on this subject, Miss Stroud Smith, 68, Derby-square, Douglas, Isle of Man, says:—We have tried a plan here, at the Industrial Home, which has worked admirably. Every Saturday afternoon a lesson has been given for the last three months to a class of about twenty girls, varying in ages from eight to fifteen. The lessons are taught upon Kinder-Garten principles, and the children will not easily forget the action songs about bed-making, washing dishes, sweeping, &c. We hope before long to be able to have a Book of Songs and Lessons ready, so that other "Kitchen Schools" may be started, and other poor children made happy by being taught in this bright and pleasant way.

FEAR THE LORD.

THE following are the words of Christ: "I say unto you, my friends, Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do. But I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear: Fear Him, who after He hath killed hath power to cast into hell (Gehenna); yea, I say unto you, Fear Him" (Luke xii. 4, 5).

"The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom" (Prov. i. 7). We are only wise as we live in his fear (Job xxviii. 28). This fear is "the whole duty of man" (Eccles. xii. 13). Moses continually exhorted the people to fear the Lord (Deut. x. 12). The prophets diligently taught it. David said: "O fear the Lord, ye his saints;" and again, "Come, ye children, hearken unto me, I will teach you the fear of the Lord" (Psalm xxxiv. 9, 11). The Bible is full of the fear of the Lord. As soon as the children of men begin to live and to understand, they should be taught to know the Lord and to fear Him. As Christ taught this fear, so do all his true disciples.

The fear of the Lord is not merely an intellectual idea, but a spiritual realisation of his presence. Nor is it simply to dread Him. The fear of the Lord is to dread to offend Him, and to love to please Him—to delight in his presence, and never willingly to grieve Him; it is to give Him the chief place in our hearts, to put Him first in all things and in all places and always; and to be in subjection to Him and to his word, and to do all these things reverently. "God is greatly to be feared" (Psalm lxxxix. 7). Those who fear the Lord believe in his goodness, and they trust in Him. "There is no want to them that fear Him" (Psalm xxxiv. 9). They are safe and well provided for here, and they will have the kingdom and glory hereafter.

"Behold the eyes of the Lord are upon them that fear Him, upon them that hope in his mercy, to deliver their soul from death, and to keep them alive in famine" (Psalm xxxiii. 18, 19). "The Lord taketh pleasure in them that fear Him, in those that hope in his mercy" (Psalm cxlvii. 11).

To return to the words of Christ first quoted, we see He warns us against the fear of man, and commands us to fear God only. No creature, and no circumstance, should beget fear in us, for the Lord reigneth over all. The only One we need fear is the Lord, and Christ here commands us most emphatically to "Fear Him." And He repeats the command, "Yea, I say unto you, Fear Him." He forewarns us, lest we be at any time at all inclined to yield to the temptation to fear man, and so neglect to fear God.

There is a great difference between the fear of man and the fear of the Lord, between the carnal fear and the godly fear. The one is impure, painful, dangerous, and sinful, and brings a snare and a grievous loss. The other is pure, pleasant, safe, and righteous, and brings freedom and a rich reward. All fear is due to the Lord alone, and He will not permit us to fear any other (Deut. v. 9).

In order to impress on our minds the great importance of being free from the fear of man, and living alone in the fear of the Lord, Christ very solemnly tells of his power to punish with an evil beyond any that can possibly befall us here on the earth. The most that man can do is to kill the body; but Christ tells us to fear Him who can kill the body, and then cast into hell-fire.

We do well to remember that Christ was here speaking to his disciples, whom He calls his "friends," those whom He loved; and He told them of the certainty of hell, because He loved them. He does not speak as though his disciples were ignorant of this place or state of torment; but as if they knew of the agony that will come upon the wicked after this life. On several occasions He spoke of this place or state of woe.

When the Pharisees mocked at the teaching of Christ on the evil of covetousness, and of pursuing the vanity and pride of this vain world, He told them of the rich man and Lazarus (Luke xvi. 19—31). He did not fear man, but He was faithful to tell them of their danger. The whole of Luke xvi. and the first ten verses of xvii. should be read in connection with this subject. In the 13th verse He shows that men who put this world first, and have their chief delight in the vanity of earthly things, are not living in the fear of the Lord. And the 18th verse tells us that those who defile themselves by living contrary to God's order are unfit for heaven.

I quote this instance, where Christ speaks of hell fire, because it is said by some that Christ was here answering the Pharisees according to their own belief of the state of the wicked after they are taken from this world. But the Lord did not reprove them for this belief, nor tell his disciples that the Pharisees were in error as to their belief: and it is very clear that He was sincere in warning them of their danger in following evil now, and in so doing neglecting the fear of the Lord.

These words of Christ are still to be a warning to all living in sin: and it is very dangerous to treat them lightly, or to attempt to explain away their force, and so to mar the object for which they were spoken by Christ. Those who consider that these words do not agree with other words of Scripture on the state of the dead, would do well to be silent till they really have clear light, or wait and see at the end, when all will be fully known. Man cannot be more loving than God. Christ spoke these words of warning in love, and men should receive them reverently, and fear Him. Christ seeks not the destruction of the sinner, for He came into this world to save the sinner from the wrath to come.

While on the one side we should be very careful not to go beyond the Scripture, and try to make the word of the Lord say what it does not say on this subject of hell, or on any subject; on the other side, surely no professing Christian should allow the wicked, the proud rejecters of Christ, to deceive themselves by thinking that hell is not what the Scripture says it is, merely because some men think so. Rather let us direct all to read the word of God for themselves, as that word will surely be fulfilled; and also, because it is by that word men will be judged, and not by what men say the word means; the reasoning of men will avail nothing in that day.

Also, as to the conduct of Christians one with another: we certainly should not separate ourselves from our fellow-disciples of Christ because they do not exactly see as we do, but should show that we fear the Lord by loving them. All true Christians agree that Christ is all; He is the great subject of the Bible, and He is life, our life; and all who truly believe in Him are living members of his body, one with Him and one with all the members of his body. Those Christians who may not see as we do, yet fear the Lord as we do, and they conscientiously read the Scriptures in his fear as we do, and we should receive such into our fellowship, and show that we are true disciples by our love one towards another, which is the chief test of discipleship.

To ask them to give up their convictions of what they in the fear of the Lord see to be the meaning of God's Word, is to ask them to cast off the fear of the Lord, and to put on the fear of man! This would be putting ourselves in a very dangerous position, as well as our fellow Christians. No, rather let us resolve to resist the dividing spirit (the devil) and meekly and lovingly be in unity with all the true spiritual members of the one Body, and not be offended by any, or give offence to any, because we think they do not read some of the Word of God as they should, or because they follow not with us (Luke ix. 49).

We should not perplex ourselves with questions that we cannot answer, as to the intermediate state, between death and the final judgment, and other subjects not yet clearly revealed; no satisfactory answer can be given to questions that are not revealed in God's word; all the combined reasoning of all the learned among men cannot help to make known what God has kept secret. Christ knew all, but He did not explain to men the hidden things of God (John iii. 12).

It is not wise to attempt to reason outside or apart from God's word, and that word we are called on reverently to read and receive in his fear.

The Bible teaches that the highest state of the bliss of all who fear God will not be till the coming of Christ, when those who have died in the faith of Christ will be raised in his likeness, and the living changed into his likeness (Ps. xvii. 15; 1 Thes. iv. 15—17; and Rev. iii. 21). The Bible, also, teaches that the greatest suffering of the wicked, who have died in their sin, will be at their resurrection, one thousand years after the first resurrection (Rev. xx. 5, and 13—15); to these two resurrections our special attention is often directed. The Apostle Paul said: "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust; and herein do I exercise myself, to have a conscience void of offence toward God and toward men" (Acts xxiv. 15, 16); see also John v. 28, 29; and Daniel xii. 2.

Coming back to the words of Christ, now under our special consideration, He says, "Fear Him, Who after He hath killed (taken life from the body) hath power to cast into hell." Christ is here evidently teaching that hell-fire is something more to be dreaded than the death of our present mortal bodies.

There is a place or state of agony at present unknown to men. Christ knows what it is, and He warns all men, even his disciples.

Christ and his apostles often warned, not only the wicked, but also the professed believers in Christ. On one occasion when He saw his disciples tempted to pride, He warned them of its evil, by telling them of the fall of Satan through pride (Luke x. 17—20). And here, in the subject before us, He warns them of the "everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels" (Matt. xxv. 41). Christ is the true and faithful teacher. He knows the need of his warnings, and of his promises. He tells us of heaven, and He also tells us of hell.

Heaven is the highest state of bliss that it is possible to enjoy: its pleasures far exceed all the pleasures we can now conceive of; and it is our present joy, as true disciples of Christ, to know that our names are written there (Luke x. 20), and that we shall soon know the glory and honour and immortality and satisfaction of that state of perfect blessedness.

As heaven is the highest state of bliss, and most of all to be desired, so hell is the greatest shame and woe and agony, and the state most of all to be dreaded. In the range of the shades of colours, on the one side we cannot have any hue purer than white; and on the other side we cannot have any hue darker than black. So with the two future states before our attention, there is no present joy equal to the joy of heaven; and on the other hand, there is no pain on earth so severe as the agony of hell.

The Faithful Teacher might well say, If thy hand offend thee (or cause thee to offend) cut it off: it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than, having two hands, to be cast into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched; where the worm dieth not. and the fire is not quenched. And this He repeats again and again in connection with the foot and the eye (Mark ix. 43—48).

Let no man try to persuade himself that there is no hell fire; but rather, calmly receive the clear teaching of the Scripture on the subject, and then learn how to escape hell and to obtain heaven. And this is done by living in the fear of the Lord. Those who rightly fear the Lord, believe in Jesus Christ, as the Saviour from hell, and He who alone keeps us from falling, and presents us faultless in the presence of his glory with exceeding joy (Jude 24, 25).

All is of grace on God's side. He freely pardons, having given Christ to die for our sins (John iii. 16 and 36). All is of faith on man's side; we have simply to receive the salvation in Jesus Christ. All the salvation is in Christ Jesus for us, and by no other, in no other way, can we be saved (Acts iv. 12).

"Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, Be ye reconciled to God. For He hath made Him, who knew no sin, to be sin for us; that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him" (2 Cor. v. 20, 21).

"Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us have grace, whereby we may serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear: for our God is a consuming fire" (Heb. xii. 28, 29). K.

SHEEP AND GOATS.

MATT. XXV.

THE reference made in a recent number of THE CHRISTIAN to our Lord's declaration with respect to the final severance being as when a shepherd "divideth his sheep from the goats," reminds me of what I myself witnessed outside the walls of Jerusalem, which shows the illustration has reference to a daily recurrent circumstance. It was at the earliest dawn of a spring morning that my attention became arrested by flocks of sheep and goats, intermingled, issuing from the caves underneath the city that serve as folds, where both had passed the night herded together.

After some little distance from the walls had been traversed by this promiscuous throng, the shepherds were seen to take their stand on some higher ground, when, responsive to a peculiar piping sound made by them, goats and sheep instinctively began to stream asunder, one on the one side and one on the other, like as divers parties separate at the division call of a Legislative Assembly, until, obedient to this one and the same kind of voice, each kind had run to its own kind, and sheep and the goats previously intermingled were become separated into two distinct flocks. These the shepherds proceeded to lead away to different pastures, for though both are collected together for the night, no sheep are allowed by them to feed with the goats during the day. This I have seen stated in books, but not having met with any allusion to the previous intermingled state of the flocks during the night, and their separation by the shepherd's voice at the dawn of day, I thought others like circumstanced might feel with myself how our Lord's teaching gains by observing facts that are still of daily occurrence.

BAPTISMS AND LAYING ON OF HANDS.

IN Hebrews vi. the Apostle enumerates certain initiatory and elementary religious truths and ordinances. Two concern the proper condition of our own minds and hearts, repentance from dead works and faith toward God; two are of a typical character, namely, baptisms and laying on of hands; and two relate to the future state and final award, namely, resurrection of the dead and eternal judgment.

That the Apostle is not referring to New Testament but to Old Testament ordinances, will readily appear if we refer to Heb. ix. 10, where the word which was rendered baptisms in chap. vi. is translated washings. The original word, if left untranslated, is "baptisms." But the translators, both of the A.V. and the R.V., have given the sense of the word as used in these passages. That such is the sense is evident, seeing that the word is embraced in the expression "carnal ordinances" which latter are stated to have been imposed until a time of reformation.

The ordinance of "laying on of hands," being associated with the Levitical ordinance of washings, is evidently an institution of a similar character.

Let us now turn to the appointment of these ordinances, and observe the main scriptural teaching connected with them.

In Leviticus i. we read that an offerer was to bring a specified offering without blemish and offer it to the Lord, and "he shall put his hand upon the head of the burnt offering; and it shall be accepted for him to make atonement for him; and he shall kill," &c. This teaching is given to us—an elementary truth for all time—that one may be accepted for another to make atonement for him. If we put the statement conversely, that a man is not accepted in himself, and cannot make atonement by himself, how solemn, how calculated to awaken personal concern!

Leviticus iv. relates to sins through ignorance of the Lord's commandments. The transgressor (and he might be a priest, the congregation, a ruler, or one of the people of the land, whoever it was, there is but one course open) must bring a specified offering without blemish, and "shall lay his hand upon its head and kill it," &c., and the "priest shall make an atonement for his sin, and it shall be forgiven him." Here is another elementary truth—that atonement is necessary for sins committed through ignorance, which atonement must be made by another.

Leviticus xvi. On the great Day of Atonement, after various ordinances, and especially the offering of one of the two goats, Aaron was to "lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess over him all the iniquities," &c. The teaching in this passage, so far as regards the laying on of hands, is (see verses 21 and 22) that sins generally may be removed from the sinner, transferred to another, which other carries them away, and they are found no more.

In regard to the Old Testament ordinance of washings, the Apostle in Hebrews ix. 10 uses the expression, "divers washings," and divers indeed they were. Aaron and his sons were washed on their consecration; also they were to wash their hands and their feet when they went into the tabernacle, and when they came near to the altar to minister. Also the healed leper, and the person who let go the scapegoat, and he that burned the offering on the great Day of Atonement, were to wash their clothes and bathe their flesh in water.

These washings were in water only. There was also the sprinkling of the altar, and on the people, when the first covenant was dedicated. This was with blood only. The healed leper was to be sprinkled with water into which the blood of a sacrificed bird had fallen. The defiled enumerated in Numbers xix. were to be sprinkled with water mixed with the ashes of the red heifer, &c. &c. Each of these has doubtless its own special signification. But the general teaching is that purification from all defilement is needed.

And even as on some occasions the application was by another, and on other occasions by the person himself, so also not only does the Lord Jesus purify (Titus ii.), but also we are exhorted to cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit perfecting holiness in the fear of God (2 Cor. vii. 1). The ordinance indeed was imperative that the priests were to wash, that they die not. The leper was only after sundry things, including sprinkling and washing, to come into the camp, and not into his tent for seven days more, when he was to repeat the washing. He that eateth certain things was to wash and bathe, or to bear his iniquity. Cleansing from all defilement was absolutely necessary to the purifying of the flesh. Cleansing is now effected as to the conscience by the blood of Christ (Heb. ix. 14), as to the mind and heart by faith (Acts xv. 9), by obedience to the truth (1 Peter i. 22), and by the laver of the water in the word (Eph. v. 26); whilst vitally it is accomplished by the laver of regeneration (the cleansing which regeneration in the life of Christ brings) and renewing of the Holy Spirit, which God poured out upon us richly, through Jesus Christ our Saviour (Titus iii. 5, 6).

Besides the instruction given through the above two typical ordinances, there are four dogmatic truths mentioned, namely, repentance, faith, resurrection, and eternal judgment. If received, profited by, and acted upon, then the soul so influenced is prepared to enter into the blessings of the new covenant. If not, there is danger of retrogression altogether. Hence the preaching of clear, definite, dogmatic truth, and the urging of corresponding practice, are most important.

ONE WOMAN'S WORK.

ABOUT three years ago, a young woman in an Eastern American City, unmarried, and with no close family ties, looked about in the world for some helpful work to do. Near to her lived a deaf and dumb child, a little girl with speaking, intelligent eyes. Her parents were not able to send her to an asylum. Her kind-hearted neighbour became very much attached to the child, studied the German method of oral teaching for the dumb, and brought little Mary every day to her house to impart it to her. The pupil followed the motion of the speaker's lips, and replied in the same mechanical way. One deaf and dumb child after another joined little Mary at her task, until the school numbered seventy-eight pupils with nine teachers. The infinite patience required in this training is almost inconceivable; but the progress is rapid.

Three years have passed since the opening of the school, and the pupils have acquired all that a child would learn in its nursery and primary school, to speak, read, write, and understand the first four rules of arithmetic. The school is free. Its work, so far, has been to make of these creatures, who were little better than animals, active, intelligent human beings, and this work is due to one earnest, kindly woman.

How many single women, without the spur of necessity to give them an aim in life, have spent these last three years with no higher object before them than to decorate their house, to learn a new stitch of embroidery, or to cut their gowns in the latest fashion?—American Paper.

QUIET RESTING PLACES.

"READ it again, sir," pleaded in plaintive tones a dying woman. "Quiet resting-places—quiet resting places—it sounds nice. It's very noisy here in this awful court; one couldn't pray, if one knew how, in the midst of the drunkenness and quarrelling."

So, once more, Mr. Leslie read: "My people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation, and in sure dwellings, and in quiet resting-places." Verse after verse, showing God's way of salvation, had Mr. Leslie repeated that afternoon; but none had spoken to the heart of the poor weary woman like this one.

"Quiet resting-places; quiet resting-places, sir! it takes me back to long ago when I was a girl at home, when, my day's work done, I used to climb up into the nut tree, and rest on my leafy seat, to listen to the ripple of the brook, and think of Jamie, for he was not then as he is now, but as bonnie a lad as ever won a woman's heart; that was quiet and restful-like, sir."

"Quiet resting-places," again she almost moaned. "Oh, sir, if you only knew how unquiet my heart is! I think if it were all quiet outside, still it would be all in a tumult like here," she said, placing her hand on her breast. "Oh, the thoughts that will keep rushing up—thoughts of the past, thoughts of the future. If I could only find rest—rest, that is what I want, a quiet resting-place."

"Let me show you a striking contrast to this promise," and Mr. Leslie read from Jer. l. 6, 19, and 20: "My people hath been lost sheep: . . . they have turned them away on the mountain: they have gone from mountain to hill, they have forgotten their resting-place. And I will bring Israel again to his habitation. . . . In those days . . . the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for and there shall be none . . . for I will pardon them whom I reserve." "You have forgotten," added Mr. Leslie, "He is bringing back his lost one."

"If I only knew how to come to Him—oh, where is He? I cannot find Him; and I have so wanted Him since that day in the Mission-room when they sang—

'There is rest for the weary, there is rest for you.'

"My little boy can sing it all now; but I cannot get it; it cannot be for me."

"Suppose," said Mr. Leslie, "Jesus, the sinner's friend came, with his pierced hands, and brow marked by the crown of thorns, and stood beside you, and said, 'Come unto Me . . . and I will give you rest;' what would you say?"

"I think my mother's verse would do for me too; you know she loved Him. It was:—

'Just as I am—though tossed about,
With many a conflict, many a doubt;
Fightings and fears within, without,
O Lamb of God, I come.'"

"Will you say it now to Him?" gently asked the clergyman, "for He is here, close to you, waiting for you to answer that which He has been asking you all your life—Come and rest—waiting for your 'Yes, Lord, I will come, I do come, save me, a sinner.'"

"Will He take me? Is He here? Wasn't there something about not casting out? Oh, I will come—I do come—save me—take all my sins away—give me rest."

"Amen," said the clergyman, softly; "the Master has heard and answered. The quiet resting-place is yours, for He maketh the storm a calm—then are they glad because they be quiet. So He bringeth them unto their desired haven."

"Well, Daddy, darling, you must be so tired," said Katie, as she welcomed her father home, and helped him to take off his great-coat. "What a long time you have been visiting; we have been wanting so much to tell you about our text to-day."

Here I may say, by way of explanation, it was the Leslies' family plan to take together one verse or thought from the morning Bible-reading, to live out, or "eat thoroughly," as Frank called it, during the day. Then in the twilight they gathered with their sister-mother "to experience" upon it. This morning the verse had been Isaiah xxxii. 18, and they had agreed to make it a subject of constant prayer, that they might be kept quiet in heart before God, and calm before the world, finding more and more of that heart-rest which they have who fully trust in Jesus.

"And what has the Master's word done for my Margaret to-day?" asked Mr. Leslie, as he bent down to kiss his eldest daughter's cheek. "Has it been all rest?"

"Yes, father; the Shepherd has led me 'beside the waters of quietness' for his name sake; and when He giveth quietness, who, then, can make trouble? He is so good to me," she added, only loud enough for Mr. Leslie to hear. "I thought it would be so difficult to fill mother's place, and so hard to give up all thought of a future with Ernest; but He has so proved Himself my Shepherd I do not want anything, save strength to be faithful to such a precious Friend. But father," she said aloud, "has the thought of quiet resting-places helped your work?"

"Indeed it has, my child;" and Mr. Leslie told them of the poor woman who had found in Him a resting-place that day. "As I left her," he said, "looking so peaceful, so thankful—all the weariness gone, just lying thanking Him for having saved her," my thoughts turned to the beautiful picture of the last days of Jacob, and how he passed away—'Calm at eventide after a restless day.'"

"Father," said Frank, "I asked Arthur Green to spend Saturday afternoon with me. I do want him to know this rest and quietness of heart. You know he loved his father so passionately that since he lost him he has been quite an altered fellow, and there is such a restless look in his eyes it makes my heart ache. Only this morning he said the fever burned hotter and hotter through him to avenge himself on those who had, though indirectly, been the cause of his father's death. 'Sometimes, Frank,' he said, "when I look at the injustice of the whole thing, it seems as if I must go mad, every nerve beats so; and when the inner troubles are more than I can well bear, I ask myself the question, Is there a God who will make right? I used to scorn those who had no self-control, who could not keep calm and dignified and restful on life's battlefield; but the fire of anger has so burned into me, that all control before both God and man seems gone. Is He love, Frank?' he asked; 'the cloud hanging over us grows larger, and the future looks blacker than the past.' Do speak to him, father; won't you? He will listen to you."

"Muriel Ellis," said Katie, "told me that verse, 'Sit still, my daughter, until thou know how the matter will fall,' had been such a comfort to them in their trial and difficulty—for you remember they, as well as the Greens, lost nearly all they had through the bank failure. She taught me much by her quietness during those dark days. Her trust in God's ordering never failed."

"I am so glad to hear that," said Mr. Leslie. "God is indeed teaching her, though it is in the school of chastening discipline. Silent submission to God's will is what David had learnt when he said, 'I was dumb, I opened not my mouth; because Thou didst it.' There is a beautiful analogy to this in the knowledge that the bottom of the ocean is covered with microscopic shells, without a particle of sand or gravel amongst them, signifying—I quote from a learned professor whose words I read to-day—that 'at this depth there is absolute rest, not motion enough to destroy these delicate organisms, not current enough to mix with them a grain of the finest sand.' There is something very impressive in the thought that whilst the surface of the ocean is ever restless—liable to be tossed by storm and tempest, there is a vast region in the ocean depths where all is still, silent, and at rest. Do you remember, too, the lines:—

'There is a rest no hurricane can reach.
The sunlit heavens, so calm and clear above
The cloud and darkness. O my Master, teach
This heart to show, to learn, to see thy love—
In parable like this, to learn that rest
Is on thyself, above the tempest's might—
Thy timid ones safe sheltering on thy breast
See cloud and darkness pass but dwell in light.'"

"I sent Arthur," said Frank, "a card, with the words, 'whoso hearkeneth unto Me shall dwell safely, and shall be quiet from fear of evil.' I thought it might help him when he was calmer."

"That verse about hearkening," answered Margaret, "always reminds me of the old saying of Fenelon's: 'How rare it is to find a soul still enough to hear God speak;' but I think Katie has something to show us."

"Well!" said her father, nipping her rosy, merry cheek.

"Why, father, it seems just the lesson my girls need on Sunday. Last Sunday two or three of them (to whom the superintendent had spoken very firmly and seriously) were lamenting 'they could not keep quiet.' So I have found out some texts bearing on quietness, and have arranged them ready for a lesson. Here they are," said she, holding up a paper.

"I think," laughed Frank, "you had better coach me, for my boys were so noisy last Sunday that I tried to stimulate them to be a match for the girls in wearing ornaments; and as we could not wear brooches, &c., we had better try St. Peter's ornament, for surely I thought that might be for boys as well as girls. So we agreed to learn 1 Peter iii. 4 as our verse for next Sunday. Do let me have a copy of your lesson."

"Certainly; here it is, with one condition—that you write your thoughts about it on the back of the paper for my benefit."

"Suppose, Frank," said Margaret, "you read the verses over to us."

At which suggestion Frank read as follows:—

Quietness—1 Chron. iv. 40.
Command—1 Thess. iv. 11: 1 Peter iii. 4.
A condition—Proverbs i. 33.
Promises—Isaiah xxxii. 17, 18; Isaiah xxx. 15.
A result—Psalms x. 7, 30.
It is God-given—Job xxxiv. 29; Psalm xxiii. 2, margin.
Only God's children can rest—Isaiah lvii. 20; Jer. xlix. 23.
Quietness comes after separation from most sins—2 Chron. xiv. 5.
Quietness comes after deliverance from outside foes—2 Chron. xx. 30; 2 Chron. xv. 15.

"And, now, my children, we must be off to our work again; but, first, let us all unite together in prayer for Arthur Green, that he, too, may dwell in a quiet resting-place, and know that in quietness and confidence shall be his strength." So they knelt, and their father prayed. That prayer was answered in the deep calm and rest seen in the after-life of Arthur Green.

A TEMPLE OF THE ETERNAL.*

WE are often exhorted to think about our souls. I wish we were urged a little more often to think about our bodies, and the teaching of God's word with regard to them, that they are temples of the Holy Ghost. You men have a natural reverence for a church. You instinctively bare your heads as you enter one. That is only a poor, earthly building. But there is one building which God has made for Himself, fearfully and wonderfully built—the temple of your body, a building not made with hands, so sacred in God's sight that of it the terrible words are written, "If any man defile the temple of God, him will God destroy." What, I ask you, is the sin of defiling an earthly temple built with hands, and consecrated with a human consecration, compared to the sin of that man who defiles his own body, and takes the temple of the Holy Ghost, and turns it into the devil's pigsty, littering down his lusts in the very shrine of it?

Have you in any way been sinning against your body? Have you been forgetting that it is not a mere animal body for you to do what you like with, but a temple of the Eternal, subject to the laws of the Eternal. Then be thankful that these words of warning have reached you. Heed them while there is yet time. Resolve that you will get rid of everything low and shameful in your life. You know it has of late been becoming more and more a chain to you, something you would like to shake off, but cannot; something you no longer hold in your own power, but that holds you in its clutches instead. There is but one hope for your body as well as your soul. Turn right round, and have done with evil once for all.

Ay, I know it is easier said than done. I know you have a hard bit before you, ere you can regain your lost manhood and stand up Christ's free man. But, thank God, help has been laid on One who is mighty. Give yourself up to Jesus Christ this very hour, He who "knows all, but loves you better than He knows; loves you with that great passion of his love which poured itself out to death for you to win you to God. All He asks in return is that you should give up to Him the knife you are holding to your own throat, the sin with which you are destroying your own body and soul. Give it up to Him like a man this night. Ask Him to fight the battle for you, and in you, and with you. However hard a fight you have of it, however often you fail, make a fresh start in the power of his cleansing blood, in the power of the Holy Ghost, in whom fresh beginnings are always possible. And little by little, as you grow up to the full stature of your manhood in Him, you will find your sinful body made clean by Him, and restored to be a temple of the Holy Ghost, full of joy, and peace, and righteousness in the Holy Ghost, the joy of health and strength, the peace of a conscience 'as a sea at rest,' the righteousness of a man who owns an eternal law, and has in him 'the power of an endless life.'" THE LEAMINGTON Y.W.C.A. AND YOUNG DRESSMAKERS' HOME has given shelter to forty-four inmates during the past year, and in various ways has rendered help to those out of work, and to some who were sick. There are seven Bible-classes on Sunday afternoons, attended by dressmakers, milliners, shop assistants, and the children of tradesmen who would otherwise go to no Sunday-school. Miss Cornelia Bagster, Regent-grove, Leamington, will be happy to answer inquiries.

PARENTAL FAULT-FINDING.

DO not be continually finding fault with your child. It is at times necessary to censure and punish ill conduct, but very much may be done by commending when he does well. Be ever more careful to express your approbation of what is good than your disapprobation of what is bad. Nothing can more discourage a child than a spirit of incessant fault-finding on the part of the parent. There is scarcely anything that can exert a more injurious influence on the disposition both of parent and child.

There are two great motives influencing human action—hope and fear. Both are at times necessary; but who would not prefer to see the child influenced to good, by the desire to please, rather than by the fear of offending. If a mother never expresses her gratification when she sees her child do well, but is always censuring when he does anything amiss, he becomes discouraged and unhappy, and feels that there is no use in trying to please, so that eventually the disposition becomes hardened and soured by perpetual fretting. At last, finding that whether he does right or wrong he is equally found fault with, he relinquishes all effort to please, and becomes heedless of reproaches. Let a mother, however, approve of her child's conduct whenever she can; let her assure him that his good conduct makes her happy; and let her reward all efforts by sweet smiles and tender affection; by so doing she will cherish in her child's heart some of the noblest and most desirable feelings of our nature, an amiable disposition and a cheerful spirit.

Suppose your child has, during the day, been very pleasant and obedient, at night, before he goes to bed, you take him by the hand and say, " My dear child, you have been very good to-day: it makes me feel very happy to see you so kind and obedient. God loves children who are dutiful to their parents, and promises to make them happy." This approbation of the mother is to him a great reward; and when, in a more than ordinary manner, you impress the tender kiss upon the lovely face, and in gentle tones say, "Good night, my child," he will leave the room with his little heart full of feeling; and when he closes his eyes to sleep he is happy, and resolves that he will always try to be good. THE NORTH SEA FISHERMEN.

MR. E. J. MATHER, Secretary of this Mission to North Sea Fishermen, 31, New Bridge-street, E.C., writes:—One of the first cares of our risen Lord was his fisherman disciples toiling upon the Sea of Galilee. May it not be that at this season of hallowed memories there are not a few who would like to take part with us in caring for the twelve thousand smacksmen, on the North Sea alone, who are engaged in providing our tables with fish? These men, who for us toil through furious blast and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize. This they can only have through the presence of the mission-vessels, carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

Help may be given in the shape of subscriptions, or by sending parcels of woollen cuffs and comforters, or books aud papers suitable for distribution amongst the fishermen. Who will help us to send out more Mission vessels, and share in the noble Christian work of thus spreading the glad tidings of salvation?

FACTS WORTH PONDERING.

PONDER these weighty facts concerning North Africa. It was North Africa that afforded shelter and sustenance to the children of Israel before yet they were a nation, when they were few in number. Egypt gave bread to these chosen people. Then, shall not now the children of Abraham, according to faith—the spiritual Israel—offer to those of this region "the bread of life"?

North Africa gave asylum to the infant Jesus and his virgin mother when the sword of Herod sought the precious young life. Shall not the land that thus received Him at least be offered the redemption that He came to accomplish?

Another fact. The African shores of the Mediterranean yielded the one upon whom they laid the heavy cross of Jesus—Simon of Cyrene (Matt. xxvii. 32). Thus one of North Afric's sons had the exceeding honour of sharing, in an outward sense, the burden of Calvary's awful cross. Shall we fail to tell them of Him, who, being lifted up, as a mighty magnet, draws men to Himself?

Another fact. When the Gospel was first preached to the Gentiles (probably even before the conversion of Cornelius), it was by men of Cyprus and Cyrene (Acts xi. 20). Thus the Lord Jesus was first proclaimed to us Gentiles by the lips of one of the dwellers of this land of which we speak. How slight a return is it for us to speak to them, now in the end of this rapidly closing dispensation, the words they first spoke to us.

The hearts and homes of North Africa were once made glad by our holy religion. In these rivers were the confessors of Christ buried in baptism. Here lived and wrought and wrote Cyprian, Augustine, and Tertullian. Here many a martyr's stake was planted. Amphitheatres resounded with the roar of the wild beasts which tore limb from limb the Christian ancestors of the Berbers of this day. The peaks of the Aures, Atlas, and Jurjura, looked down on many who loved not their lives to the death. Shall not the children of those who resisted Arianism, and contented unto blood, for godly discipline in the Churches (the Donatists), hear of the faith they have forgotten?

I pen these lines here at Tangier, Morocco, almost in the shadow of the "Pillars of Hercules," and where I have come to "preach Christ where He is not named." These famous "Pillars of Hercules" (Gibraltar and the African promontory on the opposite side of the Straits) were considered by the Ancients as, literally, "the ends of the earth." May the people of this dark land hear Jehovah's word: "Look unto Me and be ye saved, all ye ends of the earth!" We are sure this "uttermost part of the earth" has been "asked" of the Father by Christ, to whom it is given for a possession (Ps. ii). We are here to claim it, in faith, for Him. Remember, too, that of all foreign mission ground, Morocco is the land the very nearest to England. Yet there is scarce another so neglected.

Since getting here, some months ago, we have had very many tokens of good from the hand of our Lord. He has given us an Arabic-speaking co-worker. We are crying to God for godly men and women to be constrained to come forth to this ripe and interesting field. We plead for prayer from the Lord's remembrancers. Should any desire to help on in the evangelization of North Africa by giving themselves to the work or in any way to encourage the little band of brethren on whom rests the responsibility of the "Mission to the Kabyles and other Berber tribes of North Africa," I doubt not Mr. E. H. Glenny, Linton-road, Barking, London, E., would be glad to know of it.

THE BIRKENHEAD MISSION TO SEAMEN continues its good work. The new Report speaks highly of the labours of the missionary (Rev. A. Pitts); it is believed that a great blessing has followed his labours among emigrants, who, at the moment of bidding farewell to their friends, are unusually receptive of the Gospel message.

NOTES ON THE SCRIPTURE UNION READINGS.

APRIL 9.—JOB IX. 1–18.

v. 2.—"How should man be just with God?"—The following beautiful story will illustrate the truth of this motto:—

General H—— used to take his little son into his arms and talk with him about Jesus. The little boy never grew tired of that "sweet story." It was always new to him. One day, while sitting in his father's lap, his papa said to him, "Would my little son like to go to heaven?" "Yes, papa," he answered. "But," said the father, "how can you go to heaven? Your little heart is full of sin. How can you expect to go where God is?" "But all are sinners, papa," the little fellow answered. "That is true," replied the father; "and yet God has said that only the pure in heart shall see Him. How, then, can my little boy expect to go there?" The dear little fellow's face grew very sad. His heart seemed full, and, bursting into tears, he laid his head on his father's bosom, and sobbed out, "Papa, Jesus can save me."—Selected.

APRIL 10.—JOB IX. 19–35.

v. 20.—"If I justify myself, mine own mouth shall condemn me."—We have all sinned. I need not try to tell how many times, I might as well try to count the hairs on your head. We all have sinned against our parents, by not obeying them and being kind to them; we have sinned against the Sabbath, by not remembering to keep it holy; against the Bible, by not loving it, and not keeping its sayings; against conscience, which stands close to our heart, and, like a sentinel, keeping watch, cries out when we sin; against the Holy Spirit, by not doing as He says, when He makes us feel our sins, and against God Himself, whose commandments we break. Oh! our sins are like a great cloud. Did you ever see a cloud of dust or sand on a windy day? And could you count the little particles of dust in it—all of them? No, no! But our sins are quite as many.—J. Todd.

APRIL 11.—JOB XIV. 1–14.

v. 4.—"Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean?"—Jesus has come on purpose to create clean hearts. He tells us that our hearts of themselves will grow nothing but dreadful things—lying, and hatred, and theft, and unkindness, and cruelty, and murder. But He will put his Holy Spirit in our hearts, and give us a new heart; then there shall grow out of it all the fruits and flowers that make it as the King's garden. This is the list: Love, like a sweet breath shall fill it. Joy shall be in it, like the singing of birds. Peace shall grow there, and fill it with gentleness and quiet. Patience shall be there, with its sweet meek-eyed flowers and gentleness, like a lily of the valley; and sturdy goodness shall grow there, like a tree planted by a river; and faith shall be round it like a strong wall; and Temperance, like a bright fountain, in the middle. So you see we have to give Jesus our heart, and we have to ask Him to create it clean and new.—Mark Guy Pearse.

APRIL 12.—JOB XV. 1–16.

v. 15.—"The heavens are not clean in his sight."—This is said to show us the holiness of God, a truth we need to keep in mind, both that we may exalt his name (see Ps. xcix.), and that we may learn to hate all sin as being contrary to his nature and will. By "the heavens" is probably meant the angels who dwell in them (see chap. iv. 18). Holy as they are, they come short of God's essential purity. Oh! how earnestly we should look to Jesus the great Mediator between God and men, that through Him we may be cleansed from sin, and made meet to appear before God. None of us can "stand before this holy Lord God," until Christ has become our righteousness and taken our sins away. Read 1 John i. 5—9.

APRIL 13.—JOB XIX. 1–6, 20–29.

v. 25.—"I know that my Redeemer liveth."—To redeem is to buy back, to re-purchase, and our redemption is a buying us out of bondage. The Bible tells us that we are "sold under sin," that we are "led captive by the devil at his will." We are without strength to buy ourselves free. We bring our golden resolutions and good desires, but they can't redeem us. We try sometimes to break the bonds, and to run away from our hard master sin, but we cannot. God redeems us with the precious blood of his Son. He is born in our midst, that He may become a Kinsman, a Brother to us all. He comes bringing our ransom price. He gives Himself a ransom for all. We are redeemed, "not with corruptible things, as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ."—Mark Guy Pearse.

APRIL 14.—JOB XXII. 1–3, 21–30.

v. 21.—"Acquaint now thyself with Him, and be at peace."

Oh, hearken to his voice,
  Whose arms are open wide,
Whose love will make thy heart rejoice,
  And keep thee at his side.

Then will He give thee more
  Than all the wage of sin;
Will bless thy basket and thy store,
  Give life and peace within.

And all his gifts to crown—
  In answer to thy cry—
He will not fail to send thee down
  His Spirit from on high.

L. Squire.

APRIL 15.—JOB XXIII. 1–17.

v. 3.—"Oh that I knew where I might find Him."—If you would find Jesus Christ you must seek Him. He says, "Those that seek Me early shall find Me." Seek Him in his own Book. The Bible is Jesus Christ's Book, and all who want to know Him must be very diligent in reading their Bibles. He says, "Search the Scriptures," and He will give the Holy Spirit to those who seek Him there, and teach them all about Himself. Then you must seek Him on your knees in prayer. You must ask Him with your own mouth to give you everything your soul wants. You must ask Him to cleanse you from all your sins in his blood, to give you his Spirit. You must tell Him all you are afraid of, and all you feel, and all you wish to have for your soul. Never mind if your prayers seem poor and weak. Only let them come from your hearts, and the Lord hears them. Blessed are they who delight in prayer, and call much upon God.—Bishop Ryle.

"I EXPECT HE MEANT ME"

I want to tell you about a little girl called Topsy, whom I met one very cold day lately. It was outside a theatre that I first saw her. I heard her sobbing very sorrowfully. There she stood with a basket of fresh violets hanging round her neck, but her tears fell fast, and she did not even try to sell her flowers.

"What's the matter, little girl?" I inquired.

"Oh! lady—such a dreadful toothache." And the child raised a swollen, suffering face to mine. "Poor little girl," I said. "I am sorry. Won't you come with me? I think I could get you something to make you better."

"Could you, lady? Oh! the pain is bad."

"Yes, I'm sure I could," I said, "so do come."

And little Topsy, sobbing and moaning, trudged along the street with me.

We came here, and Topsy made herself at home, and sat down by the fire while our kind housekeeper and I found something to ease her pain, and bound up her face with flannel. Then she said, "It's not near so bad now, lady." I think that we were nearly as glad as she was herself.

"You must have a book, Topsy," I said, giving her a Testament. "Do you know who we read of in this book?"

"Yes, lady, about God."

"And who else, Topsy?"

"About our blessed Lord."

"Do you know anything about Him?" I inquired.

"Yes, lady. He died for us."

"You and me, Topsy! Did He die for you?"

"Yes, lady," she said gently, "I expect He meant me."

Topsy said she must go, so I helped her on with her things, and just before I slung the basket of violets over her shoulder she looked among her flowers and picked out one large bunch, saying, "Here, lady, it's for you."

I opened the door for her, and saw her run hurriedly down the street, and though I have looked for Topsy, I have never seen her again. But I have often thought of her words, "I expect He meant me," and I wonder if all of you know that the Lord Jesus means you when He says, "Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out"? I am sure He does. Have you come to Him? If not, do come, because He means you. S. E. S.

THE ABORIGINES OF AUSTRALIA.

Dear Sir,—Since the remarkable outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the Maloga Mission, last Christmas twelvemonth, and the conversion (as far as we are able to judge) of every man and woman, and even many of the boys and girls, our hearts are further cheered by the evidence of the reality of the work of grace. Many of them are instant in prayer and service for the Master. If a new black man or woman comes to Maloga, however wild or untaught he or she may be, the Christians never rest until they are brought to the knowledge of Jesus and his saving power. We are now waiting upon the Lord for guidance about carrying the Gospel of Christ to the thousands who are perishing in sin and ignorance among the scattered tribes of New South Wales and Queensland. It seems marvellous that a people who for nearly a century have been passed by as too low for any civilising or Christian effort, should now be raised to be sons and daughters of the Lord Most High. Nothing appears to me in these latter days to exalt the saving power of Jesus more than this. To God be all the glory.

We are glad to find that more Christian sympathy is being extended towards this unfortunate and down-trodden race, both in the Colonies and the old country. Although my wife and I have been eleven years engaged in the work, scarcely anything has yet been done for the people away out in the distant bush, who are as sheep without a shepherd. We trust when means are at our disposal to extend a helping hand to them. In the meantime we earnestly pray that the Lord will raise up helpers.

We cannot feel too thankful to God for the persistent and unabated help we have received from Miss Rainey, of Melbourne, daughter of Mr. A. C. Rainey, of Weston. For six years the burden of our work has been laid upon her heart, and not only at Maloga has she worked with zeal and energy occasionally, but in several towns of Victoria and Tasmania she has induced bands of Christian ladies to make up clothes for the women and children of the Mission, while she with her own hands has done much for their comfort. At Maloga we daily pray that the Lord Himself will richly bless her, and all others who render us aid. We ask the prayers of the Lord's children in Great Britain for this important work. "The Christian" Pulpit.

SPIRITUAL GROWTH.

By Rev. ARCHIBALD G. BROWN.

I WOULD seek to say a few words from Ephesians iv. 15—part of the verse, "But speaking the truth in love may grow into Him in all things." The Lord Jesus Christ was a matchless Giver. He found his delight when upon earth in perpetually bestowing gifts, and He has carried with Him into the glory just the same thing. The very first thing that I find Him doing after his ascension into his own bright home is giving; for we read in this chapter that He ascended up on high, leading captivity captive, and He gave gifts to men.

He would not have been Christ if He had not given. He had been giving on earth. He gave his back to the smiters, and his cheek to them that plucked off the hair; He gave his face to shame and spitting, and then He gave Himself to the cross: He could not do more. Now He ascends up on high, and the first thing I read is that He gave. And what was it He gave? He gave gifts to the Church. They were men. Those are the very best gifts. He gave apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers, and He gave them for this purpose: That the whole Church might grow up unto a perfect man, after the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ, and that through these gifts of his to the Church believers might grow up into Him in all things.

You see what a beautifully ascending scale it is: Grow, grow up: grow up into Him: grow up into Him in all things. Suppose that just for a few minutes we try and walk up those steps.

The very first word, how suggestive—Grow. Then Christianity is a life, for it is only life that grows. I suppose this is preached now more than ever it was, yet at the same time there is great need to pray that the Lord would raise up men all over the country who will ring out this old doctrine unmistakably, that Christianity is not a simple change of opinion; it is not the adoption of a creed; it is not the taking of a name; it is not the making of a profession; it is the receiving of a life. It can be said of every real Christian that he is born. Hence where there is life there is bound to be growth and development.

But perhaps some here may say, Who can command his own growth? who can make himself grow? Well, I do not know that anybody can make himself grow, but I am certain of this, that a man can hinder his growth, that he is most certainly responsible to steer altogether clear of that atmosphere, or those surroundings, which would hinder the natural and the proper development of that life which God has put within his soul.

Take as an illustration such a thing as this: My heart is perpetually sickened, and it is sometimes ready to break, as I have gazed upon child-life in the slums of London. I look into these little, wan, pinched faces, prematurely old, and I say I am sad. God never meant a child to look like that; but the life that is in that little one is precisely the same as the life that is in your little one at home. Look at that other child running over that ploughed field; it has been drinking in the fresh air for years. Go and take him up, and there is something to pick up, good, firm, sound flesh. There is a ruddy cheek and a bright eye. Put the child side by side with the little wizened inhabitant of that slum, and you would say, "Can the life in both be the same?" There is the same life in both, only one has struggled to develop itself in the atmosphere of a slum, and the other has had free room to grow in the atmosphere of the country.

The question I am bound to put to my soul is this—am I giving that life which is within me a fair opportunity for development; am I living in such an atmosphere that growth is next door to an impossibility? I say it, fearless of all contradiction, I am afraid that the spirit of the world is so invading many of our churches that we shall have wizened and weak Christians. How can the life of God become developed and become strong when it is not counted a crying sin for a church member to sit at the Lord's table on Sunday and to occupy his box at the theatre on the Monday? Is it marvellous that there should grow up those whose life in Christ is poor, weak, and stunted? It may be I am speaking to some here who are saying, "Well, I am so terribly cast down because I feel I am not the kind of Christian I ought to be." Perhaps not, but are you growing? Thank God if there is growth. It proves that there is life.

What is the next word? Grow up. Here the style of growth is distinguished. The growth of sin is always down. The growth of sin is a gradual ability on the part of the sinner to go into deeper and yet deeper sin and crime, with an accusing conscience. It is a gradual downward growth—a growth of self—a growing big. I suppose most of you have come across such. They have been growing in importance, especially in their own eyes of late. Oh! what big sentences roll from their lips, especially when self is the subject of discourse. They have grown big until they have grown intolerable, but the growth which Jesus Christ gives is not a growth in bigness. It is a growth up; a growth into higher motives; a growth into purer thought; a growth up into nobler aims; and growth that takes him further and further, and further still from earth. My brother, I heard a prayer some years ago that has kept to me ever since. A man of God prayed, "Lord, grant that every day I live I may be less like what I used to be, and more like what I shall be when Jesus Christ comes." This is what we want, a growth up, a growth that leaves the world increasingly far beneath.

But it is not only a growth up—it is a growth up into Him. Life when it grows must grow after that of its own type. I have been putting hyacinths into the ground. If you have done the same you have not any doubt what the flower will be. You say confidently, "I am going to have hyacinths." Why? How do you know? Because, you say, that the hyacinth bulb and the hyacinth life can only develop into the hyacinth flower. If that little crocus bulb is put into the ground it can bear no other than the crocus flower, just as the hyacinth life can only develop the hyacinth flower. Now, what is the life I have in my soul? If I am a Christian I have Christ here. He is my life: therefore, when that life grows up it must grow up into Him, for just as the crocus life can only give the crocus flower, so Christ's life in the Christian can only give Christ's life. I shall grow up into Him. Oh! for a great deal of the loss of self-identity—oh! to be lost in Jesus Christ, to grow up into Him. And then comes the difficulty—the highest point in all things. Is it not a comparatively easy thing to be a Christian in a meeting like this; and so, on the Lord's day, when we gather in the sanctuary and sit at the Master's table—it seems comparatively easy then to grow up into Him in all things, in all trials, in all temptations, in all businesses, in all the everyday afflictions of life.

It is only as we grow up into Him that we can wield any really powerful influence over others. The measure of my power to bless others is the measure in which I myself am full of Christ. The measure in which we can influence others for good is the measure in which we ourselves are like Him. Oh! may God take away our ugly tempers, our selfish dispositions, our murmurings, our raspings, our emulations, and every day we live may those round about us be able to say, "Ah! he is not so much like the old Christian that was, but he is more like what he will be." Thank God, we are going to grow up into Him in all things, and then at the last we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is.

THE LITTLE CHILDREN.

BE kind to the little children!
  Ye may not have them long;
God may call them in life's morning
  To join the angels' song;
Even now, while yet they're thrilling
  Our hearts with hope and love,
Their voices may be tuning
  For the golden harps above.

Be kind to the little children!
  The day may come too soon,
When you'll mourn with bitter mourning,
  By your quiet hearth alone,
And sigh for the noisy patter
  Of the feet upon the stair,
And turn in silent anguish
  From some tiny vacant chair.

Be kind to the little children!
  They have their part of pain,
And sorrow lieth heavy
  On childish heart and brain.
Thank God, the pain is transient,
  Or the burden were too great,
And childhood's frail endurance
  Must fail beneath the weight.

Be kind to the little children!
  So oft misunderstood.
So oft rebuked and thwarted,
  When trying to "be good,"
So oft misnomered "naughty,"
  When only tired and sad!
So oft, alas, discouraged,
  When a smile had made them glad.

Be kind to the little children!
  They were blessed by Christ the Lord!
You call them tiresome, foolish:
  Are you as near to God?
Beware, lest you crush the blossom
  As it struggles toward the sun;
Take heed how you grieve the spirit
  Of "one such little one!"

Be kind to the little children!
  Ye cannot have them long,
Time's swiftly flowing river
  Is hurrying them along;
And as careworn men and women,
  They soon must join the strife,
And fight as you are fighting,
  On the battle-field of life.

Be kind to the little children!
  In after years may come,
Like the sound of a distant music,
  The memory of home;
And the kiss of a long-lost mother,
  "The touch of a vanished hand,"
May win some weary wanderer
  To the Home of the heaven-land.

MESSRS. HURDITCH AND SPURR.

AN eight days' mission has been held by these evangelists at Wadebridge, Cornwall. The whole town and neighbourhood have been moved, and great good has been done. A special attraction and source of blessing has been the singing by Mr. Spurr; the words of life have thus reached the hearts of many. The solos have been taken up and made a part of the home music and praise, and will continue to influence for good many who seemed to be beyond the touch of other spiritual ministries.

In this mission all the churches have united, and will severally gather strength from the results. Christians have been lifted into a higher region of experience and life, and have received a stimulus to redoubled effort in the Lord's work. The Bible-readings in the afternoon have been well attended and much appreciated, and will lead to a more devout and closer study of the Word. The only source of regret in connection with this mission has been its brevity, but pressure of engagements precluded any hope of extension. The churches now are continuing the mission, and the work of the Lord is prospering in their hands. These are days of special visitation, and will be long remembered.

Wadebridge. W. S. Gill.

Notes and Comments.

HAVING to send this issue to press some days before the usual time, owing to the holidays, we are not able to acknowledge communications received later than Thursday last.

We would draw the special attention of our London readers to two important Conventions about to be held, the particulars of which will be found in our list of "Forthcoming Meetings." The subjects to be discussed are of the greatest weight and importance; we trust there will be in each case a large muster of earnest Christian workers, so that the stimulus of the meetings may be widely diffused.

In an article on "The Book of Daniel in the Light of Recent Research," in The Expositor for March, there is a remarkable reference to the image of gold set up by Nebuchadnezzar on the Plain of Dura. The objection felt to the narrative on account of the gigantic size of this image has been made much of by Rationalists and sceptics. Recent excavations at San (Tanis-Zoan), in Egypt, have disinterred a stupendous colossal image of Rameses II., which weighed 1200 tons. The statue, including the pedestal, was 115 feet high, and must have towered sixty-five feet above surrounding obelisks. The golden image of Nebuchadnezzar was about 100 feet high, and evidence is adduced that the Babylonian monarch erected it after his Egyptian victories, and after he had seen that of Rameses.

At the recent opening of a new wing of the Church Missionary Society headquarters in Salisbury-square, Fleet-street, it was stated that whereas 50 years ago there were in connection with the Society's operations 64 missionary districts, there are now about 250; 889 communicants then, now 40,757; and the native clergy have grown from 6 to 246. In the new wing, as we have already announced, there is a gathering for prayer every Thursday from 4 to 5 p.m.

When the godly Robert Raikes began his blessed work among the children, his first thought was to teach them the truths of the Bible, that they might be led to God. Thousands of pounds are annually spent in the building and support of Sunday-schools, and in many cases with glorious results. But there are Sunday-schools in which, for the morning, a collect and hymn are repeated, and then the girls and boys attend church; while for the afternoon a book of fiction, the choice being left often to an unsaved teacher, is read to the class. As one said, said, who attended such a school, "We never saw the Bible in use in the school, and we had nothing to learn from it during the week." "O blind leaders of the blind!" In every Sunday-school the first qualification for teachership ought to be conversion to God.

Dr. Trumbull, in his valuable work on "Teaching and Teachers" (Hodder & Stoughton) says:—

> "A teacher's spirit, a teacher's character, a teacher's atmosphere, and a teacher's life, impress and influence a pupil quite as much as a teacher's words. It is a teacher's duty to love his scholars, and to show his love for them; to have sympathy with them, and to evidence it; to gain a hold on their affections, outside of the class hour, as well as during it; and to pray for them specifically and in abiding faith." Sunday-school teacher, this, and nothing less than this, can alone entitle you to the name of teacher. See to it, lest "in that day" your reproach is that you undertook the work and did it not "with thy might."

"I do not think there is anything so essential to real work for God in a wholly heathen country as an entire separation and devotion to the work, so that even isolation at times has its advantages." These are the words of the young missionary, F. S. Arnot, from a little work compiled from his diary and letters, called "From the Zambesi to Benguella." They show a true missionary spirit, and a just conception of the sacredness of the missionary's calling. But they may be applied to other than mission work exclusively. "Real work for God," a consistent Christian life, can be performed only by the separated, devoted servant. Never mind what kind of honourable work we are engaged in, so that we seek to be perfect therein, doing all to the glory of God. We may all pray the prayer he so fervently offers: "I can only ask earnest prayer to God that He may be pleased to look upon this work for his name's sake, and that I may be in his hands like moist clay, impressible. Surely the one thing needful for perfect service is that we be susceptible to his sympathies and to the guidings of his Spirit."

Such a spirit as this actuating us all round would cause far less disappointment than is often felt at the imperfect work of even many Christian workers. There would be less of what so often meets the eye in advertisements —"Can do a little cooking"—"Can teach a little music, rudimentary French, and elementary Latin"—"Can do a little sewing," and so forth. O, for "this one thing I do" of Paul! O, for more thoroughness! A so-called governess will enter upon an engagement to teach, and she will have a bare smattering of five or six subjects; nothing is out-and-out. Her English is weak and "elementary" as her Latin; she knows nothing thoroughly, and her teaching—save the mark!—is a sham. The plain cook accepts the responsibility of the family table, knowing nothing of the laws of health, and the imperative necessity there is for good cooking, and knowing next to nothing of the duties he has undertaken to perform.

We want instructors in our schools who will turn out capable servants; we want teaching whose root-principle is thoroughness—mastery of one subject at least in domestic and political economy. Slip-shod morality means slip-shod Christianity in the Christian, and the testimony of the converted servant-maid to the reality of her profession in sweeping urder the mats touches the very core of all true service! We need to be like impressible clay in the great Potter's hand, that work may bear the imprimatur of his ordering.

We understand that The Boy's Own Paper, of the Religious Tract Society, whose readers have already subscribed over £1200 for two Lifeboats, besides £400 for a Hospital Cot, is promoting a Boys' Gordon Memorial on the lines known to be dear to Gordon himself, viz., to help the poorer working and suffering lads.

Projects are on foot for doing honour to the venerable Earl of Shaftesbury, on his approaching eighty-fifth birthday. Some old scholars of different ragged schools in London are to make a presentation to his lordship and each of his six sons and daughters, in token of gratitude for the good service he has rendered to this branch of Christian work. The presentation is expected to be made in Exeter Hall on May 19. Another natal gift is being prepared by a ladies' committee in connection with the Syrian Colonisation (Jews) Fund, of which the noble Earl is president.

☞ A valued lady correspondent, who has given much study to economic subjects, writes as follows:—

> "I am glad to see the articles in The Christian touching these grave social questions. I think Christian people need to take up their duty more earnestly in relation to government, both local and imperial. The sphere of politics has greatly widened, and political influence is an important talent to be used for the good of the poor and suffering classes."

These are encouraging and wise words, and we would commend them to the attention of some of our readers who fail to see that Christians may, even by practical means such as the ballot box, help to remove obstacles which stand in the way of the spreading of Christ's kingdom.

We are glad to hear that things are better than ever at Shoreditch Tabernacle; more conversions than at any time of Mr. Cuff's work in the locality. A blessed spirit of prayer and peace rests upon the Church, which is in a more spiritual state than our informant has ever known it.

"Many men, many minds." "One man's meat is another man's poison." Some stony epithets have been cast at the little poem recently published in these columns under the heading, "Is the Devil Dead?" It has been described as coarsely humorous, clever and ludicrous but injurious and profane, rubbish, &c. On the other hand, its insertion was suggested by a gentleman of position, culture, education, and refinement—an able minister of Christ, whose teachings are highly esteemed and valued by all who know him. Authors of either sex, whose names are Christian household words, have expressed their warm appreciation of the verses. It will interest some to know that they were written by Rev. F. G. Widdows, Ex-Franciscan Monk, in Toronto in 1876, and have been printed in various papers since.

To us the verses seem a very good illustration of the Wise Man's precept: "Answer a fool according to his folly, lest he be wise in his own conceit." Many a young fellow in a counting-house, or workman in a factory, would find an answer of this kind more calculated to silence infidel assaults, and even to convince the gainsayers, than more sober and heavy argument.

The same God that made the serious animals made the comic and funny ones also. The Creator of the innocent lamb, and the strong bullock, and the soaring eagle, is also the Creator of the mimicking parrot, the monkey with its tricks, the hyæna with its grotesque laughter. And every creature is the manifestation of some quality of Him who created it.

The sarcasm of Elijah was not ungodly when he taunted the priests of Baal: "Cry aloud, for he is a god; either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is on a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awaked." Nor did Paul grieve the Holy Spirit of God when his grieved spirit found vent in the irony of his appeal to the earnest saints at Corinth:—"We are fools for Christ's sake, but ye are wise in Christ; we are weak, but ye are strong; ye are honourable, but we are despised. Now ye are full; now ye are rich; ye have reigned as kings without us: and I would to God ye did reign, that we might reign with you." If the use of satire, sarcasm, and irony were forbidden to the Christian preacher and writer, books and sermons would be more dull, and not more spiritual.

A Minnesota secular paper, in a recent issue, refers to the spiritual awakenings that are now in progress in Ohio and other States of the Union, and roundly asserts that these movements are due to slackness of trade, which allows of more leisure time for attending religious meetings:—

> "It does not necessarily follow that in a money-making era the Ohio man forgets his religion; but it is undeniable that he never permits it to interfere with his business."

We do not know how far this newspaper editor may be trusted as a reliable guide in such matters, but if his contention be correct the need for a real religious revival in Ohio is great enough. The religion that can be shelved when it is likely "to interfere with business" is a transparent hypocrisy, and is not the religion of Jesus Christ.

We commend to the earnest perusal of English ladies the account on another page of "How a Lady Works in France." Would it not be possible for many of her English Christian sisters to imitate her example during the approaching summer? We shall be glad to place any who are led to adopt this suggestion, in communication with the writer of the sketch.

Just as we are sending this issue to press (Thursday afternoon, April 2), the unexpected and mournful intelligence comes to hand of the death of Earl Cairns at Bournemouth, this morning. We have not been able to ascertain details, but we understand that bronchitis was the immediate cause of death. His sudden departure from the scene of an active and useful public life will occasion sincere sorrow to the community at large. We learn that the mortal remains of the deceased Earl are to be interred at the cemetery, Bournemouth, at half-past three, on Wednesday, April 8.

One of our laws requiring to be forthwith modified is that which compels a man who is not a Quaker, Moravian, or Separatist, under penalty, to take an oath in giving judicial evidence, though he may have strong conscientious scruples as to the unscriptural nature of all oath-taking. A case has recently occurred at a coroner's inquest, in which an engine-driver refused to utter the words of the oath, on this ground. By the provisions of the law the coroner was obliged to commit the man to prison, though he discreetly allowed bail till the Home Secretary could be consulted. The Northern Echo thus wisely comments on the incident:—

> "Had he been a Quaker, a Moravian, or a Separatist, he might have affirmed to his heart's content. Being only a Primitive Methodist, with a conscience, and an incapacity for explaining away plain Scripture texts, he has suffered for a while the indignity of durance vile. Is a Primitive Methodist not entitled to the same consideration as a Quaker? The true safeguard against false witness is a prompt legal punishment, and not a formality the awful nature of which is in sad contrast to the lightness and levity with which it is administered and undertaken."

Now that the season for outdoor evangelistic work is at hand, we hope Christians in the country districts will bestir themselves, and make arrangements to secure suitable evangelists for carrying the message of salvation to the people. Mr. W. Catlin (17, Claremont-square, London, N.) asks us to say that he will be glad to give his services, and those of a helper, for village work, where such assistance may be needed.

Mr. Spurgeon continues to progress fairly well, and hopes to occupy his pulpit next Sunday. The second volume of "My Sermon Notes" will be issued soon after his return.

The following propositions are stated by Mr. William Simmons, of Merthyr Tydfil, in a pamphlet published by the South Wales Printing Works, Cardiff:—

> "Monopolies of every sort are utterly inconsistent with national progress.
>
> "The railways of every country have in the main become its highways.
>
> "All highways should be free. They should be the property of the State. The King's highway is a sanctified term in our language.
> "Our highways have become a trade monopoly, vested in irresponsible bodies, combined together for private ends.
>
> "It is necessary that the railways, to be free, should be vested in the State.
>
> "They must be acquired by the State at their market value, without injustice to the present owners.
> "Free railways are as vitally essential as other great thoroughfares; the great road to Holyhead, the Strand, Cheapside, or the Thames river."

These propositions appear to us the expression of true and righteous principles, and to foreshadow a change which must sooner or later come to pass.

Canon Knox-Little, in one of his mid-day addresses at St. Paul's during Lent, gave this vivid sketch of "the higher life":—

> "Do not be taken in by your religion of humanity. Self-seeking in eternity is self-sacrifice here. But I ask this word of my dear brothers: take my advice and turn to Christ on the cross. Turn, turn from the noise of London, turn to that spectacle of the Man of Men, ask what it means. Fix your eyes upon the Crucified Redeemer, and then remember, old man, when you are dying and your children stand round your bed, when there come the mourning coaches, when there come the following of your old commercial or political friends, if you have won your place by dishonesty and pretentiousness, fix your eyes upon your neglected Master and say, "What will it profit?" Young man, when you are tempted to betray some poor girl in the street, when you are tempted to make a bad friend by disgraceful corruption; good lady, when you are tempted to sell your daughter at the West-end for a coronet, for a fortune, to some man who does not love her, but disgraces and betrays her, fix your eyes upon the Crucified, and say, "What will it profit?" Clergyman, when you stand in the pulpit and say soft truths, and allow rhetorical exaggeration to take the place of solemn fact, my brother, fix your eyes on the Crucified. Oh, one and all, young and old, men and women, remember the decisive judgment of the Crucified is truth and duty, earnestness and self-respect, self-conquest, self-subduing, the patient bearing of the anger of the crowd, and severe self-discipline. These are the conditions of the higher life.

Dr. Moon, of Brighton, is now in Sweden, seeking to be healed of his blindness of forty-five years, if the Lord will. If not, he can say, "Thy will be done." We hear that gas-light has become painful to him; we presume on account of an increasing sensitiveness, which it is hoped may prove the precursor of restored sight.

Dr. Moon has published two or three occasional papers "on the power of prayer, and faith-healing," in the second of which he says there is in Sweden a very godly man, named Boltzius, whom God has greatly honoured and blessed in the laying on of hands, and anointing a large number of his countrymen. A lady writing on January 5, tells not only of her own healing, but that during five months at Stockholm (according to a leading evangelical clergyman, who had followed Boltzius closely all the time), three thousand had been cured, including persons whose eyes are growing again. Boltzius took a glass eye from a girl, and three days after the new eye was visible. Two other similar cases are mentioned.

Boltzius is described as a rough, uneducated man, by no means attractive in manner or person, yet, looking away from this and his somewhat eccentric manner, one can appreciate highly his simple-minded faith, and his earnest desire to point people to the Lord, and lead their thoughts away from himself.

In our next issue we shall give our usual list of "May Meetings;" if any Secretaries of Societies have not received our application form, will they kindly forward to us at once the particulars of their anniversaries?

In an article on the fashions, The Daily News deprecates the use (or abuse) of birds for hat trimmings, as cruel and in very bad taste:—

> "It would be well if Englishwomen could realise that to a thoughtful mind their dress trimmings and bonnet decorations of slaughtered birds conveys a feeling of repulsion that is all the stronger when the wearer is young and beautiful. The reflection that to adopt flowers as trimmings would be affording a means of livelihood to hundreds of one's poorer sisters would, it might be imagined, be a sufficient reason, if no other existed, for rejecting the little murdered birds; but this is unfortunately far from being the case, and it is well known that when the hideous fashion first came in, so universally was it adopted, that want and misery entered into thousands of homes where artificial flower-making had previously provided the means of life."

A while ago we heard that some American ladies were adorning themselves with snakes. However repulsive this was it had the advantage of destroying noxious reptiles, instead of the winged creatures whose beauty and melody delight the eye and ear. We are specially grieved to see the adornment of Christian girls bearing witness to these barbarities.

FEMALE STRANGERS IN MANCHESTER.

A VERY good work is done in Manchester in providing lodging accommodation for passing travellers, and other women who have no friendly shelter within a convenient distance. The Lodging House is at B105, Piccadilly, two minutes' walk from the London-road Railway station. We observe from the report lately issued that during the past year 840 names of lodgers were registered. Instances are given to show that this place of shelter has been to some a veritable refuge from dangers of the most serious kind. Help has been rendered in various ways, and altogether the place fills an important niche in the social economy of the city.

In forwarding to us a copy of the report, Miss Wright, hon. treasurer and superintendent, says:—

> "It is with no slight feeling of thankfulness that I look back to the commencement of the scheme. The increased zeal and energy displayed by all, to raise women and to put down vice, has been a marked feature during the eight years of our work. Here the interest is marvellously developed. Thank God for raising up Ellice Hopkins to give public voice to our national moral degradation! Probably only women who work in schemes like our Station Lodging Houses are aware how low is the tone of morals amongst women. Have luxury and high wages demoralised the nation, or are we now visited 'unto the third and fourth generation' for the sins of the fathers?
>
> "Under strict watchful care, the Station Lodging Houses are a most valuable preventive effort; but without that they would be a prolific source of evil. If you can induce others, judiciously and carefully, to open kindred schemes, you will benefit my sex, especially in London. At present the Shelter near Paddington Station is closed."

LORD RADSTOCK IN INDIA.

DEAR SIR,—I think many of your readers will be interested to hear a little more about India. After we left Calcutta we went to Burdwan and found a nice work being done by Zenana ladies. From there we went to the Santhal Mission conducted by Messrs. Boeressen and Skrefsrud. They have now about 3000 communicants, and there seems a bright spiritual atmosphere among these brethren, who twenty years ago were cruel heathen. From there we went to Benares, the centre of Hinduism, with its 1500 temples, and where hundreds of thousands of pilgrims come from all parts of India to wash in the Ganges. There we found a mission of the London Missionary Society, with a college and school largely attended. It was an interesting instance of how Hindu prejudice is melting away, that the Maharajah of Benares and the leading Hindus attended the meeting I held for the natives.

At Allahabad we found good work being done, our American brethren having a large work going on. We had happy meetings in the place. Then at Cawnpore, Lucknow, Agra, Meerut, Peshawur, at the mouth of the Kyber Pass, we saw God's work being carried on. In most of these places there are large mission schools for a class corresponding to that in our public schools in England.

The labours of our American brethren are of the utmost importance, and in several places they have enterprises on a considerable scale, which God is blessing. At Lahore we had the privilege of seeing Mr. Newton, one of the Lodiana missionaries who sent to England the proposal for universal prayer, which led to the establishment of the Week of Prayer. He has been fifty years a missionary in India, and his walk with God is a source of blessing to those who meet him. At Allahabad there had been recently a Hindu festival, attended by 100,000 pilgrims. Among them were 2000 fakirs —a sort of Hindu friars, who live austere lives. One we talked with had five fires around him, to burn out the evil coming by five senses; he said he did not sin, because God was dwelling in him, but we elicited that he drank spirits and smoked opium; but though he evidently did both in excess he did not consider this as sin. Another had lived sixty years on one slab, day and night, and only left it every morning to go and bathe in the Ganges; he also said he was sinless, though he denied the Son of God. Another instance of how people may deceive themselves who claim to be sinless.

One cannot be too thankful for the admirable way in which the government of the country is carried on by the Civil Service. The confidence of the natives in the English administration of justice is boundless; if they have a good cause they make every effort to get it tried before an English rather than a native judge, hence the wonderfully small force necessary to keep order. While Russia needs 80,000 troops for St. Petersburg district alone, 80,000 British troops and native troops suffice for order in India, with its 250 millions, including several powerful native princes with standing armies of their own: for this we must be very thankful.

In most parts of India, property is far safer than in England. People live in bungalows where anyone can walk in, where doors and windows are open day and night. Numbers of native servants are always about, having access to everything, and yet less loss is heard of than in England. In some places near the frontiers of native States this is otherwise; but as a rule it is quite safe to leave your house open, and ladies can walk about after dark at Bombay and other places without any fear of annoyance, while at Bombay the police force is less in proportion to the population than in London.

Peshawur is celebrated for the ferocity of its fanatics. Murders have so frequently been committed that even now many from the neighbouring camp hesitate to go; and yet we found two Zenana ladies living alone in the city, and quietly going on with their work. We were deeply interested to find that many of the old experienced workers are of opinion that all over India not only is prejudice breaking down rapidly, but there is a work of conviction going on, and probably before long there will be a great ingathering of souls. Many are now groping in the dark who assuredly will be brought to the light and life in Christ Jesus.

There is a great future for Christianity in India, but it is deeply important that those labouring for Christ should labour for Christ alone, and not bring into India the divisions caused by denominational distinctions which have been caused by national law or national history, and which are without any meaning to native Christians. But this question must be left to a future letter. Meanwhile I would say to those who seek the peace of India: Thank God, and take courage.

We are thankful to find in nearly every station a good work going on among soldiers. We have seen many brought to Christ during the last six weeks.—Yours for Christ's sake, RADSTOCK.

P.S.—I am in hopes of being able to visit Rome and Florence on my way home, about the end of April.

Lahore, March 3.

THE HUNGRY ARMY.

HOW IT IS RECRUITED AND HOW IT IS FED.

"MEET me at Liverpool-street Station at midnight next Saturday, and I will show you some of the saddest sights in London." So spake Mr. Munro, and he kept his word. Engaged for this work by the Congregational Union, this indefatigable worker has for some time laboured amongst the outcast and unemployed of our great city. He largely helped to collect the facts made public in "The Bitter Cry of Outcast London," so that few are better suited for such work.

Starting from the appointed meeting-place, our first halt is at Collier's Rents Hall, Borough, the headquarters of the mission. The door is surrounded by a small group of men and women, who clamour eagerly for breakfast tickets. But these are not given out till after 1 a.m. (the hour at which lodging-houses close), so as to ensure that the recipients are really "dossing out" for the night. They are told that the distribution will be made in Covent-garden at 3 a.m. This clears the ground at once.

"Oh, yes, likely we're a-goin' to tramp three miles there and back again for a breakfast!"

"Well, my friend, that's your only chance."

Says a woman, "I've got a hole in my boot. I can't walk so far!"

"Oh, put your boots under your arm, you'll soon get there."

"Well, mates," says a third, "it's no wus'n stoppin' 'ere. Let's go." And by nearly all the hungry-looking group the start is made.

A sad spectacle presents itself on London Bridge. A young woman and three small children have just walked from Dorking. Surely a strange hour at which to arrive in this great city, without the remotest knowledge of anything or anybody in it! Glad enough are these weary wayfarers of a kind word and a ticket, with permission to repair at once to the Hall, and sleep till breakfast-time! Eastcheap, Minories, Ratcliff-highway, Tower-hill, Cannon-street, Fleet-street, all yield their contingents, and many are the humble blessings showered on the heads of the "recruiting sergeants."

At half-past two the little band is joined by Mr. Arnold White, who has done much to arouse the sympathy of the wealthier classes on behalf of the unemployed. He takes the lead, and by the time Covent-garden is reached some hundred and twenty men and women have gathered beneath the meagre shelter afforded by its cloisters. The general shuffling and polite salutes show that many have been there on previous similar occasions.

The command is no sooner given than obeyed. A ticket is gladly accepted by each, and in ten minutes we are left alone; but in that short period a few words with one and another has conveyed more idea to the mind of what destitution is than could volumes of literature on the subject.

Trafalgar-square, the Thames Embankment, Blackfriars, and Southwark are visited in turn, and by 4.30 a.m. some 320 persons have sought the kindly shelter of the Mission Hall in Colliers' Rents. A short nap is indulged in by those whose minds are not too much burdened with the troubles of life, thus affording a good opportunity for the student of nature and character to exercise his powers of observation and discernment.

At six o'clock all are aroused to "business" by the clatter of pint mugs and the savoury smell of hot coffee. To each person is then distributed three large slices of bread, with meat, and as much liquid as they can consume. After a hearty repast, a few kindly words are spoken by friends present, and arrangements are made to put the able-bodied in the way of employment.

Many of our readers may know that additional pleasure-gardens and other public works are in course of construction in various parts of the Metropolis; large numbers of the unemployed have thus found occupation. In addition to this an exhaustive emigration scheme is in force, by which carefully-selected men are put directly under the care of friends in Canada and New South Wales, who personally guarantee them labour in these newer, broader fields.

It is a piteous sight at early morning to see hundreds of men at the Dock gates struggling for the possession of a ticket that will entitle them to a day's, or part of a day's, work. Perhaps out of a group of one hundred, fifteen or twenty only are wanted. The rest have no alternative but to wait for the chance of another "call." These find relief from the same source, which once or twice a week distributes the breakfast tickets, which are gladly accepted in large numbers. The fact of the men being caught in the act, so to speak, of seeking honest work, is a strong argument in their favour. It is very gratifying to find that some who have had breakfast, be it ever so little, will not accept a ticket lest they should deprive any who have had none at all. In other instances some refuse on the ground of having a starving wife and family, and they "could not think of sitting to a meal with them starving at home." Provision is made to send relief to such cases upon due investigation.

This good work is claiming and receiving increasing notice from the upper classes. The Princess Louise, Mrs. Gladstone, Baron Rothschild, and others were present at a recent breakfast at Collier's Rents. Rev. J. Guinness Rogers has provided several of these free meals, and the wife of the Prime Minister has promised to provide one soon. Pamphlets containing most interesting descriptions of the work, including a realistic account of twenty-four hours spent by Mr. Arnold White in the assumed rôle of a dock labourer, may be had from Rev. A. Mearns, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C. We trust that many friends will be willing to help in providing these breakfasts (which can be provided at 3d. per head) for the multitudes who form the Hungry Army. G. E. M.

SAILORS IN THE MEDITERRANEAN.

A CIRCULAR has been issued describing the work of the Sailors' Rest Aid Society and Seamen's Temperance League; copies may be obtained of Captain Darby, 68, Shaftesbury-terrace, Stoke-road, Gosport, honorary secretary. Mr. Stephen Burrowes, Naples, superintendent, writes respecting the work: "Besides the Rests at Naples, and the others in formation for Messina and Pozzuoli, it is intended to have similar institutions in seven other ports. The need of these safe anchorages for seamen is infinitely more necessary in foreign ports than at home. The Seamen's Temperance League is a Gospel temperance movement, and thousands of seamen have received benefit socially and religiously from it during the past twelve months."

CENTRAL AFRICANS IN LONDON.

AFRICA has an attraction for the geographer, the naturalist, and the merchant, and no less to the Christian, for the Church of Christ has sacrificed more lives in telling to Africa the way of salvation than have been sacrificed to all the other interests put together. Yet how little we know of the great Continent andi ts many millions! The deep-rooted idolatry which is of the vilest form, and the curse of slavery which spreads a death pall over the land, it is true, have claimed the sympathy of Christians, and the Churches have not been slow to respond. Still Africa is to a large extent a terra incognita.

London is visited by a large number of Central Africans, whose homesteads lie between the shores of the newly-discovered Nyanazas and the Nyassa. Some of the localities between those lakes have been depopulated by the Arab slave hunter to supply the demand of the slave markets at Zanzibar, Quitoa, and elsewhere, Indeed the deportation has been so great that the Soudan, Somali, and other Mohammedan countries have received very large accessions from them.

It may seem strange that the London City Mission should appear in the field to aid in the spiritual welfare of this oppressed race, but it is to this special portion of the work we wish to refer. It will naturally be asked, How do Central Africans reach London?

These men have all been sold in the slave market, or are the children of those who have been so sold. We have counted in London representatives of no less than seventeen Central African tribes from which the slave hunter has drawn his supply. These have all been driven along the death route to the coast, but not one in ten of the original number lived to reach the slave market. Those who survived were sold to Arab dealers, who packed them in dhows for transport more like herrings than human beings, while on the high seas these piratical dhows have been seized by British cruisers and the living freight set free. As the Central African can stand any amount of heat they have proved themselves useful to the engineers of our large steamers, and thus, in the course of the year, thousands come within the influence of the London City Mission.

This is a field that encourages the evangelist, for these men have abandoned the idolatry of their country and have accepted, in name, the faith of their captors, with which, however, they are but little acquainted. Hence they profess a strange compound of African fetishism and Mohammedanism. Like all idolaters they are very superstitious, and deal largely in charms and witchery. But the Gospel of Jesus Christ is esteemed by them. The Central Africans seem ripe for something better than idolatry, so that it depends much on the activity of the Christian Church whether they shall accept Christ or Mohammed.

The Swahili language has become the vernacular of these men, though many of them have learnt the patois of Bomba and the Nile. They will listen with attention to the truths of the Gospel, which they too often think are intended for educated Europeans, and not for slaves who have been bought and sold for what bone and muscle would fetch. The word "Mwakosi," Saviour, is but little understood, for they know more about oppression and slavery than salvation. A Saviour for Africa therefore sounds strangely in their ears.

The Asiatic Rest in the East India-road is superintended by one of the missionaries of the London City Mission, and the following facts refer to this Mission Hall. Sangura belonged to the Migenda tribe. He was captured when a child, and being released from a slave dhow by a man-of-war, was placed in an African orphanage. When he was met in London he was a runaway. It was reading the Prodigal Son in his native tongue that attracted his notice, and drew him to the Asiatic Rest. There he seemed rapidly to drink in the truth. Alas! when he got again among his countrymen he appeared to fall to the level of the rest. But he had learnt the truth, and had taken with him the Word of Life, which he could read. He returned to Europe the following year, and encountered a terrible storm. His sins now rose before him, and he conceived himself to be another Jonah. He made a vow to lead a better life should he be spared to live through the storm. His life was saved, but he reached London a shipwrecked Swahili. His perilous adventure, however, was a blessing to him, for he has since been a steady believer in Jesus.

Salim had not himself been in bondage, but his parents were rescued slaves. Again, it was the reading of Holy Scripture among the Swahilis on board that brought him to the Asiatic Rest. At this time his father was dead, and his mother, fearing his contact with Europeans, cautioned him against receiving the faith of the Wazurgu. Salim, however, became impressed with the need of faith in Christ, but his promise to his mother was a serious difficulty in his way. He was advised in this anxious matter, and left seemingly undecided. He came again the next year, with a face happy, and as bright as a jet-black African face could be. During the year his mother had passed away, and, therefore, he felt himself no longer bound by his promise to her in such an important matter. He had fully accepted Christ, and came to the Asiatic Rest to report himself a happy Christian.

So there are precious sheaves to be gathered among released African slaves, and the London City Mission has an interesting share in the good work.

SOLDIERS AT THE CAPE.

IN recent letters from the Soldiers' Home, Cape Town, Mrs. Osborne writes:—"The new hall and rooms for soldiers were opened on Feb. 12. We had a very bright and happy evening; about 150 soldiers sat down to tea. . . . Amongst the few men belonging to Sir C. Warren's force who have been detained here, are some whom we shall miss very much. They came direct from the Home at Plymouth, and were so very thankful to find a Home here. They have helped us so heartily. The singing of the Christian soldiers and Mr. Howe has been blest. More than one has been drawn to the Home by his singing, 'Where is my wandering boy to-night?'

"We are having much encouragement among the lads who have come out lately. Some of them are from the East of London, and have attended the meetings and night-schools at Harley House. A petty officer at Simon's Bay is doing, I believe, a blessed work in a native village at a little distance from the town. Between two or three hundred young soldiers have lately arrived, most of them under twenty years of age. The temptations in the town are dreadful."

Any help for this work will be thankfully received by Miss A. Gurney, Hon. Sec., 12, Camden Hill-road, Gipsy Hill, S.E.

PARTRIDGE GREEN.—An iron mission-room has been erected here. One portion of it has been utilised for a reading-room, and a library has been added. With deep thankfulness to God, the Rector, Rev. T. W. Langshaw, and his Curate, Rev. G. S. Brewer, send forth a brief report, believing that in a special manner they were divinely directed to found this mission, and praying for wisdom and grace to use it for God's glory.

BIBLE-CLASS UNION.—The spring half-yearly social gathering in connection with this Union took place on Saturday, March 28, at the rooms of the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street. After tea the company adjourned to the lecture-hall, where was held a meeting of much warmth and enthusiasm, presided over by Mr. Alfred Woods. Addresses were given by Rev. W. R. Mowll and Mr. Russell Hurditch upon the study of the Word of God, with special reference to its study in Bible-classes and houses of business. Some practical suggestions were given by the Chairman upon "How the Bible should be Studied." The object of the Union is to commence Bible-classes in business houses where they do not exist, and to aid and strengthen those already existing. The Hon. Secretary is Mr. F. Phillips, 11, Vere-street, W.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

Tunis.—The Protestants here have received a grant of land on which to erect a place of worship. The Bey of Tunis has subscribed £60 towards the building fund.

Professor Tholuck.—Professor Witte is bringing out a life of Dr. Tholuck, for many years Theological Professor in the University of Halle. Tholuck, born in Breslau in 1799, greatly influenced the Evangelical Church of Germany, which was deeply Rationalistic, strengthening and reviving Christian faith.

The Society for the Spread of Christian Literature sent out, in honour of the Emperor of Germany's birthday, 229,000 copies of evangelical sermons and journals, being 162,000 beyond the average number. These were distributed in all parts of the Fatherland, Russia, Switzerland, and North America.—Evan. Anzeiger.

Appenzell.—A Christian family, that has already given generously to this Canton, offered an estate, value 70,000 francs, for a lunatic asylum, on condition that Evangelical Deaconesses should be employed there, and that Pastor Zellweger should always have the right of visiting it. The Society of Public Utility, to whom the gift was offered, declined the proposal.—Journal Rèligieux.

Nimes.—M. Hyacinthe Loyson has been giving two lectures at Nimes, "Republicanism and Atheism," and "France and America." Le Christianisme and L'Evangéliste speak very highly of the thoughts enunciated, and of the directness with which religious questions were treated. The audiences were "electrified by his marvellous eloquence, noble intelligence, and powerful imagination."

Vaud.—The Servants' Home and the Refuge for Young Girls held their anniversary March 18. At the Home 117 servants were received in 1884, of whom 63 paid for their entire board, and 17 received it gratuitously; the remainder were helped. The average cost of each was about 11d. per day. The Refuge has had difficult work with some girls who have been spoiled from childhood; with others the success has been encouraging.

The Y.M.C.A. of French-speaking Switzerland has done a good work among soldiers. At Bière 1550 soldiers were stationed last year. Two rooms were opened for their use, a large one for reading, writing letters, &c., and a smaller one for meetings. The Colonel and other officers were frequently present at the meetings. The Committee now intends to join a coffee-house to the reading-room, and to institute open-air games.—Journal Rèligieux.

South Africa.—M. Bagner, of the French Foreign Missions, writes to the Journal Religieux to say that the drought in Lessouto, which has caused such a grievous famine there, has almost come to an end, and it is hoped that some part of the harvest may be saved. Grain from Europe has also been sent to the African Market, so that wheat is no longer at famine price. The total amount of subscriptions towards the famine relief fund was rather ever 11,000 francs. M. Coillard set out for the Barotsi capital, December 10. M. Jeanmairet, who remained with Madame Coillard, wrote on December 22 that all was going on well.

The Sabbath in Paris.—A Society for the instruction of Republican youths has been giving a course of twelve lectures. One was given by M. Hubbard on the observance of the Sabbath. This being a Freethinking Society no notice was taken of the religious side of the question, but on the grounds of liberty, health, social and individual interest, it was contended that work should not be obligatory on the Sunday. Workshops, mills, manufactories, &c., should be legally closed. A seventh-day rest was shown to be better than the tenth-day rest of the Republic, and the almost universal rest of Sunday in England and the United States was praised.—L'Evangeliste.

Neuchâtel.—Two meetings for the consideration of the second coming of Christ have been held in Neuchâtel recently. The eager attendance of the public and its sustained attention, prove how largely this subject is occupying the thoughts of many Christians. Professor Godet expounded the subject with extreme lucidity, completeness, and soberness. He was careful not to construct an anticipatory history of the future, lest we should fall into the error of the Jews, who had formed so complete a picture of the Messiah's appearance that they were unable to recognise in the person and work of Jesus the execution of the expected programme. Professor Godet thinks the saints will not escape the privilege of bearing witness in the fierce persecution of Antichrist.—Journal Religieux.

HOW A LADY WORKS IN FRANCE.

DEAR SIR,—Appeals have recently been made through your paper to Christians speaking French, and possessing an independent income, to give themselves to Christian work in France. I know the French and their needs well, and have been doing for some time what is suggested, in a very small, quiet way; and my experience as to expenditure, way of living and mode of work, may be seasonable and helpful to the large-hearted who have small purses. If you think so, make use of what I write as you please.

Expenditure.—My yearly income has been £60; my yearly expenditure, under £50. I live in a provincial town of France, and in the summer go to take a course of mineral waters, to the mountains, and after to the sea coast.

Mode of Living.—Hitherto, I have lived in furnished lodgings: a sitting-room and small bedroom, without attendance, cost 30 francs a month; all requisite utensils for cooking and living were provided. I was entirely my own servant, and found it a very independent, comfortable, and homelike mode of living. Excellent markets, with varied and reasonable supplies, provided a table without stint of quantity or quality. A length of day from six to ten left plenty of time free from household matters for other uses, reading, writing, sewing, walking, and visits with some Christian object in view.

Mode of Working.—I get acquainted with the people at the market, and in the cemetery. This leads to personal home visits. A book for addresses is kept at hand for the names of those who seem to welcome the proposal to come and see them. My "visiting list" is a large one, and as I am a great walker I go to distant places. Sometimes tea is taken, made, and shared. When I go back to France I mean to try and gather the neighbours together in one of the homes where we can have tea and a Bible-reading. These visits are always welcome. No money is given, but Gospels, floral-cards, tracts, pictorial papers for children are given, explained, and turned into prayer. It is a good plan to take some chlorate of potash for gargles, camphorated spirits of wine, and cotton wool for toothache; and a mixture (made from 1 oz. of chilli peppers, 2 tablespoonsfuls of salt, and a pint of vinegar) for external application for sore throats, coughs, and all sorts of aches and pains. Everybody appreciates bodily help, but not at first spiritual help.

I used to give tracts, with a word of advice. It is good to read these carefully before going out and to underline leading thoughts. It is food for self-digestion, and the receivers receive some of the vitality the giver has got therefrom. Perhaps the seed-sowing at the cemetery on Sunday afternoons may be a useful idea to general travellers on the Continent. Many go there to visit the last resting-places, and to pray for the souls, of their departed friends. They have time, and are in a frame of mind when a word about their own souls is likely to be well received and to do good. The floral text-cards give the introduction. They are offered, admired, the price is asked, and they are told it is a gift, to be paid for by a promise made and kept: they must read, hear it explained, then take it home, keep it, read it, pray about it, till it gets written on their hearts. Others, passing, stop to hear what is going on; then they want a card, and there is sometimes quite a little knot of listeners to the reading of the different texts and explanations. They are such interested listeners that it is easy to speak home. This opening-up of the inner soul-life, and God's voice in the garden, is something new and fresh, they feel it is what they need and like; many say so, and wish more of this teaching. Besides, they get something to take home to read.

The cemetery is a good mission-field; sorrow and trouble soften the soil for good seed. I avoid speaking of Romish errors, unless questioned, but it is good to write classified texts, proving Protestant truth, on the back of the floral cards. Those who have Testaments can find the passages, and they can be talked over in the visits at home. Thus sound doctrine will come to replace error, as light dispels darkness. They are not afraid of De Lacy's Testament, authorised by their own Church.

I am now forming a lending library, the books to be changed when visiting. Other hints might be given to those to whom mission work is new, but to the earnest worker experience is the best teacher. Enough has been said to show the willing-minded possessor of a small income that a happy, useful life may be found in France. I must add, however, that though this casual work is good, something different is needed to make France a "missionary nation"—aggressive, thorough, consecutive work, conversion, training, teaching, ploughing, clearing, planting in this large field. Still this preliminary work may produce material for after and more decisive work, for which much might be done by combined workers with combined incomes, living independently, and done, too, on the self-supporting thrift system, with effective and lasting results.

A FRIEND OF CHRISTIAN WORK IN FRANCE.

SCANDINAVIANS IN LONDON.

A BRIEF account of the good work being done at Miss Hedenstrom's Scandinavian Temperance Sailors' Home, situated in Leman-street, E., forms an interesting little book of fifty pages. It is written by "A Norseman," who describes what he saw and heard when recently visiting the Home. One or two extracts will give our readers some idea of the work:—

"The first who entered the office was an old weather-beaten tar. The only word I could pick up from his conversation with Miss Hedenstrom was 'pawn ticket.' After he was gone she told me the following sad story, in connection with his career—sad in one way, but glorious in another. About seven months ago this sailor had been paid off from a long voyage with more than £70. As usual, a number of runners and boarding-masters were watching outside the paying-office, like eagles for their prey. The poor fellow had been foolish enough to accept one of these rascals' 'most kind' invitation to come in and have a drink. Sailors, as a rule, are very generous, particularly on pay-days. Our friend could not accept a drink without returning the compliment. The horrible mixtures sold in many of these East-end public-houses have an almost immediate effect on people daily using them, and far more so on a sailor who has been away from spirits for months. When our friend left the 'pub,' he was at the mercy of his companion.

"He woke up the next morning in the 'boarding-house' where he lived, robbed of every penny, even of his coat, waistcoat, watch, and chain. Nineteen months' hard-earned wages gone in less than twelve hours. A wife and children at home daily waiting in expectant joy for his return, for he had written the same day telling of his coming to spend the winter with them, as he now had earned a good lot of money. Instead of giving a helping hand to the poor fellow, the 'boarding-master,' hearing of his misfortune, took whatever clothes there was left, and threw the man out of his house. Without shelter, without food, robbed of his money, his clothes, and even of his carpenter's tools, there he stood out in the street, laughed at by his friends of yesterday. The music, roaring, and laughter from the dancing-saloons rung out to him 'Fool, fool!' From these places he could expect no help, no cheering words. He was desperate. A voice said within him, 'Take your life, and your troubles are over.' His mind was made up, he was already on the road; then another voice spoke: 'What about wife and children, and what about eternity?' He felt the cold perspiration oozing out of his skin, his eyes became dim, and he sat down on a staircase.

"A few minutes later Miss Hedenstrom came past from her meeting at the 'Strangers' Rest.' She saw the man, and knew by his dress that he was a sailor. He did not notice her before she put her hand on his shoulder, saying, 'What is the matter, my friend? Why are you sitting out in the rain? Come home with me to the Temperance Home, and I will give you some hot tea, for you are shaking with cold.' The man looked up. His eyes were full of tears. Those were the first kind words he had heard for ever so long. He hesitated. 'Come along, my friend, it is not far away, just a few minutes' walk.' Still he hesitated, for how could he believe that anyone would be his friend? However, Miss Hedenstrom would not give in, and he came. Before she had reached the 'Home' she knew his sad story, and he in return had been told the 'old, old story, of Jesus and his love.' During the evening prayer he sobbed as if his bosom would burst. The Lord be praised! he found peace that night for his soul, and he has ever since been a true follower of Christ. The next day he wrote to his wife telling her all that happened since his last letter to her. Two eventful days in that man's life. Before the end of the week he was again out on the deep, happy in spite of all his misfortunes. The only thing his robber had left him was a gold ring. Evidently he had been unable to get it off the finger. This our sailor had pawned the day before he went to sea again, as he was much in need of clothing. The pawn-ticket was left in Miss Hedenstrom's care. Now he had returned again, well supplied with money. Most of this Miss Hedenstrom had already sent to his wife, the remainder he was to buy tools and clothing with, not to forget to 'release his pawned wedding-ring.' This is the sad and glorious story of the 'Pawn-ticket.'

"The next visitor was a herculean-built young Norwegian. He had his left arm in a sling, and his face was disfigured by several scratches. The poor fellow looked right down as Miss Hedenstrom, pointing at him, said to me, 'Look, he is one of my bad boys yet, but he has promised to become a good one.' His arm was severely cut by glass. Miss Hedenstrom examined it, and put the bandage on in a way that showed it was not the first time she had acted surgeon. The story of this young fellow was very similar to the one already related. He had been paid off with several pounds. Some vile woman had caught hold of him coming out from the pay-office. He had forgotten his promise to Miss Hedenstrom, to keep clear of these 'sharks' and come straight up to her with his money. The woman had taken him to one of those horrible dens in St. George's-street, E. There he had become intoxicated, and in this helpless state robbed of his money. When, late in the evening, he woke up and found his gold gone, he behaved like a madman. He had first knocked down the landlord of the public-house where he had slept. Next, he had given the barman a blow on the head, making him insensible; and finally, when several in the 'pub' had come to the landlord's assistance, he had fought so desperately with the crowd that it took four policemen to secure him. Eight days' prison and great pain in his arm had, however, been so profitable a lesson for him that Miss H. now had every hope of his becoming a better and wiser man—even a soldier for Christ.

"Before Miss H. had finished her narrative about the last visitor, another entered. This was an elderly man, with a most pleasant face. Peace stood stamped thereon, and I could almost see that he belonged to Jesus. In his hand he held a book—the Bible I found out it was. Pointing to some place in that blessed book, I understood he asked for information. This Miss H. gave him, and he went out with a face as bright as a new sixpence. 'One of your own boys?' I remarked to Miss H. 'He is one of the first brought to Christ before this Home was opened.' Who would have thought that this man seven years ago was lying in the street in a dead-drunken state? Who would have dreamt that he, fifteen years ago, had run away from wife and parents, and for more than eight years never sent them a single line of his whereabouts? Time after time Miss H. had been tempted to give him up as impossible to redeem, but at last he was caught in the Good Fisherman's net. Wife and parents had thought him dead. When they heard he was alive they dreaded his return, but their fear vanished when they learned that the old drunkard had become a well-dressed, respectable child of God."

Besides other instances of the way in which many of the "dear boys" have been preserved from becoming a prey to crimps and sharks while ashore, the pamphlet contains letters from those who have, from time to time, shared the comforts and blessings of the Home. The whole is intensely interesting. Copies may be obtained from the Home, 88, Leman-street, E.

AN ANTI-SMOKING CRUSADE has recently begun among the students in Edinburgh University, and is succeeding beyond the most sanguine hopes with which it was started some weeks ago. Between eighty and ninety students, all at one time smokers, have given up the use of tobacco. A meeting was held, where the pros. and cons. of the matter were publicly discussed, to the complete discomfiture of the upholders of a wasteful and demoralising habit.

ANOTHER CRY FROM CHINA.

"COME OVER AND HELP US."

DEAR SIR,—Just at the present time, when the affairs of China and France are occupying so large a place in the attention of the English public, I should like to remind your readers—my brethren in the Lord—of the need there is for the constant, earnest, expectant prayers of God's people at home on behalf on the Christian workers in this vast heathen Empire. Not only in the open ports on the Eastern Coast line, but in the far distant and isolated cities throughout seventeen of the provinces of China earnest witnesses for God have gone at their Lord's command to proclaim the good tidings of light and life. Here a solitary missionary and his wife; yonder two young men recently arrived in the country; in another place perhaps one lonely worker to uplift the light amid the thick darkness of a whole province; whilst in more favoured stations there are, it may be, a married missionary and his wife, assisted by two or three unmarried workers. Even in the ports and seaboard provinces, where missionaries are to be found in largest numbers, the supply is such that would speedily prompt the cry of "needy parishes" and "neglected countrysides" if it were in England; whilst in the far distant provinces such as Kansuh, Shansi, Shensi, Seychuen, Kweichan, and Yünnan it would be no difficult matter to find parishes as large as the whole of England occupied (?) by two solitary workers. In many cases those who are found standing in these advance ports are little more than raw recruits, so far as acquaintance with the language and life of the people is concerned.

It is a matter for devout thankfulness to God that at the present day this long-closed empire is opened from end to end in such a manner that the heralds of the Cross are able to travel in any part of it, without fear of official interference, and, save in one or two notably lawless districts, or under the stimulus of some great excitement from without, with abundant tokens of courtesy and friendliness on the part of the people. But the act of God in thus opening up the country to the Gospel has laid the burden of responsibility to occupy the land on his Church, and, whilst we thank God for his part of the work, let us seek for grace and light to do our part. The cries of God's servants in China are going up to their Lord, that He will thrust forth more labourers into his harvest field, and the prayers of many at home are united with ours to this end. It may be that a part of God's large answer shall be found in the quiet inner voice, saying to some brother or sister as they read these words, "Go thou . . . I am with thee." Oh, that such may not hurriedly put the thought from them, but may ponder it and pray over it, and, in the light of God's promised Spirit, determine, not what they would like, but what God would like. Not what they are fit for, but what God is fitting them for. Not what friends, and affections, and proclivities are calling them to, but what God is calling them to.

The close bond that exists between parents and children is hard to loosen even for a time, and in the experience of most of us there has been—and in that of those who yet shall come, there must and will be, a cruel wrench when the time of parting comes. Yet we do not leave our parents for Jesus' sake, to go to scorn and shame and certain death, as He did for our sakes. No Christian mother of to-day is called to relinquish and to suffer for Jesus' sake as Mary was called to do for the lost world's sake, when she stood by the cross and saw her son die. Oh! that Christian parents would—as they pray for the heathen—seek for their children as individuals the high honour of being light bearers amid the thick darkness. Are there not many parents who could themselves manage to support one son or daughter—upon whom the Lord had laid his commands—in China? Are there not many Sunday-schools who could at least support a native evangelist or Bible woman? Are there not hundreds of Christian congregations who, with hardly perceptible personal effort, could maintain one or two of their number whilst bearing the Gospel to the heathen?

In many respects China presents advantages and facilities which are denied to the brave pioneer missionary in such places as Congoland, Siberia, or Terra del Fuego. For the most part China is healthy, and in some parts the climate is much superior to that of England. Such is the case in this province, For nine months of the year—from October 1 to July 1—hardly a shower falls, whilst the air is dry and bracing. The lowest reading of the thermometer in most years is thirty-six degrees, whilst the highest is seventy-eight degrees. This city of Ta Li Fu lies in a long valley, occupied in half its width by a large lake thirty miles long by seven wide. Behind the city a grand range of hills raise their snow-capped peaks 6000 feet above our heads, whilst the city itself is about 6000 feet above sea level.

Within eight days' journey of here, in each direction, there are at least a dozen cities and large towns, which could be most profitably occupied by a mission station. I have recently visited several towns to the north and northwest, and in almost every place I met with a kindly reception. In one place I received some petty persecution, but I believe that was because the officials thought we were the hated Romanists. Yet, with all these cities lying to the north, south, east, and west, we are compelled, for lack of labourers, to confine our efforts to this place. At present there are two young men in this city, and the senior of the two has only been in the Empire a year and a half, so it may well be supposed that the force is very inadequate to the work.

To the east we need to travel thirteen days to reach the next station, where are three missionaries at present; to the west twenty-one days' hard travel lies between us and the workers at Bhamo. To the southward I suppose we should meet no Protestant missionaries nearer than the brave American pioneers at Zimmè, or our brother Macdonald at Penang, whilst to the northward we should, I believe, only find our brother Parker and his wife between here and the North Pole.

If space permitted I should like to speak about the Aboriginal tribes of this province. Of these there are the Min-Chai, Lissu, Lolo Pai-i, and many others, besides the Kacheyus on the Burmese frontier, and the Ku-tong or Eastern Thibetans in the north-west. Chinese records give the names of about seventy different tribes, and among these there are many distinct clans. For all these multitudes of souls there is not a single missionary to tell of Jesus. I have mixed to some considerable extent with members of the Min-Chai tribe, and have had servants from among them, and my experience so far gives me very favourable opinions of them.

Four days ago a proclamation was posted on the walls of this city—as elsewhere throughout the Empire—announcing the decision of the Empress to go to war with France, and asserting that China can easily repel her assailants. The proclamation charges the people to be careful in distinguishing between Frenchmen and those of other nationalities in their midst. The French priests are not to be molested so long as they confine themselves to religious matters, but the people are to look upon them as "enemies," and not to have any intercourse with them.

We, on the other hand, are to be looked upon as "honoured guests of the Empire," and are to be treated with all courtesy and kindness. Our faith is in God that all fighting and loss of life may be confined to the actual belligerent armies, and that the people may be restrained from venting their hate upon the peaceful foreigners in their midst, and that this war may be overruled of God to the highest good of this great Empire.

Again asking an interest in the prayers of your readers, and especially in those of old fellow-students and other personal friends who may read this letter,

Believe me, yours in Jesus,
FREDERICK ARTHUR STEVEN.

China Inland Mission, Ta Li Fu, Yünnan.

THE HEART OF GOD.

GREAT heart of God! that reachest to my heart,
Poor, wayward, weak, as heart of flesh must be,
Thy gentleness upholds and humbles me,
Yet I am great because of Thee a part.

Blest heart of God! more than all else beside My Father's heart—thou holdest me so near,
That I the pulsings of thy love can hear
Above the rush and roar of life's great tide.

Strong heart of God! that from its changeless love
Gave forth thy Son—how shall I measure thee?
By all the sorrows met on Calvary's tree,
By all the joys prepared for me above.

O gracious heart! the Spirit's blest abode,
Thy comfort and thy glory on me meet
In whisperings of peace, such tender greet
As calleth out the pain from every load.

Dear heart of God! there is no "load" when Thou Hast filled my soul from end to end with rest.
All, all is well, Thou knewest what was best,
Who bore for me the thorn-prints on thy brow.

O heart of God! O glorious Trinity,
That, all-conspiring, fixed my hope on high—
How poor for me Thou didst become, and I Am rich in Thee for all eternity!

THE MEN'S NIGHT-SCHOOL, MILDMAY.

THE well-known Conference Hall at Mildmay presented an unusually lively appearance on Wednesday evening last week, when certificates and medals were distributed to the men of the night-school. At tea-time about 500 were present. At the large meeting which was subsequently held in the great hall, Mr. J. E. Mathieson said the Examiner had reported the state of the school to be highly satisfactory, very superior in some respects to former years; it was well maintaining its religious character.

Mr. Badenoch had a good report to make as to the attendance, behaviour, and general progress of the men, a very considerable proportion of whom are abstainers. The teachers meet every evening for prayer before commencing their work, and the men have a prayer-meeting among themselves once a week. Many of them have been brought to Christ, and some have been restored from backsliding.

Lady Hay, in distributing the prizes, had a kindly word and smile for each recipient. The meeting had already been informed that her ladyship was the generous donor of the hospital close by, and that she had provided the tea of which they had partaken. A cordial greeting therefore awaited her. In addition to the schools and teachers, most of the missions appeared to be represented in some form, including a detachment of girls from the Orphanage.

Not the least interesting feature of the proceedings was the presentation to Mr. Badenoch, the superintendent, of a handsome album, as a token of love and esteem, from the men. At ten o'clock, Admiral Sir William King-Hall rose to give a short address. Most excellent was the counsel he gave. He had for many years read the Book of Proverbs through every month, and commended the men to do the same. Throughout the meeting the most intense interest was manifested.

NAVVIES IN EGYPT.—Some 400 men have gone out to Egypt to construct the projected railway from Suakim to Berber. The Navvy Mission Society desires to send a missionary to work among them, and also to forward monthly parcels of magazines and other interesting reading. All who can help in these excellent efforts should communicate with Mrs. Garnett, care of G. N. K., 2, Pall-mall East, S.W.

MRS. A. M. LONGSHORE POTTS, who has recently closed a very successful course of lectures on Hygiene, at St. James's Hall, announces another series of six matinée lectures at the same place for the benefit of the Women's Hospital, Soho-square: April 9 and 11, to both sexes, and April 10, 13, 14, and 16, to ladies only. On account of the highly laudable object of this course the admission has been fixed at the low price of 2s. and 1s.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND THE BIBLE.

THE formation of the Children's Scripture Union for daily and connected study of God's Word must have indeed been a God-given inspiration. Nothing can be more important, in these days of professed agnosticism, of atheism, of blasphemy and of rebuke, than that the rising generation should be well grounded in the truths and teachings of the Bible. The Union has met with remarkable success, as our columns not infrequently show. This fact was made very patent at the two meetings of the Union held in Exeter Hall on Wednesday afternoon and evening last week, when large companies of friends came together to hear and pray about the work. The afternoon meeting was presided over by Rev. E. A. Stuart of Holloway.

At the evening meeting the honorary secretary, Mr. T. B. Bishop, made a statement of the principles of the Union, and of the progress of the work during the past year. God is blessing and extending the work. As one instance of the encouragements that are being met with, Mr. Bishop told of a boy in the South of England, nine years of age, whose fidelity shown at school in connection with the daily reading of the Scriptures led to the adhesion of nearly forty others in the same school. In some of the factories in Birmingham the members of the union take their Bibles to the factory, reading and talking over the passages in the dinner-hour. The death of a consumptive girl in Dublin, who was a member, led to the spread of the movement there, where the membership is now about 1000. Some very interesting details were given from foreign letters, showing the spread of the work in many lands. Specific reference was made to Syria, India, South America, Spain, Greece, British Columbia, Madagascar, Canada, Japan, Palestine, Holland, Italy, Africa, and other places. Mr. Bishop's account was altogether a most encouraging one, and full of hopeful augury of the future, in connection with the dissemination of Scripture truth among the young the wide world over.

In speaking of the great need in these days for the influence of such a movement, Mr. E. J. Kennedy said he had daily proof of it in his experience as Secretary of the Y.M.C.A. at Exeter Hall. Young men were constantly coming to him, and he was also receiving letters from them, expressing the earnest wish that they had known the truths of the Bible in their earlier years; it would have saved them from many sorrows.

Mr. Farthing, of Cambridge, in pressing home the claims of the Union on Christians, referred to the great ignorance that prevails among young men in our public schools even with respect to the historical facts of the Scriptures. If the elder children were thoroughly established in the leading facts and doctrines of the Bible they might be preserved from many a mental conflict when they mix with unbelievers in the world. Another point on which he laid great stress, as an irresistible argument for the truth of the Bible, was the reality and consistency of Christian life. As an illustration of this he told of the wonderful work of grace that has lately been in progress at Cambridge, which has been to a great extent the result of the consistent Christian life of some young fellows at the University.

The Chairman of the meeting, Rev. H. Price-Hughes, described his first introduction to the Union in "the Happy Valley" at Llandudno, where a children's service was being held on a beautiful autumn Sunday afternoon. It is our highest duty, said Mr. Hughes, to seek the salvation of the young. We are apt to overlook the fact that God can produce a clear and conscious assurance of faith in Christ in the very young. We may be sure that God is at work in the heart of a child before we can influence it. He endorsed Mr. Farthing's remark about the Scriptural ignorance of educated men at our Universities. From a residence at Oxford, he asserted the Bible to be the only book that is largely unread and unstudied at the University there. This ignorance is not confined to any class of society, hence the unspeakable value of the work of the Children's Scripture Union. The Bible is its own best argument and best defender, especially when its truths are illustrated by the lives of converted and consecrated men and women. Apologetic literature may have its own value, but it is a remarkable fact that such works have mostly been produced in times of spiritual coldness and indifference. When Christians are busy accomplishing the conversion of the world around them, they have little time left to apologise, and as little need.

Mr. King gave an interesting sketch of the rapid increase of readers of the Scripture Union portions in South Africa, as he had seen it in a recent visit to that part of the world. He was able also to give a most encouraging report of the advance of Scripture reading in our public schools—a department of the work which is under his special care.

As one of the active workers in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission, Mr. G. Banaster said he had found that where the Scripture Union had been well worked the evangelistic work had been most fruitful. He had since the last annual meeting cruised around the coast in the yacht Kingfisher, and visited many ships. Everywhere he found a warm welcome for the Gospel message, and was able to dispose of many copies of the Scriptures. Some details he gave of his experiences both among seamen and landsmen were heard with deep interest. The meeting was altogether a very stirring one, and full of promise for the years to come.

GOSPEL WORK IN HOMERTON.

HACKNEY Town Hall was quite filled on Tuesday evening, March 31, by the teachers, workers, and friends of the Homerton Ragged-school and Gospel Mission, who met to celebrate the 17th anniversary of the institution. Mr. F. A. Bevan, who presided, said that when the churches had done their utmost there still remained a vast field outside to be cared for. He had generally found it more difficult to get people to give personal service than money, and he specially urged young Christians to volunteer their services, as they would find it an excellent means of training for more matured work.

The general condition and progress of the mission was shown by Mr. J. W. Morgan, Chairman of the Committee, to be satisfactory. The work certainly was hard, and only those who were terribly in earnest would ever continue in it. It is evident, however, that the mission succeeded in reaching the class needed. Rev. G. S. Reaney contended for more joyous service. In a speech of much fervour he showed that the true life was the Christ-life. No Ragged-school meeting would be complete without Mr. George Holland. Many tears flowed while he recounted some of the scenes he had witnessed during the many years he has been a Ragged-school teacher. From the Gravesend Ragged-school Mr. W. G. Penman had come to tell a little about the late General Gordon, who was a teacher in the school. The General was never absent from his class or the prayer-meeting. Captain Verney said that education was never more needful than now, as the political power is falling into the hands of the people. Rev. Fleming Williams believed the solving of the social problem would be the outcome of the Ragged-schools. Mr. J. Kirk spoke of the zeal of the Homerton teachers, and Mr. Millar added a closing word.

AFLOAT AND ASHORE.—The Sailors' Welcome Home, 173, George-street, Ratcliff, E., has been greatly owned of God. Through its influence other agencies have sprung up, drunkenness and revelry in the notorious Highway have been much lessened, and many have been saved. The past year has not been behind its predecessors in arduous labour or encouraging results. Suppers, during the winter, kept many poor fellows from starving; employment was found for others. Words in season cheered drooping spirits, and the Gospel message awakened and recovered many a wanderer. Miss Child thanks all kind friends for help and donations, and makes an earnest appeal for their continued prayers. She looks for great good to come out of the new branch of work recently begun at the Docks among the men during their dinner hour. Thousands of books and tracts have been given to them, personal converse has been secured, and Christ has been preached.

THE DANGER OF SPIRITUAL PRIDE.

FREDERIC SESSIONS, of Gloucester, a Gospel minister of the Society of Friends, recently conducted a series of midday Bible-readings, and gave addresses to Christian workers, on the Friends' Meeting-house premises, Carlton-hill, Leeds, which have been of an extremely interesting and instructive character. Speaking on "Send me," and touching on the necessity of all Christian workers being kept in constant dependence on the Source of strength, so that the work they are doing might not be thought to be their own, he concluded by quoting the following lines, by an unknown author:—

THE PREACHER.

O send me forth, my Saviour,
O send me for thy glory,
Regarding not the praise of man,
And trampling on the fear of man,
And fighting for thy glory.

There is a man that often stands
Between me and thy glory;
His name is Self:
My carnal self
Stands 'twixt me and thy glory!

Oh, mortify him, mortify him!
Put him down, my Saviour;
Exalt Thyself alone! lift high
The banner of the Cross,
And in its folds
Conceal the standard-bearer!

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. John Richardson, of Bow, has for the past five weeks been conducting Gospel services in the Congregational Chapel, Takely, Herts, with good results. Mr. G. D. Shipley, of the Village Mission, is now conducting a three weeks' mission in the same place.

The Frozen North.—In acknowledging the receipt of a packet of Christian literature from a friend in Scotland, Mr. Robertson, evangelist, Trout Lake, Ontario, speaks of much blessing he has lately witnessed in connection with Gospel meetings there.

Mr. W. Hall, evangelist, Annan, has conducted a very successful three weeks' series of services in connection with Hatherlow Congregational Church, Stockport (Pastor, G. E. Cheeseman). His visit has been greatly blessed. Forty young people during the services decided for Christ. These have been added to the Pastor's Bible-class.

Perth, N.B.—A most interesting and successful Gospel Temperance and Evangelistic Mission, extending over a month, under the auspices of the Free Church Presbytery, has been conducted by Mr. Ross, of the Highland Temperance League. Several Gospel Temperance Unions and Bands of Hope have been formed, and evangelistic work over the Presbytery has got a great impetus during the mission of this earnest evangelist.

Cockermouth.—A series of evangelistic services have been held in this town by Mr. J. N. Carr. Carlisle, and Mr. W. H. Wilson, Brompton Grange. The town was previously divided into districts, and efforts made to reach non-church goers. The meetings proved most successful; from the first they were well attended, and marked by extreme earnestness. The addresses were felt to be accompanied with power from on high; Christians have been stirred up to live a more decided life for Christ, and sinners aroused and saved. Interesting instances could be given of those who professed to pass from death into life.

Mr. Richard Weaver, we are rejoiced to say, is to a considerable extent restored to health. He desires to acknowledge his gratitude to the Lord for his grace and mercy in so far restoring his strength and vigour. We are pleased to be able to add that on Sunday, March 15, Mr. Weaver's four sons were engaged in conducting services at Middleton, near Oldham, in the Co-operative Hall, which holds about 1500 people. Mr. Samuel Weaver, the eldest son, conducted the meeting; Mr. Frank Weaver, the youngest son, read the Scriptures; Mr. Bewley Fry Weaver addressed the audience from the text, "Seek ye the Lord while He may be found;" Mr. Reginald Weaver spoke from the words, "They all with one accord began to make excuse." Mr. Weaver may well rejoice that all his sons are thus united in serving the Lord

Notes on Daily Readings.

These notes on the chapters of Scripture arranged for the "Bible and Prayer Union" are not intended in any way to interfere with the "Monthly Notes." Those who desire to become members of the Union should communicate with Rev. T. Richardson, St. Benet's Vicarage, Mile End-road, London, E.

APRIL 9.—JOHN III.

v. 7.—"Ye must be born again."—Natural birth will bring into this world; but natural birth will not introduce us into the kingdom which is within the veil. To go thither we must be re-born. There must be the communication of another life. So the Son who is the Word, "in whom is life," came down to men, and laid hold of man in his own Person. He entered the kingdom of this world, and became a Man, that so laying hold of man, and traversing the length and breadth of man's portion, He might lift man, as quickened by Him, through death into another life, as God's heir, and Christ's joint-heir. Therefore we are baptized. We come as dead ones, confessing that our life as men is utterly unfit to give us admission into the Lord's presence. We come to put off that life, and are buried in baptism, renouncing old Adam, to claim a new life in union with the life-giving Word; in the faith that if He be in us, his home shall be ours, and though for a season we yet bear the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the Heavenly. This in effect is what the Lord says here.—Jukes.

vv. 14, 15.—"As Moses lifted up the serpent."—Here the Lord introduces the Cross. As the new birth for the kingdom of God, so the Cross is absolutely necessary for eternal life.

vv. 16, 17.—"For God so loved the world . . ."—After having first unmistakably laid down the necessity of the Cross, He next shows the grace that was manifested in the gift of Jesus. Here He is not portrayed as the Son of Man who must be lifted up, but as the Son of God who was given. Then comes the truth, that a new responsibility is created by this infinite display of Divine goodness in Christ; every man's lot is made manifest by his attitude toward God's testimony concerning his Son.—Kelly.

APRIL 10.—JOHN IV.

This chapter enlarges on the growth and nourishment of the new life through faith in Christ Jesus. Nicodemus is told of the quickening, the Samaritan woman of the indwelling of life, through that Spirit, whose work it is to testify of and glorify the Son of God. The religious Jew is chosen to show that, spite of all his religion, he needs new life: the defiled Samaritan, to bear witness that, spite of all her sins, even in her soul there might be, through faith in the Son, "a well of water springing up unto everlasting life." And all this, not in virtue of anything in man, for here one of the vilest is the example chosen to show us where this grace may find its dwelling, but as springing from union with the Son. "The water which I shall give," is that which transforms this lost one, and others like her, into a vessel, first to contain, then to minister, the grace of life.—Jukes.

v. 6.—"Jesus, being wearied, sat thus on the well."—Though the Son of God, Jesus is also the Son of Man, a fact never lost sight of even in John's Gospel. Godet remarks: "It has been often asserted that the Jesus of John is not a being perfectly human. Nothing can be more untrue. If there exists a true son of man, it is the Jesus of the fourth Gospel. He sits wearied with his journey at Jacob's well; He groans in the spirit at the sight of his friends in tears; He weeps Himself at the grave of his friend; his soul is troubled at the thought of his approaching trial. The Jesus of John is human throughout."

v. 7.—"Jesus saith unto her."—Jesus was quite as willing to speak with a single individual, however humble, as with great multitudes; He seized every opportunity of doing so. Although He was worn out with fatigue He talked to the woman at the well; He received Nicodemus alone; He taught Mary in her home. There are said to be nineteen such private interviews mentioned in the Gospels. They leave to his followers a memorable example. This is, perhaps, the most effective of all forms of instruction, as it is certainly the best test of earnestness. A man who preaches to thousands with enthusiasm may be a mere orator, but the man who seeks opportunities of speaking closely on the welfare of their souls to individuals, must have a real fire from heaven burning in his heart.—James Stalker.

APRIL 11.—JOHN V.

In this and the two following chapters, the Lord is contrasted with all that law or ordinances had done for God's elect. Nay, He is shown as the fulfilment of all, whether Sabbaths, Passovers, or the like, Himself the true rest and food for weary souls. The way in which these feasts are set aside here to lead us higher is very striking.—Jukes.

v. 22.—"Hath committed all judgment unto the Son."—We must take heed of judging others; this is Christ's work. He who once had a reed put into his hand, his Father will now put a sceptre into his hand; He who had a purple robe put upon Him in derision shall come in his Judge's robes; He who hung upon the cross, shall sit upon the bench. There are two things in Christ which eminently qualify Him for a judge—prudence, and intelligence to understand all cases that are brought before Him. He is described, in Zech. iii. 9, with seven eyes to note his omnisciency; He is like Ezekiel's wheels, "full of eyes." Christ is a heart-searcher; He doth not only judge the fact, but the heart, which no angel can do. Then his strength whereby He is able to be avenged on his enemies. Christ is armed with sovereignty, He is described as having "seven horns" (Rev. v. 6). As Christ hath an eye to see, so He hath an horn to push; as He hath his balance, so He hath his sword; as He hath his fan and sieve, so He hath his lake of fire (Rev. xx. 10).—Thos. Watson.

v. 40.—"Ye will not come to Me, that ye might have life."—There is nothing more sad, and nothing more strange, than that when there is a Saviour who is enough for all the world, so few should come to Him to be saved. If a life-boat were sent out to a wreck, sufficient to save all the crew, and if it came back with less than half of them, you would inquire with anxiety why the rest had not been saved by it. Just so, when Christ has come to seek and save that which was lost, and yet the vast majority are unsaved, it behoves us to ask why so many are not saved by Christ. We have the answer here: sinners are lost, not by reason of anything in Christ, but by reason of something in themselves. It is something that rises up in their own hearts; they will not come to Him that they may have life.—McCheyne.

APRIL 12.—JOHN VI.

v. 27.—"Labour not for the meat which perisheth."—By the meat that perisheth, he doth not intend only outward food, but all outward things whatsoever; they are the "meat that perisheth." All earthly and outward things are the food that the soul of a natural man feeds upon. The soul of a covetous man feeds upon his money, applauding himself that he is worth so much and so much. The ambitious man, chameleon-like, feeds upon the air, upon the airy applause of the people. The sensual man feeds upon base and sensual pleasures. In a word, all carnal men, natural men, are condemned to that sentence of the serpent, "to eat dust," to feed upon outward, earthly, perishing things. So that everything that is not grace and glory, or the means that lead to it, is a perishing thing. . . . The meat that endures to everlasting life is our blessed Saviour Christ Jesus, as He is contained and wrapped up in the means of salvation, with all the blessed liberties, privileges and prerogatives, graces and comforts that we have by Him and in Him.—Sibbes.

v. 44.—"No man can come to Me, except the Father . . ."—The divine drawing, of which the text speaks—the work which is necessary to the conversion of sinners—is here attributed to the Father; in chap. xii. 32, the Saviour connects it with Himself, while throughout the Scriptures generally it is spoken of the Holy Ghost. In these apparently conflicting statements there is no real contradiction. It is the work of the Father, inasmuch as He sends the Spirit; the work of the Spirit, inasmuch as He reveals and causes men to feel the attractive qualities of Christ; and the work of Christ, inasmuch as his mediation procures the Spirit, and He Himself is the attractive object which the Spirit reveals.—Dr. Landels.

APRIL 13.—JOHN VII.

v. 5.—"For not even did his brethren believe on Him."—It was they who said, "He is beside Himself." They were his own fellow-townsmen at Nazareth who first attempted his life; it was at Nazareth, beyond all other places, where He could work no miracles, because of their unbelief. No one ever awoke up and said, "How dreadful is this place! surely God is in this place, and I knew it not." In all this there is a wonderful analogy to what is now going on in the fulfilment of our Lord's spiritual promises; there are instances where some few are coming more and more to the discernment of his presence, such as keep his commandments, and to whom, therefore, according to his promise He is manifested; but to the rest He is not perceptible.—Prof. T. Williams.

v. 37.—"If any man thirst let him come. . ."—A Christian in our day is like a man who has got a great reservoir brimful of water. He is at liberty to drink as much as he pleases, for he never can drink it dry; but instead of drinking the full stream that flows from it, he dams it up, and is content to drink the few drops that trickle through. Oh that ye would draw out of his fulness, ye that have come to Christ. Do not be misers of grace. There is far more than you will use in eternity. The same waters are now in Christ that refreshed Paul, that gave Peter his boldness, that gave John his affectionate tenderness. Why is your soul less richly supplied than theirs? Because you will not drink: "If any man thirst, let him come unto Me, and drink."—McCheyne.

v. 38.—"Out of his belly shall flow rivers of living waters."—Oh, wondrous truth, that from the temples of our bodies, if only the Lord and not self is glorified, there shall run "living waters;" while if self is exalted, spite of all our knowledge, not one drop shall be ministered by us to weary souls. We may be believers, and yet the Lord may not in us be glorified. We may yet be under law, not come even to the Cross, much less to Pentecost; nay, we may be crucifying Him afresh, and putting Him to an open shame. In such a case the "Holy Ghost will not be given, because Jesus is not yet glorified." Where He is glorified, though Pharisees and the world rage and imagine vain things, the living waters shall run into the desert, and "everything shall live whither the river cometh."—Jukes.

APRIL 14.—JOHN VIII.

v. 8.—"He stooped down, and wrote on the ground."—Dr. Adam Clarke says:—We never find that Christ wrote anything before or after this; and what He wrote at this time we know not. On this the pious Quesnel makes the following reflections: (1) Since Jesus Christ never wrote but once in his whole life that we hear of; (2) since He did it only in the dust; (3) since it was only to avoid condemning a sinner; (4) and since He would not have that which He wrote so much as known; let men learn from hence never to write but when it is necessary or useful; to do it with modesty and humility, and to do it on a principle of charity.

v. 31.—"If ye continue in my word. . . ."—When anyone gets wearied of what is old, and is always catching hold of what is new, it looks as if they had been beguiled from the simplicity that is in Christ, and had lost their relish for the things of Christ; nay, almost as if they had never been "rooted and grounded in love." Love of novelties has been the shipwreck of many souls. "Some new thing" is the craving, not of the men of Athens only, but of many in the Church of God. They are restless, and are carried about with divers and strange doctrines. Old truths get tame and stale (Eph. iv. 14; Heb. xiii. 9; 1 John iv. 1). Take care of "itching ears" (2 Tim. iv. 3), and of "heaping to yourselves teachers" (2 Tim. iv. 3).—Dr. H. Bonar.

APRIL 15.—JOHN IX.

v. 4.—"The night cometh, when no man can work."

Servant of God! Strange that to thee the night seems distant still,
When thoughts of its approaching should thine inmost spirit fill;
Oh! wake thy dormant energies, and let the startling tale
Spread through this world of carelessness on each careering gale.
Tell mortals that the night of death is quickly coming on;
They'll need the Gospel's light indeed when life's faint sun is gone.

Ah, yes! the long, dark rayless night is coming to us all;
Around our homes, upon our hearts, its deepening shadows fall.
"Oh Sun of Righteousness, arise with healing on thy wings,
When o'er our trembling, shrinking forms its blackened shroud it flings.
And when the heavy hand of death falls on our failing sight,
Oh, take us to the cloudless land where there is no more night!

Marianne Farningham.

v. 6.—"When He had thus spoken . . . He anointed the eyes."—Christ shows that the atoning element may enter into words and services, as well as into death. Every time Christ took any man's blindness away He discovered the redeeming side of his mission. Every disease He took into his own care, and every corpse He raised into life, testified that He lived for others, and that his life was stretching out lovingly and healingly towards all the children of men. We are, then, to assemble round Christ the Teacher as well as Christ the Saviour. His words were part of his offering. To-day they are mightier than miracles.—Dr. Parker.

Letter to the Editor.

WAR AND POLYGAMY.

Dear Sir,—There is no difficulty in replying to Mr. Wood's questions, but it is a matter for surprise how anyone can read their Bible and confound together as he does two things so essentially distinct. Polygamy was necessitated by the hardness of men's hearts; it was a concession made to their weakness, not to their sin. War is rendered necessary by man's sin. It is a necessity of justice for the extermination of sin when long-suffering and forbearance have proved unavailing, and the cup of iniquity is full. God commanded war. Did He ever command polygamy? He calls Himself the God of armies, but never the God of polygamists. Was ever a people cursed for not being polygamists? but one of the bitterest curses in the Word of God descends upon a people who practised what might be called the Monroe doctrine of that age, and who "came not to the help of God against the mighty." Did God ever acknowledge that a man had served him by polygamy? but He declares that Nebuchadnezzar was doing his service in subduing Tyrus. And to come to New Testament teaching, the Christian mind, while it revolts at the Mahommedan conception of a polygamous heaven, finds motives of adoration in the Apocalyptic vision of the armies of heaven led by Christ in person to combat the culminating manifestations of evil which close the present age.

Polygamy must cease; so Christ taught when the higher privileges of the new dispensation made that weakness culpable which before was excusable. War is to cease when the sword of the oppressor is broken and righteousness is established in the earth. "The effect of righteousness shall be peace." The principles of Matt. v. 38—48 are for the disciples of Christ—for the Church, not for the nations; and I would ask Mr. Wood to tell us when Christ and his Apostles taught otherwise. Christ says (Mark xiii. 7) that "Wars must needs be;" it follows that they see false visions of peace who would assure us that arbitration and diplomacy are all that are needed. Is not the Father in heaven of Matt. v. 45 the same as the King of Matthew xxii. 7, who, according to Christ's teaching, "sent forth his armies and destroyed those murderers?" We cannot admit that the New Testament clashes with the Old in its teachings on this subject. The fact that Rom. xii. 19, 20, is Old Testament teaching must on no account be lost sight of.

In conclusion, I would add that the grand and Christlike virtues of Gordon do not need to be cried up, nor can they be cried down; they command the admiration of all, whether Chinese, Mussulman, or Christian. Our effeminate and selfish age, which seems ready to confound righteousness with cruelty and revenge, sadly needed such an example.

H. W.

[We do not see what authority there is for distinguishing between sin and weakness in relation to polygamy. Surely hardness of heart is sin, not merely weakness. Nor do we think that many of our wars have been wars of righteousness against wrong.—Ed.]

MR. H. BRIGHT, of the North London Home for Aged Christian Blind Women (Hanley-road, Hornsey-rise, N.), writes to us to say that the Home is at present in great need of help. There are thirty-one inmates, only three of whom contribute to their own support. No more deserving cases could be imagined than those afflicted sisters under Mr. Bright's care, and we hope our own readers will render him what help they can in the prosecution of his good work. Mr. Bright (who is himself blind) would be glad also to conduct evangelistic services in connection with any of the churches that may desire such aid.

PRINCESS LOUISE HOME FOR YOUNG GIRLS.—A Conference was held on Saturday week at the offices of the Princess Louise Home and National Society for the Protection of Young Girls, 32, Sackville-street. The Marquis of Lorne presided. It was stated that the institution since its establishment in 1835 had trained 1378 girls. Some £1500 was now needed to build a laundry, and £800 to erect a permanent dining-room and schoolroom, while a further amount was required to erect a mission-room or lecture-room. The meeting resolved itself into a committee of aid, and a resolution was passed inviting contributions. Among the speakers were Mr. W. Fowler, M.P., and Mr. Arthur Pease, M.P.

TRUST IN THE LORD.

Ps. xxxvii. 3; Isa. xxvi. 4.

WHAT is trust? It is the calm confidence of faith that, however sad and troubled, however stormy and dark the state of heart, hearth, or fatherland, "the Lord reigneth." Oh, what blessed things have come out of trust! Some of the most beautiful songs that cheer our pilgrimage have been composed in dark hours, illuminated by trust in God. "Trust in the Lord," and why? Because we are told that in the Lord is "everlasting strength." What so blessedly comforting to the weary one, weak with pain, disappointment, or sorrow, as the thought that the One in whom is all his trust is the Almighty—the "Mighty to save," the Refuge from the storm? The blessed knowledge that "the Everlasting Arms" are "underneath" to hold us, did we fall, takes away the fear that we might stumble, and the dread of falling, so that our trust enables us to run and to rejoice in paths where the fearful and timid pass hurriedly by. Oh, what do they not miss! Everything that is to be enjoyed in God as our Father. See that infant, learning for the first time to walk across the floor. The mother's arms encircle, but do not touch it, and it completes its little journey with noisy delight—strong, loving arms are round it, no hurt can befall it, and the knowledge of this gives it confidence. But send the little one across the floor alone, and the fear which possesses its untrained mind is the cause of many woeful falls and bruises. Child of God, it is so with thee, until thou canst say, out of a full and grateful heart, "I will trust, and not be afraid."

During one of the services held in London last year by Mr. Moody, a poor widow was led to enter the building, her heart full of bitterness, her soul bowed in sorrow, but not bowed before God. She sat beside one who was rapt in attention, drinking in every word, and who, when peace entered her soul, exclaimed aloud, "Oh, blessed be God! Why did not I trust Him before?"

The widow wept, and just then the words came straight to her from the platform, "Can you say, 'The Lord is my Shepherd'?" The new convert turned to her, and said, "I can say so now. Can you?"

"I've a great trouble," was the reply. "A month ago I lost my husband; then a daughter followed; and now my son—my only son—has robbed his employer of fifty pounds, and I must sell all I possess to pay this, or he will go to prison."

"Then you cannot say it? Perhaps you are as I was an hour ago—unable to say that the Lord is my Shepherd? Else I am sure you could trust Him, even in this sore trial."

"No, no," said the sorrowing one; "I have been a Christian many years, and never felt as I do now when all went well. But this trial has upset me."

Again came words from the preacher: "Remember, there is no glory to God in being a fair-weather Christian—you must trust Him in the storm." And the widow sat and wept, but when the meeting was over she was spoken to by one of the workers who had observed her, and this was her testimony:—

"I came into this hall a wretched, despairing creature, and I am leaving it full of trust in God. I can trust Him for all. I forgot, when I gave Him myself years ago, that I was to give Him everything else with that. I have not trusted Him, but I believe He is my Shepherd, and that He will bring me out of this trouble in just the best possible way for me."

And so He did. For her son, who had fled to Hull, was brought to a saving knowledge of God in a little Methodist chapel there, and returned repentant, to work until he had repaid his employer, and to be the comfort of his mother's declining years. Oh, "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart," and then, "In the dark and stormy day," none shall make thee afraid, for thou shalt have the confidence that He in whose heart thy life is hid, and upon whose palms thou art graven, "doeth all things well."

GOSPEL PURITY ASSOCIATION.—Last week several meetings were held in Exeter, at which addresses were given on "Purity of Life," by Mr. and Mrs. Wookey. In his address to men, Mr. Wookey strongly contended for an equal standard of morality as between the sexes, and appealed to the Christian chivalry of his brethren to maintain the honour and virtue of all women. Mrs. Temple, wife of the Bishop of London, presided at one of Mrs. Wookey's meetings for women, and expressed her earnest sympathy with the movement. A number, both of men and women, enrolled themselves in the Association.

WALL-STREET MISSION, BALLS POND.—The nineteenth anniversary of this mission was recently held. A brief report was read by the Superintendent, from which it appeared that the good work is steadily carried on. The various agencies embrace Gospel Services on the Lord's day, Children's Service, Bible-class, Open-air Services, and during the week Gospel Temperance, Band of Hope, Mothers' Meeting, &c. Several friends interested in mission work addressed the meeting, and expressed their confidence in such efforts as being the best means of reaching the multitudes who do not attend the usual places of worship.

A DILEMMA.

Dear Friends,—

On Thursday, 14th May, I wish (d.v.) to leave Liverpool for Canada, with about 100 emigrant boys. Towards the £1000 required to meet the expenses of this party, the noble donor of £500 to our Emigration work last year has again contributed £500, and other friends have already subscribed about £250 more. The remaining £250 will, I have no doubt, be forthcoming by the date of departure.

By this effort, through God's mercy, there will not only be 100 boys settled in comfortable Canadian farm-houses at good wages, but vacancies will be created in our Homes for another 100 boys, to be rescued forthwith from London street-misery.

I am sorry to add that so little help has come to hand the last few weeks that I am beginning to feel anxious, not only as to ways and means now, but more especially for the general support of the Homes during my approaching absence for some months.

My place will (d.v.) be filled once more by my friend who takes such a loving interest in our boys, and has so ably acted as locum tenens for me on other occasions. I feel, however, that it will be impossible for me to go to Canada and leave him with any financial anxiety in addition to the other weighty responsibilities he voluntarily undertakes in the management of the Homes while I am away.

Our position is just this. We are not "in debt," but are "quite without funds." Month by month we have been enabled to pay our monthly accounts; week by week we have just had enough to make our weekly payments; but face to face with Quarter-day, we had not a penny in hand, towards claims for rent, gas, &c., now falling due.

Unless we have the means in hand to carry on the work in the summer months, I feel I must not (a) either go to Canada myself, leaving a heavy financial burden to shoulders unused to bear such a load, or (b) take upon myself the responsibility of filling up the 100 vacancies thus created, and providing the necessaries of life for so many boys at a time of year when very many friends are away at the seaside, &c., and for days together scarcely any help comes to hand.

I must thankfully record that for the last six months I have had far less pecuniary anxiety, and have been, consequently, able to labour cheerfully day by day, from morn till night, and to do far more work with less fatigue and worry than for some years past. I have been able all through the winter to help every absolutely destitute case brought to my notice.

I very reluctantly take up my pen to lay our case, in this crisis, before kind friends who so generously help me from time to time, but I feel I ought to let those who take such a deep interest in the work know exactly how we stand.

Will you try and help us in this dilemma, so that we may not have to draw back from our important plans so graciously furthered by God thus far, but with happy, praising hearts, go on in our life-service for Christ amongst needy and erring boys?

I am, dear friends, yours faithfully,

J. W. C. Fegan

MAGAZINES FOR APRIL.

Young England continues to supply boyhood with good, lively and varied reading. (Sunday-school Union.)

The Quiver (6d. Cassell) combines edifying and recreative reading with papers of a practical nature to an extent that few of its rivals can attain.

Sword and Trowel. 3d. Passmore & Alabaster. Mr Spurgeon inter alia contributes a "War Song," so that his physical infirmity does not appear to have interfered with his mental vigour or acumen.

The English Illustrated Magazine (6d. Macmillan) has a well-illustrated paper descriptive of Kentish scenery, and a graphic sketch, by Archibald Forbes, of an experience during the Russo-Turkish War.

Rev. Charles Bullock still maintains his prestige in The Fireside (6d.), Home Words (1d.), and The Day of Days (1d.), all of which he conducts with an ability and wisdom in the choice of matter, that render them deserving of a place in every household.

The Contemporary Pulpit (6d., Swan Sonnenschein) continues to furnish an excellent representative epitome of pulpit teaching. There are contributions this month from Bishop King, Dr. Culross, C. H. Spurgeon, Bishop Bickersteth, Dr. Maclaren, and others less known.

The Congregationalist. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Among the varied and uniformly interesting contents of this number, we may specially note an article of American extraction on "The Contemporary Pulpit in its influence upon Theology," and Lessons from General Gordon's life.

Eastward Ho! 6d. Wells Gardner. Rev. Brooke Lambert, of Greenwich, enters the lists this month as a defender of the methods of the Charity Organisation Society. There is a smart and cogent rejoinder by "Peter the Hermit," who concludes by expressing the view that if the earth were to open and swallow up the C. O. S. the poor would not suffer by the catastrophe.

Messrs. Partridge & Co.—"Paddy O'Flinn" claims the interest of the readers of The Welcome (6d.), which, amongst numerous illustrations, contains portraits of Elizabeth Fry and General Gordon. The British Workman, Band of Hope Review, Children's Friend, Infant's Magazine, Family Friend, Friendly Visitor, will all find their way to hearts which eagerly await their monthly issue. To each and all we heartily wish an ever-increasing circulation.

Cassell & Co.—Under the title of The Family Physician (6d.) this enterprising firm have added one more to their ample list of useful household magazines. Diseases and lesser ailments are treated of by eminent London physicians, which puts within everyone's reach the ways and means of dealing with them. Perhaps none of the serials hitherto published will be more valued than this, and none deserves the distinction more. Familiar Garden Flowers (6d.) should be in request at this season of the year, and The Household Guide (6d.) is ever welcome. Pottery and shipbuilding are the principal subjects dealt with in Great Industries of Great Britain (7d.) which, with The History of Protestantism (8½d.), and Magazine of Art (1s.), have the usual number of interesting and excellent engravings. Part 15 of The Encyclopædic Dictionary (1s.) is before us, and the fact that it only takes us on to the middle of letter C, will show on what an exhaustive and comprehensive scale this valuable work is being produced. Old and New London is drawing near a close; the present number contains a map of the Metropolis in the time of Queen Elizabeth. The other issues of this firm that has reached us are Peoples of the World, Dr. Geikie's Life and Words of Christ, Old Testament Commentary, and Countries of the World.

The following serials for April have also reached us:—

Work amongst Jews.—Jewish Intelligencer—Israel's Hope and Destiny—Jewish Herald.

Temperance.—Band of Hope Chronicle—Blue Ribbon Novelette—Church of England Temperance Chronicle.

Juvenile.—Our Darlings—C.M.S. Juvenile Instructor—Children's Messenger (Presbyterian)—Sabbath-School Magazine—Sunrise—Christian Record—Wesleyan Methodist S.S. Magazine—Erin's Hope.

Miscellaneous.—On and Off Duty (Police)—On the Road (Commercial Travellers)-Old Jonathan—Sentinel (Social Purity)—Naval Brigade News—Monthly Review (Y.M.C.A.)—Silver Morn (Prophetic)—Free Church (Eng.) Magazine—Herald of Peace—Children's Advocate—Echoes from Paris—The Christian Worker—Delving and Diving—Believer's Pathway—Evangelist—London City Mission Magazine—Golden-lane Mission Magazine—The National Church—House of Rest Monthly—Free Church Monthly.

Missionary.—The Illustrated Missionary News—China's Millions—C.M.S. Gleaner—C.M.S. Intelligencer—Indian Female Evangelist—The Messenger (Presbyterian)—Mission Record (Scotch Church)—Friend of Missions—will all help to swell the current of thought which is now so largely manifested toward the foreign field.

Mr. Henry Sells' new edition of the Dictionary of the World's Press (167, Fleet-street. With maps, 2s.) is a wonderful compilation. As we scan its varied and attractive pages we begin to understand the world-wide ramifications of "the fourth estate." All who are on advertising bent ought to consult this encyclopædic vade mecum. The foreign maps are a new feature of the work. An edition without maps can be had for 1s.

The publishers of The Pall Mall Gazette, with their customary enterprise, have prepared a very copious index of the contents of that evening journal, extending from July 1 to December 31, 1884. To those who possess a file of the journal this index will be invaluable; even to those who do not it furnishes a handy record of the leading events of the six months. It can be had from the office of the Gazette, Northumberland-street, Charing-cross, price 1s.

We have also received the following books:—

Religious Tract Society:
Child-Life in China. By Mrs. Bryson. 5s.
The Great Cloud of Witnesses. By Dr. W. Landels. 4s.

THIRTEENTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "The Christian," WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

HOPELESS CASE of CONSUMPTION.—A GARDENER IN SCOTLAND.

The patient was a gardener in the service of Mrs. Anderson, West Kensington Park, W., and Mr. Congreve has heard as follows:—"Mrs. A. obtained from Mr. C. his medicine for her gardener in Scotland, and it worked the most wonderful cure. He had been given up as a hopeless case of consumption, but after three months got nearly well, and is still in good health."

CASE PRONOUNCED HOPELESS at SHEFFIELD (A Case given up by four doctors).

Mrs. E. G., of Sheffield, whose full name can be given privately to any bonâ fide inquirer, has recently written me as follows:—Allow me to thank you, dear sir, for the great benefit my son has received. One local doctor said he would never be better in this world. Your medicine has been the means, under the blessing of God, of his complete recovery. He has now been to business four months, and enjoys good health. Our friends who saw him during his long illness say 'he is a miracle.' I am recommending your treatment to everyone."

This case had commenced with inflammation of the lungs and pleurisy, and terminated in phthisis. The mother wrote me first about eighteen months ago.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

REDUCED GENTLEWOMEN.

THE Christian Public is aware by this time of the lamented death of my beloved sister, Julia Corke, the originator of the effort to establish the LUTHER MEMORIAL HOME, to grant rent-free rooms to the above class.

It is earnestly hoped and believed that this needed work may still be accomplished, that Christian Workers will take it up, and by their prayers, sympathy, and exertions to raise funds, to add to the £200 already subscribed, strengthen the hands of the Treasurer (Miss Julia Fox, 54, Kensington Park-road, Ladbroke-square, Bayswater,) and of myself, who, having worked in the cause from its commencement, will gladly take up this legacy of my beloved sister.

Funds continue to come in which bereavement has prevented my acknowledging as yet. Thanks for all. Shilling Collecting Cards will be gratefully supplied, and Contributions thankfully received by the Treasurer, or by—

SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

Superintendent.—Mr. JAMES SHARPLESS, 14, Sidney-square, Commercial-road, E.
Secretary—EDWARD GEO. HARVEY.

This Mission has been carried on for upwards of twenty years in one of the most degraded parts of the East End of London. To its foundation and management the well-known Mr. W. J. Lewis devoted many of the best years of his life. Ill-health has now compelled him to withdraw from active control, but the work is continued as vigorously as ever. By the operations of this Mission many an outcast has been gathered, from the streets and lanes of this great city, to the fold of Christ; and the work still goes on. By open-air Gospel preaching, house-to-house visitation, services for adults and children, ragged night schools, and lodging-house visitation, we seek, in obedience to the apostolic injunction, to "be instant in season and out of season." "That we might by all means save some" (1 Cor. ix. 22).

Help is sorely needed, and will be thankfully received at the above address; or at the office of The Christian.

HOMES OF HOPE,

Nos. 4, 5 & 6, Regent-square, Gray's-inn-road, London, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.

The applications are most distressing, and the funds are quite exhausted. The Committee make an urgent appeal for help.

Henry Thompson, Treasurer.

FIRST SHEETS OF SCRIPTURAL PROOFS

That God gives us in our Lord Jesus Christ perfect deliverance from all sin, inward as well as outward, if we will but receive Him and believe on His name for all that God has made Him to be to us (John i. 12; 1 Cor. i. 30).

BY J. P. WILSON.

Copies may be obtained by writing to me at the undernoted address, sending Eightpence for price and postage, or without money. I hope that it is with a right motive that I introduce here the first letter received by me on the subject of the book, and that my doing so will not be misconstrued. But if it should be, I must bear with it, and cannot for fear of it withhold the letter. It is from a sister in the Lord unknown to me until I received it.—J. P. W., 88, North Side, Wandsworth Common, London, S.W.

"Dear Friend.—I have read your little book, lent me by a friend; and I do desire heartily to thank my God that it was put into my hands. Though for years I have known my Saviour's love, and experienced the incoming of the Holy Spirit in power in my soul, yet since reading the 'Scriptural Proofs' I have had a fresh revelation of what Jesus is to me in his capacity of Saviour: and I have been able to grasp Him in a fuller and more comprehensive faith as my deliverer from indwelling sin; and that on the Truth of the living God, as shown so clearly in your little book. My heart goes with every line of it. I do trust and believe it will be blessed wherever it is read: there is so little of man in it and so much of God. Yours in the fellowship of His Spirit, ——."

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President*, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.
Established 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES:

With Preface by Professor Delitzsch.

Demy 8vo. Price SIXPENCE.

"'All Israel Shall Be Saved.' This, then, is the end—the consummation of the history of Israel. After a long period of unbelief and of guilt, there will at last be conversion and renewal. After a long period, during which they are scattered and under the chastisement of God, there will at last be national restoration and glory. Ichabod, the glory has departed. But at last the glory will return, never to depart again; and the name of Jerusalem shall be 'Jehovah Shammah,' 'The Lord is there.' The God of glory appeared unto Abraham; and the God of glory will appear again to the seed of Abraham. All Israel shall be saved!"—Extract

THE GATHERING STORM.

By JOHN E. LINNELL, Vicar of Pavenham.

THE temporal power of Rome is decaying, the political hopes of Israel are reviving; and whether or not it be that the way of the Kings of the East shall be prepared, the Turkish Empire must soon cease to be. Many there are who think to see, in these startling signs of the times, the speedy approach of the Son of Man. They may be right or they may be wrong: but certain it is that the day is fast approaching when the Gospel will have been preached, "for a witness," to every nation on earth; and, as the Master Himself has so plainly told us that the end shall follow closely upon that day, surely as believers we may lift up our heads and rejoice that our "redemption draweth nigh."

But now a dark cloud arises to throw its chill shadow on the soul, for between the present and that time so longed for, which shall give again to the Church her long absent Lord, earth must have to endure such a time of trouble as she has never yet known in her chequered past, nor ever shall know again. Christ has told us that the sign of his coming shall be seen in the heavens immediately after some terrible tribulation. Thus must it follow that, if He be near, this tribulation, still nearer, may be even now at our doors.

And what is the present outlook? There is distress among the nations, and perplexity among their rulers. The murmurs that constantly arise from the masses too are many, as the moan of the troubled sea when the storm is collecting its strength. Many are the hearts that are failing with fear, and many the faces that are gathering blackness because of the terrors that are instinctively felt to be hidden in the womb of the immediate future. Have we reached, already, the beginning of troubles? How these may develop themselves in the days as yet before us it is impossible to foretell. Anarchy may pave the way for the despotism of Rome, or of a personal Antichrist; but certain it is that a reign of anarchy is threatening the whole of Europe. Though public attention has been temporarily turned to our relations with other peoples, the leaven of Socialism is permeating the masses of our people. And what wonder when, in spite of our country's vast wealth, these are starving by tens of thousands!

Then, affairs on the Continent are worse than with us. No throne in Christendom is safe; indeed, every settled form of government is liable to be overturned with violent change. But what are the characteristics of a revolutionary movement which has gained so much attention, and awakened so much alarm during the last few years? The German Socialist, the Russian Nihilist, the French, Spanish, and Italian Communists, as well as the English Social Democrat, are atheists almost to a man. The revolt is not only to be against the laws of man, but even of a more determined character against the laws of God. We are told that the masses may be trusted. And so they may, to follow their leaders. The masses in France were doubtless averse to the violence and bloodshed of the great Revolution, but having placed all political power in their leaders' hands, they were compelled to submit to that "Reign of Terror."

It is often objected that such a state of things as that contemplated and sought by Socialists could not possibly endure beyond a certain time. And this may be very true; but how about the state of society while the experiment is being tried? What was the experience of France when atheism, as a dominant power, received a national trial? One million two hundred thousand of its people, many of them from among its bravest sons and the most beautiful of its daughters, were brought to a violent end during the short space of some three or four years.

And yet, though what the French Revolution was, on a very much smaller scale, may speedily become the state of things all over Christendom, how apathetic are the greater part of God's children with regard to the things that are coming to pass. Has the "secret rapture" theory anything to answer for in this matter? I am firmly persuaded that it has. But where, in God's Word, between Genesis and Revelation, is this theory expressly taught? Where are we told that Christ shall come secretly, and take away his people, ere the tribulation commences? I have read my Bible through and through, but I have never discovered the scriptures sought.

I once asked these questions in an afternoon address when conducting a mission in the North of England. At the close of the service, my friend, the vicar's wife, asked me what I had been doing. "Why," said she, "we have been teaching 'the secret rapture theory' ever since the last mission." "Continue, then, to teach it," said I, "if you discover it in the Word of God." "Ah, that is the worst of it," was her reply; "we received it from Mr. H." But oh, this wretched practice of following leaders, without comparing their teachings with the oracles of God!

Some one, I know not who, once gave as an opinion, drawn from the Word, that the Lord Jesus would come secretly and fetch his people from earth before the last tribulation should be begun, and now by far the greater part of those who venture to write on prophecy give that opinion as the unchallenged doctrine of the Word of God; and thus those who read their works are lulled into a dream of security, believing that whatever may happen to others, no evil shall ever betide them. But judgment has often ere this begun at the house of God, and there have been times when the sword of chastisement has contemned the rod of God's son, as any other tree. (Ezek. xxi. 10.)

We are told that as Enoch was taken from earth secretly, so shall the Church be secretly taken away from trouble. But who can say that Enoch was taken at a time when God's judgments were abroad in the world? Noah was living at such a time, and God preserved him from all evil. Lot, too, was living at such a time, but Lot was saved only as by the skin of his teeth. He was burnt out of Sodom, with the death cries of his children probably pursuing his fugitive footsteps, and saved only as by fire. He was, as was Noah, a typical character, and many, it is to be feared, there will be like him, when the Lord shall shortly come out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity. Chambers will certainly be found for the obedient children of God, in which they shall hide themselves, as it were, for a little while, till the indignation be overpast. A mark will again be, doubtless, se on the foreheads of those who sigh and cry for the abominations of the professing Church. But when the Master says: "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man," does He not imply that the careless and comparatively prayerless among believers may, like Lot, find themselves partners in the temporal calamities of those worldlings from whom they have refused to separate themselves, even though their souls shall be saved?

Happy those who remember not only Lot's wife, but also Lot, and, hating even the garment spotted by the flesh, keep themselves apart from a world whose friendship is enmity with God.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

OUR Beehive has again been deserted, our dear boys having started for the land of hope and plenty. Our hearts do not become attuned to these separations, but we feel them more keenly even than in the earlier years.

This forty-fourth family of sixty-five were to each of us full of deepest interest, and for them we ask your continual prayers. We learnt new lessons whilst working amongst them; one was, in bringing them into close contact with real living missionaries. Four of the number have left us with deep longings to be wholly given, if life is spared, for the millions in China. With their own gathered pence they purchased the new edition of "China's Needs."

One youth of fourteen, who had been an out and out street arab from nine years of age, became, through the Gospel, our beloved brother in the Lord, even to the last watching for opportunities to show forth his intense gratitude. When the last farewell came, he burst into tears, but could not utter a word. A widowed mother was filled with praise; the prayers of long years for her boy's conversion had been answered. On the last Lord's day the light had broken in, and the following day he went home to tell his mother the glad news. Our united and sincerest gratitude is offered to all those who have shared with us in filling the bags for these dear lads in their start in life.

The next party will sail in the end of May, composed of both boys and girls, the latter under ten years. We ask prayers for the children, for our band of workers, and the various classes of the people among whom we labour.

Annie Macpherson.

JOSEPH COOK'S BOSTON LECTURES.

IN Mr. Joseph Cook's Boston Lecture of March 2, the Prelude was a discussion on "Frontier Savages, White and Red." In it Mr. Cook speaks hopefully of the Indians; one of the most warlike tribes has been reformed by General Crook, and takes kindly to agricultural pursuits. "The first motto of all Indian reformers should be Indian evangelisation. . . . On the Western border and in Congress the white savage is a greater mischief than the red savage. One of the chief watchwords of Indian rights should be. Save the red savage by reforming the white savage."

The Interlude consists of answers to four questions, one of which is "Ought the testimony of an atheist and agnostic to be excluded from our courts of justice?" Discriminating between some men who call themselves atheists, and those who are really such, Mr. Cook replies:—

> "If a man be a real atheist, I do not care to do business with him. I do not want him at my family table. I do not want my property and life put at his disposal, by his testimony as a witness before any court. In the recent debate on this topic, before the Massachusetts legislature, I should have voted unhesitatingly with the majority, who, as I think, have wisely excluded the testimony of real atheists from admission to courts of justice."

We do not quite see, however, how real atheists are to be distinguished from sham ones. If their own declaration is not accepted, what other test can be judicially applied?

The lecture itself is on "The Supernatural Sinlessness of Christ." The following are some of his leading propositions:—

> "The picture of the character of Christ exists in the New Testament. Once the picture was not in world. Now it is in the world, and it has revolutionsed the world.
>
> "Such a picture exists nowhere else in the whole range of the records of man.
>
> "The picture has continued through all subsequent ages to be considered as substantially that of spiritual perfection.
>
> "This supreme picture must have been drawn from reality, or invented. If invented, who invented it? It has been well said that it requires a Christ to invent a Christ.
>
> "The picture exists in the literature proceeding from eight writers. Not eight portraitures of eight Christs, but one portraiture of one Christ. Were these eight heroes greater than the picture?
>
> "Was this picture that of a sinless character?
>
> "Christ teaches the necessity of repentance, and the new birth, but never Himself repents nor feels the need of a new birth. His testimony concerning Himself is that He did always what pleased the Father. His Apostles teach that if we say we have no sin we deceive ourselves; but that He was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin.
> "A sinless character is supernatural. Therefore Christ was a supernatural revelation of God in man and to men.

The Lecturer concluded with the following testimony from Ewald's great work on the "History of Israel":—

> "The only essential thing in the development of human history is personal, spiritual perfection. . . . Christ's entire life, teaching, and work, as exhibited in the full light of history, from his first public acts to his last suffering and death, was something in itself perfect, most lofty, and wholly unique. . . . This life, with its highest inward perfection and its brightly radiant light—every smallest trait of which may become eternally instructive, and the smallest reminiscence of which may perpetually serve to inspire and elevate—is precisely as it appeared in history, the highest thing that the whole ancient world could give us. As an outward example, it is, for our lives, the great unchanging teaching which cannot be surpassed; as an inward motive and spirit it is the inexhaustible power of the perfect true religion as it must be perpetually operative in us to the end of time. . . . What do men of a later age really wish for further? And what shall we of this latest age specially desire further than the perfect completion of this one life and death as it is plainly presented in the full light of history? What can we ask for beyond this absolute personal and inner perfection in the historical Christ?"

This, says the Lecturer, is a renowned scholar of rationalistic freedom of thought, speaking, after Strauss, after Baur, after ages of attacks on historic Christianity, and face to face with the acutest scholarship of Europe and the world in our day.

> "In that brief, fleeting moment of the ages during which Christ laboured publicly amongst his people, He had founded within that nation an imperishable memorial, and, indeed, already a new community in which his Spirit could immediately be perpetuated, and which could be bound to Him by the ties of strongest love, reverence, and longing. And in the latest times and amongst the most remote nations, when the genuine picture of this unique life is again revived and realised, if in imagination and thought only, it must, by virtue of its own immortal truth and perfection, always produce again effects similar to those which were produced when it first appeared in the midst of the declining people of Israel, and it is of itself adequate to kindle in all who gaze upon its glory, the fire of a life answering to that glory."

Amidst all that has been said of late years concerning human perfection, it is invigorating and sanctifying to be led to consider the perfectness of Jesus Christ our Lord.

[Similar topics were dealt with in the closing lectures of the series. Mr. Cook was unable to be present at the last, owing to the death of his father.]

EDINBURGH UNIVERSITY STUDENTS.

By Dr. MOXEY.

HOLIDAY MISSION.

THE Winter Session of the Edinburgh University closes practically about the end of March, and the Summer Session commences in May. There is, therefore, a month's holiday between the two, and it occurred to Professor Drummond and others to utilise the interval by sending the students in small detachments all over the land to preach the Gospel to young men. Accordingly a Conversazioné of the Christian students was held one Saturday evening at the end of March to consider the proposal. About three hundred were present, and short, stirring addresses were delivered by Principal Cairns, Professors Simpson, Charteris, Drummond, and others. The result of the Conference was the organisation of "The Edinburgh University Students' Holiday Mission."

Although the meeting was a private one, the secret of it seemed to have oozed out in an incredibly short space, for invitations from all quarters came pouring in. Each of the three Presbyterian Theological Halls applied for a deputation to tell them of the work, and in each instance I am told a happy and stimulating effect was produced. Edinburgh Evangelistic Agencies, such as Carrubber's Close Mission, and Edinburgh Churches sent in applications, and country towns in all directions put in their claim. Fortunately, the number of volunteers for the work has enabled the secretaries to overtake most of the places, and I personally know of a series of meetings in Perth, Dunfermline, Bathgate, Cupar, Kirkcaldy, South Queensferry, places in Wales, and Bradford in Yorkshire. I have been associated with the men in Bathgate, Perth, Dunfermline, and at a large meeting in the Free Assembly Hall, Edinburgh, and there were anxious souls at all the meetings.

The Mission is exclusively for young men, but generally there is a demand for mixed meetings as well. Each deputation has a captain, who often is a Divinity student, which is an advantage to the men in the way of teaching, and begets a confidence in those who engage them. The greater number of volunteers are medical students, and (as that class has the name of being rather "wild") the fact is emphasised in the announcements. Fortunately, there are a sufficient number of students from the other faculties, who have no Summer Session like the medicals, to continue the meetings after this month, if need be. We ask your prayers for the Mission.

For the Young.

"IF."

HAVE you ever thought of the great importance of the very little words of the Bible? I remember reading some time ago what someone had written for the young on the Parable of the Sower (Matt. xiii.), and the four little words there were pointed out. How the same good seed fell not only on four different grounds but in four different ways. You will see, on looking at the parable, there is "by," "upon," "among," and "into." Ah, it was the last only that brought forth fruit. Now the seed is the Word of God; so you see it is not enough for it to fall by one side, that is, for anyone else to receive but ourselves, or to fall upon our ears, that is, to understand in our heads only, or amongst us, that may be in a Sunday-school or class, and none pay very much attention; but to be a blessing to us the Word of God must fall right into our hearts. As David said, "the entrance (or coming in) of thy word giveth light." Now just in this way there are so many all-important little words in God's Book. There are the sos of John iii., the alls of Isa. liii., and many others. But the one little word I want you now to notice particularly is that at the head of this paper. So much depends upon it in the five places in which we will now find it.

(1) "If God be for us, who can be against us?" (Rom. viii. 31.) This we may call the if of God's love. Now, supposing God were not for us, but against us, what a terrible thing it would be. Have you ever thought of this? For instance, suppose you had to do something to make God love you, when would you know you had gained his love? But oh, how sweet to know that God is for us, and that He does love us, and that before we love Him! How has He shown his love? Read on, and you will see: "He spared not his own Son, but delivered Him up for us all." Now you see there is no doubt as to whether God is for us; but the question is, are we for God? God is for you, dear boy or girl: are you for Him? He loves you: do you love Him? He has given his Son for you: have you accepted Him as your own, very own, precious Saviour and Friend?

(2) "If not, then after that thou shalt cut it down" (Luke xiii. 9). Why was this fig-tree a sad sight? Because it was useless. The owner planted it to bear fruit, and there was none. Are there any useless men or women or boys and girls in the world? Oh, yes; plenty, I am afraid. Who put us in this world? God. What for? To bear fruit; that is, to live to please Him. Have we done this? How can we please Him? Well, first of all, until we have come to Jesus we cannot possibly do anything to please God. Jesus Himself explained this to the people in John vi. 29, and John says so too in his letter (1 John iii. 23). Have you believed in Jesus, dear children? If not, you have been spared longer than this tree, I am sure. Oh, think, supposing this should be your last year, and you should be cut off in your sins.

(3) "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above" (Col. iii. 1). Risen with Christ; how wonderful! Those who believe in Jesus and are saved, who were dead in sins, are alive again. The Lord said (John v. 25), "The dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live." I am speaking, of course, of the soul now, although the body will be raised up presently (if it shall have died before Jesus comes). Our little word here says, as it were, to you, my young reader, "Have you been made alive by Christ? Are you born again?" (John iii. 7). Then, if you have, think of and live for Him who is up there in glory, and not for yourself and for the world.

(4) "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature" (2 Cor. v. 17). Do you remember the story of the Ark? How eight persons were saved, and all the rest were drowned? What made the difference? In the Ark or out of the Ark, that was all. Dear boys and girls, think of this: It is not so much what you are as where you are, just the same as with grown-up people. God sees two kinds of people in this world. Those who are in Christ, and those who are out of Christ. Where are you? If in Christ, you have a new heart, new joys, new hopes; all things are new, as the text says. If out of Him, the old things remain, the old sins all against you, the old sinful pleasures, and the old prospect of death on account of sin. Oh, do think of this if, and never be satisfied until old things are passed away, and all things are become new.

(5) "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them" (John xiii. 17). Now, although God tells us very plainly that we can never be saved by our doings, because Christ has done it all, yet, when we are saved, He does expect us to do much for Him. How kind of God to give us his word. The Bible tells us two most important things. First, how to be saved, and then, second, how to live when we are saved. Now, this if has to do with the latter. Do we know God's will? Do we know what will please Jesus?—the loving Jesus who has saved us. Yes; for we have the Bible, and that tells us all. Then the Lord says, "If ye know, do." Don't let us be content with only knowing, but let us take pleasure in doing all we are sure will please our precious Saviour, and then we shall indeed be happy.

"If you come to Jesus
He will make you glad,
He will give you pleasure
When your heart is sad.

"If you come to Jesus
He will bid you live,
He will love you dearly
And your sins forgive.

"If you come to Jesus
He will take your hand,
He will kindly lead you
To a better land.

"There with happy children,
Robed in snowy white,
You shall see the Saviour
In that world so bright."

BIBLE DOUBLE ACROSTIC.

Doleful strains, by prophet of old,
Are each by primals and finals told.

(1) An ancient king by mother taught.
(2) Good king whose reign by wars was fraught.

(3) A singer sweet in Israel's band.
(4) She brought a curse on all the land.

(5) Most foul disease he suffered sore.
(6) Dwelt in by patriarch of yore.

(7) Before me none can have a part.
(8) In God put this, with all thine heart.

(9) A captain he of David's host.
(10) A city built near Ephraim's coast.

(11) A town the scene of mother's grief,
(12) A sect that lived in unbelief.

NOTES ON THE

SCRIPTURE UNION READINGS.

APRIL 16.—JOB XXVIII. 1–14.

v. 12.—"Where shall wisdom be found?"—Dr. Adam Clarke calls this chapter the oldest and finest piece of natural history in the world; and it is specially interesting as showing what skill and knowledge the ancient world possessed in reference to arts and sciences. But there is a higher wisdom than that known to men of learning, a wisdom which cannot be obtained by human intellect. It is the knowledge of Christ (Phil. iii. 8). We must be scholars in Christ's school if we would be truly wise.

APRIL 17.—JOB XXVIII. 15–28.

v. 28.—"Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom."—Not the fear which makes us afraid of God, but godly fear such as causes us to revere his name, and obey his commandments. Such a fear as a loving child has for his father, who out of love to him, and desire to please him, is always obedient and attentive to his will. Many illustrations of this fear are given in the Word of God. Noah was moved by it when he built the ark (Heb. xi. 7). Abraham was filled with it when he prepared to offer Isaac (Gen. xxii. 12). Nehemiah, when he separated himself from evil (Neh. v. 9—15). Even the Holy Jesus cherished it, for it is this fear which is meant in Heb. v. 7. All who are truly wise seek to have their whole life ruled by regard to the will of God. David has a special word for children on this subject in Ps. xxxiv. 11—14.

APRIL 18.—JOB XXXV. 1–16.

v. 10.—"None saith, Where is God my Maker?"—It is sad to think that there are many, both young and old, who live neglecting God. They do not seek Him, nor desire the knowledge of his ways. We might suppose from the way such people treat the Lord, that He was their enemy, and that his service is a miserable and hard one. But it is not. He makes all his true servants glad and happy; He "giveth songs in the night," as He did to Paul and Silas when in the dungeon at Philippi: "They sang praises unto God" (Acts xvi. 25). Those who wish for true joy, and plenty of it, cannot do better than begin at once with all their hearts to seek after God.

APRIL 19.—JOB XXXVIII. 1–23.

v. 1.—"The Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind."—In this chapter we have not the words of Job nor of his friends, but of God Himself; He speaks out of, and by means of the storm—"the stormy wind fulfilling his word" (Ps. cxlviii. 8). God has different ways of speaking to man. To Elijah He spoke in "a still small voice," He was not in "the strong wind that rent the mountains" (2 Kings xix. 11). But sometimes, as here, "the Lord hath his way in the whirlwind and the storm" (Nahum i. 3). How happy are all who can sing as their own song the words of Dr. Watts:—

"The God that rules on high, and thunders when He please,
That rides upon the stormy sky, and manages the seas;
This awful God is ours, our Father and our Love,
He will send down his heavenly powers to carry us above."

APRIL 20.—JOB XL. 1–14.

v. 4.—"Behold, I am vile; what shall I answer Thee?"

Almighty Judge, how shall poor wretches brook
Thy dreadful look,
Able a heart of iron to appal,
When Thou shalt call
For every man's peculiar book?

What others mean to do, I know not well;
Yet I hear tell,
That some will turn Thee to some leaves therein
So void of sin,
That they in merit shall excel.

But I resolve, when Thou shalt call for mine,
That to decline,
And thrust a Testament into thy hand,
Let that be scann'd.
There Thou shalt find my sins are thine.

Geo. Herbert.

APRIL 21.—JOB XLII. 1–17.

vv. 5, 6.—"Mine eye seeth Thee. Wherefore I abhor myself."—There is a great difference between knowing many things about God, and knowing God Himself. Job had heard of God, and from his youth up thought upon his ways, and talked of his mighty works, as he tells us in verses 2—5; but he had never had such a sight of God within his soul as he speaks of in the motto. He saw God's purity, wisdom, and grace in a new light, and it humbled him to the dust, it taught him his own nothingness, and led him to trust wholly in the Lord. Such a sight, dear children, is good for us all; let us ask to be enlightened in the knowledge of God, as that, like Job, we may turn to Him with all our hearts, and be "accepted" of Him, and "blessed" in all our ways (vers. 9, 12). Read Isaiah vi. 5—7, and Luke v. 8—10, for similar examples.

APRIL 22.—PSALM XXI. 1–13.

v. 4.—"He asked life of Thee, and Thou gavest it him."—The King spoken of in this Psalm is Jesus, the Saviour King, of whom David was a type. As the Son of Man He came down to earth to work out salvation for us, and though in doing so He died, yet He lives again, and is now a Priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedec, having all "the power of an endless life" (Heb. vii. 16). Hence He is called "The Prince of Life" (Acts iii. 15); and we can only have eternal life by believing in Him. He has this life to bestow it upon souls who come to Him to obtain it. All who refuse Him and neglect his salvation will, when He comes (as He soon will) in power and great glory, be overthrown, as verses 8 to 12 testify. Let us be like David, in ver. 7, then, "through the mercy of the Lord we shall not be moved."

BIBLE COLPORTAGE IN IRELAND.

THE annual meeting of the Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland was lately held in Derry. The Society gives no sign of abating its energy on behalf of the people of this country, who may be anxious but who are unable to obtain copies of the Scriptures. The report, read by Rev. John Elliott Armagh, hon. sec., contained many points of interest. The Society, says an Irish contemporary, remains to-day fundamentally the same as the day it began its good work of evangelisation. It includes on its General Board and local committees members of all evangelical denominations, and aims at the circulation of the Word of God and a pure literature among all classes of the people. Besides the great work of colportage, the Society endeavours to establish in smaller towns and villages, and in rural districts, book agencies, at which Bibles, books, and periodicals may be had for sale at all times. The statistics for the past year are, on the whole, satisfactory, though we should like to see a continual increase in the number of works distributed. We trust that the subscriptions to the funds of this most excellent Society may be so multiplied that the distribution of the Sacred Word may be able to go on, irrespective of the varying capabilities of the people to pay for the copies they receive. Only such a condition of things could be regarded as wholly satisfactory.

Among the speakers at the meeting was Rev. Dr. Jackson Smyth, of Armagh, who said the Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland was one of the most successful, because one of the most effectively managed, evangelistic agencies of which he had any knowledge. For over a quarter of a century it had been carrying on its work throughout the country, causing fertility and shedding blessings as it went. Never in all its history was there greater cause for thankfulness to God than at present, and it would readily be admitted that never before was there more need of energetic operations in the spread of truth.

EASTER MONDAY AT PEVENSEY SLUICE.—Easter Monday was a "Thanksgiving Day" long to be remembered by the friends working here. About 200 people assembled in a tent in the afternoon to listen to an earnest Gospel address by Mr. Hasselby, of Doncaster. After tea the meeting was presided over by Mr. Hasselby, of St. Leonards, and brief addresses were given by Rev. E. Hawkin, Mr. J. Russell, Mr. Feist, Mrs. Hill, and myself. Mrs. Matthews (the earnest and devoted wife of a godly coastguard officer) gave a simple and touching story of the origin and growth of the work. About £50 is still required for the building, and I am sanguine that this small sum will soon be forthcoming from your readers.

Geo. Fred. Hill.

THE LATE EARL CAIRNS.

As anticipated in our brief announcement last week, the death of this illustrious Christian nobleman has awakened deep and universal feelings of regret. Though he had reached the highest legal and political eminence, he was a Christian first and a politician afterwards. Every kind of good work feels, therefore, that they have lost a constant and powerful friend and advocate. The fact that his illness was so brief, and that only a week before his lamented decease he stood on the Exeter Hall platform, and earnestly pleaded the cause of foreign missions, seems to bring into sharper relief the loss that England has sustained.

As to the circumstances of his death the Bournemouth correspondent of The Times wrote, on April 2:—"After his return from London, on Wednesday in last week, his lordship contracted a chill through being caught in the rain, and on Saturday he was confined to his bedroom. It was not until Tuesday night, however, that grave anxiety was felt for his condition. Dr. Nankivell on Wednesday summoned Dr. Kidd to his assistance from London, and several members of the family were also telegraphed for. The Countess Cairns, the Hon. Herbert and the Hon. Wilfred Cairns, the Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke and the Hon. Mrs. Sherbrooke were present when his lordship died, conscious to the last.

A well-known Christian lady, and a friend of the family, writing to The Record, says:—"A chill, followed by congestion of the lungs, proved to be the call to an eternal rest in the Home of the Lord, who loved him too well to keep him out in the storm and rain of earthly life any longer. The eldest of his two dearly-loved daughters thus writes: 'Stamped on that dear face, so lovely and holy in its calm peace, are the words, "Thou hast made him exceeding glad with thy countenance." His latest words, the only ones spoken for many hours, were of his Master: "The only faith to live and die in, is Christ. God bring and keep all my beloved ones in this faith. Let nothing come between you and Christ." Then his voice rang out, "God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have eternal life—eternal, eternal life." Then he leaned his head on my mother's shoulder and fell asleep in Jesus.'"

Our limited space and the many demands upon it do not permit of our giving any detailed statement of the career of the departed Earl. Most of our daily and weekly contemporaries have done fitting justice to his memory in this respect. Notably The Times, of Friday, April 3, and The Record of last week, give long and very interesting obituary accounts. In an appreciative leading article, the leading daily journal describes him as "one of our greatest lawyers and most distinguished statesmen." On these aspects of his life it is scarcely within our province to speak, beyond paying a passing tribute of admiration to the qualities of mind by which he rose to fill the most exalted offices on the Bench and in the Senate Chamber. As to this latter point, The Record well remarks: "It is a fitting coincidence that the last speech he made in the House of Lords should have been an earnest and logical defence of the sanctity of the Christian Sunday and of the force of religious obligations."

In a sermon on Good Friday, Dr. Edersheim, speaking from twenty years' intimacy with the Earl, testified to his great powers, his earnestness, and his nobleness. When he began his career as a barrister he did so with the avowed resolution to serve the Lord Jesus Christ and to obey his laws. For the first time he was called upon in the pressure of business to do some work on the Lord's-day, and when it seemed that his refusal to do so might seriously affect his future career, he steadily refused. As another contemporary justly observes: "Those who associate piety with intellectual weakness would do well to look on a man like Earl Cairns, who won a first place among statesmen, and yet was a humble and sincere believer."

As a pronounced evangelical Christian and a practical philanthropist of the most catholic sympathies, the late Earl took high rank, even among the many eminent men conspicuous for these qualities that the age has produced. Our readers will recollect the heartiness with which he threw himself into the work of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in London, being, indeed, a member of the Committee that arranged for their special evangelistic efforts. His personal share in furthering the interests of Dr. Barnardo's Homes is also matter of common knowledge. He was a fast friend and supporter of the Irish Church Missions and others of a similar kind. As an indication of the width of his sympathy with all good efforts at home and abroad, we may add that a note reaches us from Dr. Ker, of Miss de Broen's Belleville Mission, alluding to the deep interest shown and the assistance rendered by his lordship to that work among the Communists of Paris. In brief, wherever he and Lady Cairns could help on a good cause, that help was freely and unstintedly given. Now that his goodly presence has gone from our midst, and his calm, earnest, convincing speech will be heard no more on the platforms of earth, we can but bow to the decree that has taken him away in the height of his activities, and mourn our well-nigh irreparable loss. His memory will long be green in the heart of the Christian Church, and his example will be a source of stimulus to succeeding generations.

The funeral (says a correspondent of The Record) was a remarkable occasion in many ways. The utmost simplicity was observed, but the vast concourse of people of all ranks of life made the scene very impressive. The cortège itself was entirely devoid of the horrible trappings formerly de rigueur. There was not even a mourning coach—only private carriages without a sign of mourning. At the grave a large space was roped off, which was soon surrounded by hundreds of people. The members of the Y.M.C.A., 147 in number, and a detachment of eighty boys from Dr. Barnardo's Homes, with the Doctor himself at their head, lined the enclosure. Around the grave gathered the mourners, Lady Cairns on the arm of the second son, and the Marquis of Salisbury, conspicuous by his commanding figure and black skull cap, in the front of an assembly among whom might be noticed Lord John Manners, Sir Richard Cross, Lord Tankerville, Earl Beauchamp, Mr. Ashmead-Bartlett, M.P., Rev. Sholto Douglas, Rev. Norman McNeile, Colonel Rowlandson, and many others. Several religious institutions were represented; among them the Young Men's Christian Association by its chairman, Mr. George Williams, and the Church Missionary Society by Mr. R. C. Hankinson, President of the Southampton Auxiliary, and Mr. Eugene Stock. The funeral altogether was like one, not of a great statesman who had been Lord Chancellor and might have been so again, but of a simple Christian gentleman whose real self was not there at all, but at rest in the presence of the Lord he loved.

PROPOSED MEMORIALS.

Writing from his residence in Grosvenor-square, the venerable Earl of Shaftesbury says:—

"It is thought that some memorial in the place where Lord Cairns lived, and which he loved so well, a memorial which will benefit the young men of Bournemouth, would be most in accordance with his interests and wishes. It is well known that the work of the Y.M.C.A. lay very near to his heart, and now the Bournemouth Association has lost its president, its leader, and best friend. The last time Lord Cairns spoke at the Town Hall, he urged the claims of the Association, and proposed plans for building suitable premises. Many will be glad to help on this work in memory of Lord Cairns and for his sake, in order that the work which he had begun, and in which he was so deeply interested, may be carried on and not suffer. It is suggested that a sum of £5000 be raised by donations to purchase and furnish premises now in process of erection, placing them in the hands of trustees for the use of the Bournemouth Young Men's Christian Association, under the name of 'Cairns House.' This form of memorial will be thoroughly acceptable to the feelings of the family, and will fulfil one of the most earnest wishes of the later months of Lord Cairns' life."

Mr. S. G. Sheppard, Chairman of the Committee of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, also writes from 28, Threadneedle-street, E.C.:—

"The late Earl Cairns, in July, 1875, laid the foundation stones of eight or nine buildings at Ilford, which have since then grown into a village home for the education and training of little homeless or orphan girls, rescued from positions of suffering or danger, and now being therein qualified for a useful and industrious life. From that time until Lord Cairns's death, he manifested an earnest and increasing interest in this particular part of Dr. Barnardo's work, and I know it was the wish of his heart that the village should be completed in accordance with the original design. Part of that design included the erection of more dwelling-houses, as well as of a mission hut or chapel, in which the worship and religious instruction of the young inhabitants of the village should be carried on. There are also ten cottages still required to complete the scheme, in addition to those which have been recently promised by benevolent friends. It is now felt that we ought at once to raise a fund in memory of the late Earl Cairns (our first president), sufficient to complete the mission hut or chapel, and to build at least one of the separate dwelling houses, the latter to be called the "Earl Cairns Cottage." The amount needed to accomplish this is only £2500. The many friends and admirers of the late Earl might contribute in this way towards consolidating and completing that work which he himself had so dearly at heart, to which he gave so much of his personal service, and which undoubtedly has for his object the furtherance of one of the most practical aspects of Christian philanthropy."

In Memoriam.

Ah, face that beamed with honour! Sensitive
Curved nostril, and keen energy of eye;
Broad, penetrating brow, where, shelving high,
Thought's sifted spoils lay dormant, yet alive,
By memory marshalled, eager to revive
At the least shadow of her wand, and try
Arms with the proudest, boldest enemy;
With loftiest problems ever first to strive!
Whether in hot arena of the State
Or Law; still toiling on with conscience clear,
Breathing thine own pure moral atmosphere
That nought could interrupt or vitiate;
Like some strong diver under desperate seas,
Faith filled thy lungs with heaven's own freshening breeze!

Charles A. Fox.

Y.W.C.A., SOUTHSEA.

A QUIET, earnest work is carried on among young shop assistants in this fashionable resort, where they are peculiarly exposed to temptations from its proximity to the garrison and naval towns of Portsmouth and Gosport. Startling indeed are many of the facts brought to one's knowledge by eye-witnesses to the numerous gilded baits held out by the destroyer. In the hope of holding out a helping hand to these young women, a branch of the Y.W.C.A. was opened six years ago. As the work prospered, the desire to extend its usefulness to others induced the committee, some months since, to open a separate branch for young women in service.

This comprises suitable rooms for meetings, library, &c., and above these a suite of smaller ones, which it is the earnest desire of the committee to fit up as bed-rooms for Y.W.C.A. members.

Furniture is needed of every kind—cocoa-nut matting, and a harmonium for the class-room, linoleum for stairs, &c., and it is hoped that some Christian parents, knowing the value of such a shelter and home, will help with means to furnish and get all in working order before the summer season brings its increased need. Further particulars will be given, and contributions most thankfully acknowledged by Miss Balley, hon. treasurer, St. Simon's Vicarage, Southsea.

SOLDIERS OF THE CROSS.

UNDER this heading The Ceylon Observer, of March 6, has an interesting sketch of the brief visit paid to Colombo by the seven young China Inland missionaries en route for China. Says the writer:—

"No one in Colombo who came in contact with these young men during the past week could help feeling deeply impressed and solemnised with the sense of entire devotion and singleness of purpose which is carrying them to the far eastern campaign on which they are about to enter. Who will say that the days of chivalry, Christian chivalry, are over? Missionaries we have had in the East who had given up much of home ties and comforts for the cause they had at heart; but seldom has England given seven of her sons who have apparently thrown aside so much in personal comfort and ties of kindred and friendship as those who have just passed on to work in the vast interior of China. They have gone in the very prime of their youth, eager to spend and be spent in the service of their Master, their Captain and King. They present wonderful examples of unity in diversity and diversity in unity. Diverse in their mental as well as physical gifts, they are as one man in their simple, unwavering conviction of the supreme importance of the service in which they have enlisted."

A longer and still more interesting communication appears in The Indian Witness of March 14, in which some details of the voyage from Suez onwards are given. We make the following extracts:—

"On their arrival at Suez many wondered what they would be like; that surely there must be something wrong, a screw loose somewhere, that seven young men of position should leave home and all the pleasures of fashionable life, for, as they said, something less than a myth, a wild goose chase—to convert Chinamen! Why, these people's records are more authentic than our own, and suffered less from erroneous translation. Teach them! Why, they'll laugh at them. So thought I, and with me many others. In fact, we expected no end of fun in quizzing them, intending to patronise their singing as a polite concession to mistaken enthusiasm. So with that view, when the first evening came, we gathered round, but when we heard the deep swelling notes in which they so earnestly sang, 'Christ receiveth sinful men,' and after a few stirring words of earnest appeal went on, in a gentle solo, with those simple words, 'Let the dear Master come in,' it seemed to touch even the most callous. Tears would come in the eyes of many, and, as Mr. Beauchamp, or Stanley Smith, would speak of the endless blessing of the Saviour's love, eighteen hundred years seemed but a day, so vividly did they paint that great event. A bleeding Saviour hung before us, and with a dying look of love, exclaimed, 'It is finished!' Then many a trembling sinner longed to get that peace—a peace which faith and trust can only give.

"Later on they would join in prayer, leading with them some nervous, repentant brother, and pleading for the Saviour's loving help to strengthen him, and make him bold to own and serve his new Master, asking God to fill his heart so full of peace and love that there be no room for evil in it. So were the evenings spent, singing ending about 10 p.m., but not their work. One or the other might be seen earnestly whispering words of hope, or upsetting some stubborn theory of unbelief. Always gentle, always patient, and not to be offended. I and many others look back to these evenings with pleasurable regret, and earnestly pray that God will guard them and bless their work.

"As time wore on, Sunday came. Service aft in the morning, but later on a more informal one on the main deck, to which all the stewards came; also many of the passengers. After a chapter had been read, and a hymn sung, in which all cordially joined, each young man stood out, and in a few sincere and simple words told us of the wondrous way in which God had called them to his service, leading them to throw up their various professions and serve Him only, and testifying before all to that great and indescribable peace which follows reconciliation to God, and implicit trust in his mercy. After this evening a Bible-class was formed, and a chapter read before breakfast; then each brother was strengthened in faith by appealing and hearing other trustful prayers for strength and help. Again, at noon, a few earnest friends gathered together for an hour, and most of those passengers immediately under their influence and example took a pleasure in reading the Word, praising God in simple hymns of thanksgiving, while each pointed out and called to notice some fresh beauty or glorious promise, made to those who will but trust Him.

"We had a light-hearted man-o'-war's man, bound to join his ship at Aden. A jolly tar, with hardly a thought beyond the morrow, but a heart as soft and tender as his hand was hard and rough. I often heard his voice as they sang, 'Let the dear Master come in.' First 'twas but a murmur; yet, as the night rolled on, it gathered strength, and at last loud and proudly came the words, 'I believe it, I believe it: Jesus died for me.' No hesitation then, for he did believe it. I shall long remember the night he left. 'Twas in a hurry, close on twelve. A boat came for him, the officer was waiting, and as he bundled his clothes together, exclaiming, 'There'll be a rare crowd there, sir' (meaning on board the Agamemnon), 'Yes, Jack,' I replied, 'there will; but your new Master is well able to keep you even there, only trust in Him.' Then his face brightened up with a happy smile, his eyes filled with tears, and taking a step towards me, he cried, in such an earnest voice, 'Do you really mean it, sir? I am so glad.' I took his hand, giving it a hearty squeeze, saying, 'Aye, Jack, I do; you've earned a conduct medal from your country, may you merit a still greater reward from your heavenly Master.' He left, and with him went the prayer of many an earnest heart. Thus God in his great mercy blessed their work of love.

"But there was another side, and I will but briefly touch upon it. All this time the devil must needs be busy. How could he stand idly by, seeing so many of his best and zealous ministers wavering on the brink of salvation, all but believing? It was serious. It was too bad, really. So, waking up, although nearly the last night he had to contend with, he possessed a few unsettled spirits who, during what was to have been a farewell service, tried with bones, tambours, and other noise to mimic and imitate a skeleton band. What a frail attempt! It was pitiful. God forgive them, for they knew not what they did. But no more of that: the kind attention of the commander and his officers to forward any proposals or arrangements for the common weal, more than compensates for so slight a check. The general patience and attention paid by all the crew during these meetings was very marked, showing clearly that if it be stirred up, there is a godly feeling and natural inclination to do right in the heart of every man. So we all sincerely hope that the ministry of these seven young men may be blessed in proportion to their trust; and since Studd, at cricket, and Stanley Smith with the oar, surpassed their fellows in sport, so may it please God that they tower above others in a glorious example of humility and faith."

UNITED KINGDOM BENEFICENT ASSOCIATION FOR POOR GENTLEFOLK.—Miss Buller writes, with reference to this Association:—I will gladly send information to any unacquainted with this good work. I especially ask for help as "friends" to individual candidates and annuitants. Cheering letters, newspapers, small articles of food and clothes are received with the most touching gratitude. In the May number of Con Amore, details for a year's "friendship," that does not cost ten shillings, are given. This serial is published in January, May, and September, one shilling post free, for the year, or single copies fourpence, by Mr. Charles Caswell, 200, Broad-street, Birmingham. Two hundred candidates and annuitants are still waiting for "friends," and it would be a very great help if some readers would, besides personally undertaking to be a "friend," speak of the need for them to benevolent gentlemen as well as ladies.

"SHE HATH DONE WHAT SHE COULD."

THE LATE MISS BROOM, OF GRAVESEND.

THE great eulogy pronounced by our Lord over Mary of Bethany has doubtless been the record of many a faithful woman in all after generations. When the books are opened it will be found that obscure ones have, in their sphere, and without courting human regard, not been satisfied with profession, or religious emotion, but, in disregard of personal convenience, have translated their love to Christ into life-long acts of renunciation; and have served, not with reservation, or divided service, but to the very uttermost of their means and ability.

In illustration of this I ask a little space in THE CHRISTIAN for a memorial notice of Miss Mary Broom of Gravesend, with whom the late General Gordon co-operated in works for the poor of that place, and who was spoken of by the General as "one of the best women in England." With little that was adventitious to aid her, and with daily duties to attend to, she spent hours every day in the lower parts of the town; gave her life for the uplifting and salvation of a river-side population; contracted an infectious disease during her voluntary visitations; and died at the beginning of this month of a seizure of small-pox.

For fifteen years I have known of her unwearied, unremitting, self-sacrificing efforts on behalf of the suffering and the abandoned. During the greater part of this period I have ever closely observed her efforts, and have known how every social enjoyment was relinquished that she might help those who most needed help. She hired a house among the poor whom she sought to elevate, and made it cheerful for Christian services and innocent pleasures, that men, women, and boys might be drawn there.

She conducted Bible-readings and musical bands almost every night, to win the tempted out of evil. Lost girls in their despair repaired to her home, and she would journey frequently to London to place these penitent ones in a refuge. I have seen her entering the railway carriage with two or three of them, and she would spend the last shilling she had on their recovery. The late excellent Daniel Cooper co-operated with her in these efforts, and shared her reward in not a few cases. I have gone to a midnight meeting where she made all bright, and ministered with a sisterly affection that never forgot the sin, and never failed in tender, but firm compassion. She would, many a night, go to a tavern and fetch out a half-drunken man, and then walk by his side to take him to his home. When youths in her classes were refractory, she would overcome them by her friendly patience. Her aptness in winning the confidence of the wretched and unsocial would have been counted marvellous by those who did not understand that her strength came from the Great Sympathiser. Her unpretending affection, without a shade of pharisaism or sanctimoniousness, strangely won upon the brutal and demoralised.

The town was not slow to help her. Mayors bore testimony to her ministries. But if her work was at any time overlooked, the fact made no difference. Neither the weariness of daily engagements, nor the heavy pressure of sorrows, arrested her absorbing solicitude for the neglected and the desolate. If anxious and worn, she would come to her pastor's wife for prayer, and start afresh. When this lady had, in another part of the town, founded a class where poor women might be encouraged and aided in making family garments, Miss Broom co-operated, and with the same self-forgetting industry. The class grew very large. I used to witness year by year, and with wondering gratitude, the improvement in the very faces of the women, as I accompanied them in their annual country excursion; and a resident gentleman declared that one neighbourhood of their houses had been entirely changed. In these and in all Mary Broom's labours there was no assumption; nothing like condescension. She was at all times the cheerful friend among those who knew the struggles of poverty and temptation; and, during nearly a quarter of a century, rarely paused in her service on their behalf.

Such an instance of unostentatious and persevering effort for the poor of a community has not often been witnessed. She freely gave herself to them to be their guide out of sin to Christ, and in, at last, giving her very life for them she has, we may believe, received from the Redeemer the high commendation—"She hath done what she could." Through the faithfulness of God her works will long follow her, and her example will teach the peace and power of a life of self-renunciation.

Tunbridge Wells. WILLIAM GUEST.

A QUARTETTE OF EVANGELISTS.

THE city of Louisville, Kentucky, is now the scene of a precious work of grace. By a singular coincidence, four well-known and greatly-honoured evengelists have paid us a visit.

First came Henry Varley, no stranger to your readers, who is this winter preaching in Western and Southern cities. Mr. Varley had previously laboured in St. Louis, Springfield, and Kansas City, calling out in each place large and influential congregations. His visit to Louisville was timely. This city is a great whiskey centre; it is also a rendezvous for gamblers and other patrons of evil, who find lurking-places within its borders. But none of these things did the sturdy evangelist spare. He possesses the reform spirit in great measure, and thus exposes himself to the unmerciful and unjust attacks of the secular Press. But his gospel is not all denunciation. Law and grace have their proportionate share in his testimony. Scripture exposition was ably set forth, and Christians were found earnestly attending to the things spoken, while his appeals to the unconverted were frequently most simple and convincing.

Mr. Varley had laboured about two weeks when D. L. Moody and George C. Needham arrived. The former spent only three days with us. But such days will not soon be forgotten. All-day meetings of the Convention brought together great masses of people, who were deeply moved and seriously impressed by what they saw and heard and felt. Messrs. Varley, Needham, and Munhall, with local ministers, and an Episcopal Bishop, took an active part in the convention.

At the close of these three wonderful days Mr. Moody left us, and soon after Mr. Varley started for Augusta, Ga. But under the leadership of Mr. Needham the work went ahead with new impetus. Churches and theatres were brought into requisition, morning prayer-meetings were organised and Bible-readings were resumed. For two weeks this evangelist held the fort, teaching, preaching, and managing, in various ways, the necessary details incidental to such a movement. More recently Major Whittle has come among us, with his co-labourers Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan; and at the present writing Messrs. Needham and Whittle are carrying on four daily services in the leading churches of the city.

This focalising of evangelistic effort has called out the wonder of many, as it is now known that the gathering of the evangelists was not according to any pre-arranged plan of theirs. It may be premature to speak of results just yet. A precious revival is going on; the city is greatly awakened; anxious inquirers are found at the services; revived Christians are spreading "the old, old story;" pastors are putting forth new energy, and praise ascends from many hearts and homes.

Mr. Needham starts next week for Montgomery, New Orleans, and Mobile. And as we close, the sad news has come that Major Whittle is summoned home by the sad news of his son Waitie's death. Reader.

Louisville, Kentucky, March 27.

With respect to the death of Major Whittle's son, referred to in the foregoing report, Mr. G. C. Needham writes to us:—The dear boy had reached his tenth year, and had matured so fully that he had become the companion and comfort of his parents. Our brother had come to Louisville, Kentucky, with Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan, to assist in the work of grace in which Mr. Varley, Mr. Moody, and myself had been engaged. The other brethren having left, it was with great joy and hopefulness we received our co-labourer and his companions. Heartily and vigorously he entered upon the work here, drawing great congregations from the first. It was here that ten years ago Major Whittle and the lamented P. P. Bliss began their evangelistic career, and where God so abundantly crowned their labours with success. It was while here, at that time, his aged father was called home, and the dear child, who is now with Jesus, was born to him.

After ten days he was hurriedly summoned to his Chicago home by the sad news of his little son's sudden death. It fell to our lot to address his meetings and announce the cause of his departure from the city. The weeping congregations, the general expressions of sympathy, and the readiness of proffered aid, revealed the high esteem in which our brother is held, and indicated the true affection of those who had been enriched and comforted by his ministry. Mr. and Mrs. MacGranahan accompanied the grief-stricken father to his home. Their ministry of song is very sweet, and their ministry of fellowship with mourning parents and friends has been a service of no small moment. Frequently have they comforted the bereaved in their touching rendering of the refrain, "I am the Resurrection and the Life," while now at the funeral of little Waitie they sing it with added pathos to the evangelist himself and his sorrowing family.

MISS ELLICE HOPKINS AT UXBRIDGE.

IN connection with the first anniversary of the Uxbridge and District Social Purity Society, Miss Ellice Hopkins addressed a meeting of men in the Town Hall, Uxbridge, on Wednesday of last week. The occasion was felt to be one of considerable interest. The chair was occupied by Mr. Alfred S. Dyer, editor of The Sentinel, who was supported by Rev. Selwyn Blackett, Rev. Robert Sewell, General Swanston, Messers. Wookey, James, and others.

In introducing the speaker, the Chairman said the rapid spread of the White Cross movement had been largley due, under God's blessing, to the consecrated effort and eloquence of Miss Hopkins. That movement he believed was destined to be one of the most momentous of modern enterprises. He rejoiced in it, because it would everywhere tend to a revival of true godliness—to the awakening of those who had a name to live, but were dead. Purity was a pathway of power, for it was to the pure in heart that God gave a revelation of Himself. It would also bring a blessing to our national life by leading to a demand for a higher standard of morality for our public men. "He that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city;" and with the spread of the cause of purity, the people would recognise that those who failed to rule themselves were not the men that ought to be chosen to rule others. It had been well pointed out that impurity destroyed personal virtues in other directions; and it was true that many a public calamity had been due to characters weakened and corrupted by licentiousness.

Miss Hopkins then spoke with power and pathos for about an hour on "True Manliness." Many, even among the older men, appeared to be much affected as she pleaded for a standard of manliness in consonance with the obligations of the Word of God. At the close of her address, the obligations were, by her desire, put to the meeting one by one, the men signifying their acceptance of them by holding up their right hand. A few moments of silent prayer, preceded assent to the last—"To use every possible means to fulfil the command, 'Keep thyself pure.'" A resolution to memorialise the Premier and Home Secretary, and to petition Parliament that the age of protection to female minors be raised to eighteen years, was afterwards unanimously adopted.

GOSPEL PURITY ASSOCIATION.—Mrs. Bradley (11, Grange Park-gardens, Ealing, W.), as organising secretary of the Women's Branch of this Association, desires to suggest to friends living in or near London, that the regularly held and numerous mothers' meetings should be utilised for advocating the claims of this movement. She would gladly attend on due notice being given, and address the mothers. She also invites Christian ladies to take purity pledge books and slips, through the medium of which they could bring an influence to bear on those around them. These, and any needed information, Mrs. Bradley will be happy to supply to suitable helpers.

THE KINGDOM NIGH.

By T. D. BERNARD.

NOT in some distant world unknown,
Not in the lofty skies,
Not o'er the ocean vast and lone,
God's Kingdom lies.

As near its unseen presence comes,
As air that circles round;
Along our paths and in our homes
Its voices sound.

Its breath creates the Sabbath calm,
And hallows sacred walls;
Its tones are prayer and creed and psalm,
And Gospel calls.

In ministries that never cease,
In sacramental signs,
In holy lives and deaths of peace,
Its lustre shines.

Lord, who hast brought this kingdom nigh,
Save from the woe and sin
Of those who on its confines die,
Not found within.

Grant us its truth and life and power,
In Jesus Christ to know;
And then at thy predestined hour
Its glory show.

[From Before his Presence With a Song. Elliot Stock. A little collection of poems, far above the average, though here and there we regret to find a tinge of sacramentarianism.]

A CRY FROM SPAIN.

BY the kind invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Boake, of Bella Vista, Southwood Lawn-road, Highgate, many friends were privileged to hear, on Friday evening last, of the most interesting and too-little-known work round about Figueras in Spain. Pastor Rodriguez and his devoted wife told of a wonderful and saving work done amongst the Spanish children and their parents. The particulars, as set forth touchingly and simply by Madame Rodriguez, were followed with the warmest sympathy by those assembled. She described the work of the children's day-school, the Gospel services, and the night-school for adults. At Rosas, a seaport on the Mediterranean, a mission has been started, after much opposition, including a cottage hospital. A little boat named the Evangelist goes out to the craft riding at anchor; the workers distribute texts and Gospels amongst the sailors. The expenses of the work for the past year were £836. Out of this the modest sum of £372 6s. 10d. is put down for the salaries of six workers—the pastor, an evangelist, three schoolmasters, and a schoolmistress. Madame Rodriguez earnestly begged for annual subscriptions to the work. Even 2s. 6d. a year was better than £1 donation, because then they could rely upon a settled income.

The meeting was presided over by Rev. Baron Hart, late of Paris. Several friends engaged in prayer, and it was decided that Christian ladies in England should be asked to form themselves into a sort of committee to provide the sinews of war for the good but quiet work which these earnest workers are carrying on right out of the track of the tourist. Mrs. Boake has made a beginning, and she was so well supported that six ladies volunteered then and there to co-operate with her. We hope that our readers will heartily support this good work.

ORPHAN HOMES.—Good Friday at the City Temple and at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, was devoted to the cause of the Orphans. In the former sanctuary, Rev. Dr. Parker had around him some 400 of the children from the Orphan Working School at Haverstock-hill and the Alexandra Orphanage, at Hornsey-rise, whilst he preached and urged their claims to a congregation which crowded the building, and responded liberally to the collection. Miss Sharman's Home at West-square, Southwark, found an advocate in Rev. A. C. Murphy, at Christ Church. Since its formation in 1867, the number of orphans received into the Home have risen from ten to about 250, and there are now country branches at Gravesend and Tunbridge Wells. A number of the orphans were present at the service, and a collection was made on behalf of the funds.—Christian World.

YOUNG MEN AT THE MANSION HOUSE.

THE time-honoured institution in Aldersgate-street used to be called the "Parent Association" of the Y.M.C.A. Now they tell us that Exeter Hall is the parent; what the ex-parent ought to be called we scarcely know. We suppose it matters not so long as both are doing their proper work heartily, as unto the Lord, and not unto men, which we are glad to believe they are. London has so many young men who need to be "associated," that a holy and brotherly rivalry between the branches scattered throughout the metropolis is a thing not to be deprecated but desired.

It seems odd to attend a City Y.M.C.A. anniversary anywhere out of Exeter Hall. But times change. The three central Associations are now on an independent footing, and so must render separate accounts of their stewardship. The account which Mr. Robert Burn had to give at the Mansion House last Thursday evening was one that he might have been excusably proud of, if this worthy secretary were not an incarnation of all the Christian virtues—meekness and modesty being prominent among them. No one who reads his report (we hope many will read it when it is issued) will be able to run away with the idea that the Aldersgate-street Home is a Christian hot-house for the production of highly-cultivated but sickly and nerveless specimens of young manhood. It is rather a training-college for the full equipment of young men in the great and glorious work of saving and helping their fellows. A mere glance at the long catalogue of things attempted and done, shows that the whole man is catered for—body, mind, and spirit. For the body there is a due admixture of athletics in various forms. It appears that a new recreation ground has been secured at Crouch End, where all the faculties of that wonderful piece of divine mechanism, the body, will be developed to the last degree. For the mind, there are the educational classes, the debating society, the ample store of literature, lectures on a multitude of important topics, and so forth. The Aldersgate-street fellows ought certainly to illustrate the ancient proverb about mens sana in corpore sano. Not less complete are the appointments for the spiritual good of the members and associates. There are the classes for Bible study, for training and instruction as teachers and evangelists, the sacred song association, and last, but far from least, the Gospel meeting, where the soul is brought face to face with the stern realities of its constitution and its destiny, and where Christ is exalted as the sufficient Saviour and Keeper of all who hope in his mercy. Being thus thoroughly furnished unto good works, the energies of the members are directed into many and fitting channels of service which we cannot stay to enumerate.

We sometimes wish that secretaries would read the balance-sheet at the beginning instead of the end of their statement; it is apt to leave an unpleasant taste in the mouth if, as too often happens, there is a deficit to be recorded. Happily, Mr. Burn had not a very large one to tell of—some £120—and we hope that ere now it has been turned into a "nest egg" for the year to come.

The meeting, as we have said, was held at the Mansion House, and the Lord Mayor was to have presided; but he was confined to his bed by the painful malady (pleurisy) of which, to the great sorrow of the Metropolis, and of all Christian society, he has since died. His place on this occasion was filled as genially as is his wont by Mr. George Williams, who is the very beau ideal of a chairman for religious meetings. Besides, is he not the Treasurer and the virtual founder of the institution? He said that while they were content to let Exeter Hall become the parent association, the separation had left Aldersgate-street well-nigh stranded by the removal of so many subscribers. Others were needed to take their place. Aldersgate-street had been called "the centre of civilisation," and therefore to lessen its influence in any degre would be disastrous to the best interests of the young men of the City of London. Going on to speak of the work at Aldersgate-street, Mr. Williams said it was wonderful to observe what a busy beehive it was. From his personal experience alone he could give abundant proofs of the value of the institution. In due time he hoped they would find a much larger and more suitable home on some splendid site. He thought the magistrates of the City ought to give the Y.M.C.A. their heartiest support, as it tended to lessen their work of maintaining order and preventing crime.

The rest of the evening, apart from some stirring sacred songs from the Notting-hill Male Choir, was given up to the usual speech-making. With all his customary Welsh fire and eloquence, Rev. J. Ossian Davies exhorted his young friends to the cultivation of the manly virtues of sobriety, honesty, thoroughness, fidelity to revealed truth, and heart consecration to God. Dr. Sinclair Paterson propounded some "simple hints as to the practical study of the Bible." To be practical it must be carried on in a docile and believing spirit. The modern tendency to "explain away" the miraculous and the supernatural, he branded as a device of the devil. There must be love of the message as well as faith in its veracity. Finally, its teaching must be transmuted into practice in every-day life. As a foil to these more serious utterances, Mr. T. A. Denny's lively little speech was quite a masterpiece of platform pleasantry, and served well to introduce the important business of the collection. After that came some words from the well-known Chicago philanthropist and man of business, Mr. Farwell. He said he had watched the rise and progress of the Y.M.C.A., and he rejoiced that it was such a practical institution. It educated young men for the work of saving other young men. In this sentence it seems to us Mr. Farwell put the whole matter in a nutshell. It was this Y.M.C.A., he said, that gave us in America a Moody, a Whittle, a Cole, and many others. There were many young men in London who might be Moodys if they were content to begin where he did—going out to seek and save the poor lost boys and youths of the city. God had set his signature to the work, and Christians might well give it theirs. A short closing speech came from Rev. Dr. Bennett, of Chelsea, who made some interesting reference to General Gordon, whom he was proud to call a personal friend, and who was a member of his congregation.

In an early part of the proceedings Mr. Hind Smith read letters expressing regret at non-attendance from many distinguished friends of the Association. Among them was a brief but warm note from the late Earl Cairns, which, as Mr. Smith feelingly observed, now possessed a mournful interest. There is this consolation, however, that while earthly friends and supporters pass off the scene, God abideth ever with his trusting, faithful servants. In simple dependence upon Him we doubt not the Aldersgate-street friends will plod on through the arduous but happy work of another year.

MR. RICHARD WEAVER IN WIMBLEDON.

THIS evangelist has held a fortnight's mission in Haydon Hall, South Wimbledon. In spite of opposition the building was nightly crowded; the meetings have been characterised by great earnestness, solemnity, and ingathering of precious souls.

Among several interesting cases met with the following may be mentioned. A gentleman who had been in good circumstances, but reduced through drink, called on a Christian tradesman in the neighbourhood, who asked him to go and hear Mr. Weaver. The invitation was accepted, and they went together. The man professed to find Christ the same night.

Mr. Weaver concluded his mission here on Monday evening, April 6, when he gave a brief outline of his wonderful life history, "From the Coalpit to the Platform." Tears were drawn from many an eye, and praise from many a lip, and we believe the star of hope dawned in some hearts under the spell of the graphic story which gave evidence that "Christ can save to the uttermost." Mr. Weaver has gained the affection of many in Wimbledon, and their prayers will follow him in his future labours.

MR. QUARRIER'S LITTLE EMIGRANTS.

AT a meeting recently held in Glasgow to commend to God a party of 102 rescued boys leaving for Canada, Mr. Quarrier said that about 1200 children had been dealt with during the past year. Since November an average of about 50 children a month had been admitted. At one time his great desire and aim had been to rescue one child for every day of the year, and now he was running in the direction of about two for every day, or 700 odd a-year. Although they had been building houses for the last eight or ten years at Bridge of Weir, all were filled, and in the old Cessnock Homes, Govan-road, the children were sleeping two a-bed instead of one. What was he to do? The Govan-road Homes were very old and needing repair, so that it was thought best to leave them and concentrate the work at Bridge of Weir, which would be done by this time next year, and the Central Home would be the city portion. In addition to the fifteen houses at Bridge of Weir, he needed other fifteen at a cost of £40,000 or £50,000. Besides, he wanted a church down there to hold a thousand people, an additional schoolroom, as well as store-rooms. The 102 boys now about to leave for Canada were all paid for. It took £10 a-head to pay their passage to Canada, outfit, and incidental expenses. He intended to send other 200 children this year to Canada; from sixty to eighty boys would be ready to go in a month hence; and yet he had only got £350 towards the expenses. In the end of May they hope to be able to send away about 120 girls, and that would involve an additional cost of £1000. In short, he required £1700 before the end of May for the purpose of fitting out and preparing these children for emigration.

Rev. Mr. M'Gillivray, Canada, who addressed the boys, said: They in Canada took a very deep interest in the work, and he could assure them that there was no name more revered throughout the province of Ontario than Mr. Quarrier's. He was glad to be there to wish the boys God-speed to the shores of his native land; a land that he was persuaded would afford them a kind and Christian home, and a land where they would find ample room to make themselves useful. In his own district of Glengarry there were no less than seven boys and girls from Mr. Quarrier's Homes, and he was glad to say they were all doing very well. He himself had taken one of the boys, who in reality had become a son of the manse. The children who were going out had reason to thank God that they had been rescued from poverty, and possibly from vice, by going to a new country, where they would not have so many temptations.

Rev. Mr. Duncan, Nova Scotia, had much pleasure in adding his testimony to what Mr. M'Gillivray had said about the reception the boys would get in Canada. Even in his district he often heard about the great work Mr. Quarrier was carrying on, and he was satisfied that the children had been a blessing to many a family in Canada.

Sir William Collins presided at this meeting, and among the other speakers was Principal Douglas, who pointed out that the crowded state of the hall showed that the citizens were taking a growing interest in the work.

THE SALVATION ARMY.—General Booth availed himself of the Easter holidays to marshal the forces of his Army. On Good Friday he was present with Mrs. Booth and the members of his family at the Grecian Theatre, where they had an "All-day" gathering. The "Eagle Tavern" adjoining was closed during the morning and afternoon services, but was opened whilst the evening service was being held, but no disturbances arose on this account. On Easter Monday the officers had a "Review" day at Clapton. The services were attended by large numbers, and in the evening the large hall, holding over six thousand persons, was filled. The movement continues to spread, and the statistics show that over 1000 stations are now comprised within its operations.—Christian World.

Notes and Comments.

THE political horizon is gloomy enough, and the sound of war preparations on every hand reminds us that, as yet, we are far removed from the halcyon times of millennial peace and rest. In this case we trust that preparedness for war may prove to be the surest method of preventing it. At the same time we feel constrained again to raise an earnest protest against the defiant and bellicose tone that marks much of the writing in our daily Press, and which is calculated, more than anything else perhaps, to bring about the consummation we should all deplore. It behoves Christians of every name to be instant in prayer that God would avert such a world-wide calamity as a war between this empire and the still vaster empire of Russia.

A new periodical is being launched at a large outlay, the method of which has all the evils of the Continental lotteries, which are so properly forbidden in this country. For a half-year's subscription, amounting only to 2s., a receipt is given with a ticket duly numbered, which may or may not prove to be the winning number of a prize of £1000, or a smaller sum, or some article of more or less value. It may do more than this: it may give the first lesson in gambling, and lead on to a gambler's ruin. We are astonished that Christian papers which deprecate gambling should insert such an advertisement.

"There are some religious teachers," says Dr. Maclaren, "who are always preaching down enthusiasm, and preaching what they call 'a sober standard of feeling' in matters of religion, by which, in nine cases out of ten, they mean precisely such a tepid condition as is described in much less polite language, when the voice from heaven says, 'Because thou art neither cold nor hot I will spue thee out of my mouth.' That is the real meaning of the 'sobriety' that some people are always desiring you to cultivate. I should have thought the last piece of furniture which any Christian Church in the 19th century needed was a refrigerator. A poker and a pair of bellows would be much more needful for them."

This reminds us of the poem of John Gambold, in which he puts the following words into the mouth of Ignatius (a disciple of the Apostle John):—

"Some there are Severe and solemn, like the Pharisees,
Allured by pomp and form. Some are, again,
Of fine and tender mould, and urge the path,
Like Essenes, of a rapturous devotion.
And, lastly, some (well turn'd for human life,
But the most fatal, when their day shall come,
To our religion) sit like Sadducees,
Cool moderators of their brethren's fires,
Their mark and inspiration, Common Sense."

In a recent brief notice of "Joel Bulu," published by Mr. T. Woolmer, we erroneously attributed the authorship to Rev. Mark Guy Pearse. It is an autobiography edited by Rev. G. Stringer Rowe.

If there be serious apprehension because of certain moral aspects of our times, there is ground for satisfaction that these evils are touching the heart of Christian men as they have not done for many years. At a recent Diocesan Conference at Westminster, very earnest counsels were taken, not about vestments or ecclesiastical arrangements, but about the state of the people. It would be well if this example were followed by other Church Assemblies soon to be held.

At this Diocesan Conference, the Bishop of Newcastle said, on the subject of Purity: "Strongly as I feel with regard to intemperance, and the harm done by an excessive use of alcohol, yet I declare deliberately that I believe the evil will not bear comparison with the awful malignity of the poison of impurity which is not only affecting Society but decimating the Church of God." Clergymen from other parts of England spoke of the manifestations of the evil in country places as well as towns, and of the appallingly awful fact that England was getting familiar with the idea of fallen children.

It is true that the Christian Church has been too long silent on this subject, and that the policy of silence has failed. But ministers of religion who will do their duty in the matter must tread the way of the Cross. Men in good standing fall before the evil. The bonds of public opinion in relation to it have been shamefully relaxed, and legislation has taken a false action, the consequences of which men scarcely dare contemplate.

On the subject of infidelity there was a divergence of opinion in the Conference. Some held that the enormous circulation of ribald caricatures of Christianity, and the reckless way in which young people in good families were permitted to read books in which religion was laughed at, were doing immense harm. Representations, however, were made concerning such towns as Rochdale and Leeds, which went to show that among working men the infidel party was struggling for existence. The wise recommendation was given that laymen should meet this infidelity in lecture halls.

From The Sunday-school Times we learn that Mr. Moody's classes at Northfield, for the study of the Bible, are doing the highest service. All parties unite. Mr. Moody himself has spent some weeks in Northfield, giving Bible lessons. Others take his place when he is absent on evangelistic work. Twice a week the students of the ladies' school meet to study Scripture themes and Christian evidences. Normal methods of teaching the Bible, of dealing with inquirers, and conducting children's meetings, enter into the course. Surely some such a united and systematic effort might be tried among ourselves.

Mr. Rae's book on "Contemporary Socialism" (Isbister) demands the study of social reformers. The system has spread to America and to all the chief countries of Europe. The French Revolution is the model it proposes. Governments are to be seized, and a new order set up in which they declare the "chief lie"—of religion—will have no place. All things are to belong to all men; non-producing capitalists are to be shot down, and modern Society with its customs is to end. The fallacies of this modern Socialism are clear enough. But it must not be ignored. It is a spirit that is abroad. If its lawlessness is not so rife here as in France and Germany, it is because of present-day Evangelism among the masses. Those who preach and teach Christ are the saviours of society.

We are desired to state that parcels of carefully selected books, papers, and tracts, if marked "for sick and wounded," may be sent (carriage paid) to Major Hutchinson, 4, Guildhall-chambers, 33, Basinghall-street, E.C., who will forward them to Egypt for the use of the troops there.

We very cordially join with our contemporaries in America in congratulating Dr. Theodore Cuyler on the completion of the twenty-fifth year of his pastorate in Brooklyn. This auspicious event was celebrated by special services in his church on Sunday, April 5. Not only as a preacher of a plain and unmutilated Gospel, but as an ardent Temperance advocate, Dr. Cuyler has been excelled by few on either side of the Atlantic. The benefits that his faithful ministry has conferred on the Church at large are incalculable, and we hope he has yet many years of usefulness in store.

As to his abundant literary labours, the New York Christian Intelligencer has the following:—

> "Dr. Cuyler has written nearly 3000 articles for the religious Press—a number probably not equalled by any pastor now living or any one who has ever lived in America. They have been evangelical, timely, wise, genial, faithful to the true interests of society and the Church, patriotic, and remarkably useful. They have been regularly reprinted in Great Britain, and many have been rendered into different languages. Those who are most competent to make the reckoning estimate that a total of over 100,000,000 of copies of these articles have been distributed. They have been read by millions, who have received from them moral and religious instruction of the highest value, and have been incited, strengthened, and comforted by them. Besides, Dr. Cuyler has published ten volumes, and of some of these 40,000 copies have been printed in Great Britain, while in this country the circulation has been large and constant."

A painfully interesting correspondence has been going on in The Pall Mall Gazette with respect to the treatment of children employed as acrobats in circus entertainments. The consensus of opinion seems to be that no inconsiderable amount of cruelty is practised on them in the course of their training, although the proprietor of one large circus indignantly scouts the idea. Leaving out of view the morality of allowing young people to engage at all in occupations of the kind, there can be no hesitation in condemning such excessive training as would verge on cruelty. Another George Smith is needed to watch over the interests of these helpless victims of human thoughtlessness and greed.

Since the insertion of our recent note concerning the appointment of Canon King to the See of Lincoln, the Church Association has put forward a memorial to the Queen on the matter. Strong ground is taken that his semi-Romanist opinions disqualify him for holding the office of Bishop in a Protestant Church. It must be felt by men whose duty it is to hold firmly the Christian Faith, that a playing fast and loose with truth in episcopal appointments is most bewildering to the young and ignorant. The tendency of it is demoralising, and makes Christianity appear a thing of state-craft.

The appointment of Dr. Bickersteth to Exeter is thus counteracted by that to Lincoln. The attempt is being made that the National Church shall teach the most opposite doctrines. Such Erastianism has always been the policy of statesmen, but has always proved a mistake. Those who love the Gospel of God's grace have grave duties before them.

Mr. Sankey writes to us that Mr. Moody and he were to conduct meetings in his native town, Newcastle, Pennsylvania, on April 7 and 8. These two brethren were also, by the invitation of nearly all the Protestant ministers of Pittsburg and Alleghany, to hold a Christian Convention in Pittsburgh on April 9 and 10, and Gospel services on the 12th.

The Bitter Cry of Outcast London has found n echo in New York, where the Congregaional Club has been discussing the responibility of society to the suffering and povertytricken masses of that city. The same ad state of things and the same difficult problems were revealed by different speakers, s those with which we are now unhappily amiliar in London. Dr. Lyman Abbott, ays a contemporary, insisted on redressing he wrong done to the wage-worker in efusing him just compensation for his toil:—

> "Christianity has revolutionised the world politically, but not industrially. In the present relations f employer and employed, can there be said to be ny brotherhood of men? In revolutionising our ndustrial system lies a helping response to the Bitter Cry."

It ought to be helpful to professing Christians now and then to see themselves as others see them. The following is from the London correspondence of a Leeds newspaper:—

> "I happened to be the casual witness a few days go of the dispersal of the congregation after a conirmation at the church on Clapham Common, where he Bishop of Rochester officiated. The church was urrounded with carriages and cabs, two rows deep, nd the dresses the young ladies wore were of a haracter which made it quite impossible for most f them to walk along the street. The dispersal of he congregation under the circumstances was more ike the breaking up of a ball, or the close of a night t the opera, than the end of a solemn religious unction."

The praiseworthy action of the Prince of Wales in quietly visiting the other day one f the most distressing slums in Dublin, and n practically familiarising himself with the miserable surroundings of large numbers of he poor, will do much to endear him to the rish people, who are sensitive, in the highest degree, to kindness when unaccompanied by ostentatious patronage and ulterior objects. The poverty-stricken inhabitants of a Dublin street of fever dens, received the Royal visitor with every demonstration of loyal regard, heir greatest anxiety being to obtain a shake of the hand or some other recognition. Much has been said of the Prince's courage in goin almost unattended, and certainly those who ook part in the visit were not in any sense protectors. The people will not be slow to ecognise that, as well as the kindness of heart which prompted an inspection of so uninviting a quarter of the city.

That Prince Albert was "laborious for her people and her poor" was by no means the least of his noble qualities, and that the Prince of Wales should imitate his noble ather in his practical sympathy with suffering and poverty is perhaps only what might be expected from the son of such a parent. As Tennyson asked years ago, What better thing could England wish for in her future King than some inheritance of such a ife as that of the lamented Prince Consort?

The hand of death is busy in the more exalted ranks of our London community. Just a week after the decease of Ex-Lord Chancellor Cairns, the same ailment (congestion of the lungs) carried from the earthly stage the Countess Selborne, wife of his uccessor. A few hours later the dwellers in the City were startled by the unwelcome news of the death of Lord Mayor Nottage, after a brief illness. Though better known in the commercial than the religious world, his Lordship had, during his short term of office as chief magistrate, earned the esteem of all who knew him, and had evinced a strong practical sympathy with all philanthropic and Christian agencies. His sudden death will be mourned over by all classes of society in the metropolis.

According to the Paris correspondent of The Nonconformist and Independent, M. Brisson, the new French Premier, is an evangelical Protestant of marked purity of private and public life, of unflinching integrity and rectitude, opposed to the Concordat, and to making the Church an instrument in the hands of the State. Such a gratifying fact is to be noted, although it is not for us to predict what will be the issue.

Miss M. McLean, who has laboured in the Gospel among seamen and others in Japan, writes to us expressing her high sense of the services rendered to such efforts by the late Sir Harry Parkes, British Ambassador to Japan, and his wife. Christian work in these remote lands is too often hindered through the indifference, if not the active opposition, of those in positions of influence; it is all the more welcome, therefore, to hear of deep personal interest shown by an official representative of the British nation, in circumstances where such manifestations are of peculiar value.

We are glad that the Bill for the better protection of women and girls against the designs of wicked men has been re-introduced into the House of Lords. A serious blot in the measure, however, is the reduction, by one year, of the age up to which legal protection is proposed to be afforded to minors; the limit is now placed at fifteen. This change does not seem to indicate any real desire on the part of the Government to make a sufficient amendment in the law. The obnoxious proviso must be opposed and defeated by every possible means. Surely it indicates a deplorably low tone of morals in our legislature, that while, in matters relating to property the ægis of the law should be thrown over young people up to the age of twenty-one, in the far more important business of conserving womanly virtue the age limit should be placed at fifteen. The humbler classes will have to make their voices heard in the councils of the nation with no uncertain sound if they are ever to have their just rights respected.

Since writing the foregoing note, we have received a strongly-worded letter on the subject from Miss Ellice Hopkins, for which we have not space in our present issue.

Our valued friend, Mr. S. Gillespie-Prout, writes strongly deprecating the regulation helmet now worn by our soldiers in the Soudan. It is "altogether insufficient as a protection from sunstroke, while its weight is distressing." As there is, in his opinion, but little hope of our army being withdrawn for some time, it is most important that they should not be exposed to additional risks from the climate. He recommends, therefore, the adoption of "the large Indian Pith Topee" as the only reliable protection from such danger, his own experience being that it is exceptionally impervious to heat and pressure, cool and comfortable when he could not have borne a helmet for ten minutes.

That our artizans and mechanics are not more opposed to the Gospel than other classes of the community, if it be presented to them in suitable form, is abundantly manifested in the metropolis, and in our great centres of industry. At Bristol, an afternoon Gospel address in Colston Hall is listened to every Sunday by a congregation of 2000 to 3000, while five Bible-classes, some conducted by Churchmen and others by Nonconformists, are attended by 1500 men, with excellent results. The Lord Jesus said: "I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me." And so He does.

MR. J. S. SCROGGIE.

THE mission in Dunfermline by Mr. Scroggie, beginning on March 8, and ending on April 5, had been the subject of prayerful and earnest forethought. The invitation to come was unanimous and cordial. During the first week the services were continued in the Congregational Church, Cannon-street, with fair success, not a few giving evidence of decision for Christ. It was not, however, till the services were in progress in the Free Abbey Church the following week that it became very manifest that we were under a cloud of blessing. The movement reached its height at the crowded meeting addressed by Dr. Moxey on the Friday evening, when more than we can ever enumerate here, we believe, gave themselves to the Lord.

The Committee were encouraged to continue the services for a third week in the North Parish Church (Dr. Mitchell's), in a remote part of the town, where the audiences were still larger, and the impression still deeper. People from all parts of town and country made their way to this outlying centre, showing the interest awakened to be very wide-spread. During the last week, when the meetings were held by request in Queen Anne-street Church, the numbers increased, and great good has been done. Some idea of the work may be gathered from the fact that 500 copies of the tract, "Safety, Certainty, and Enjoyment," were distributed among the anxious ones spoken to. A social meeting was held in St. Margaret's Hall on the last Saturday evening; about 900 were present. Addresses were given by Mr. Stevenson (Chairman), Dr. Mitchell, Rev. Messrs. George, Shiach, Foote, and Hagen; all testified to the good they had received and witnessed, and the wisdom with which the movement had been conducted from beginning to end. Mr. Scroggie gave a thrilling, practical address, specially to young converts, from Col. ii. 6.

In addition to the other services, a meeting for prayer and Bible-reading was held every Sabbath morning, presided over, as on all occasions, by Mr. Scroggie, and during the last week every afternoon in the Hall of the Free Abbey Church. The last Sabbath morning meeting was attended by some five hundred, who drank in "the sincere milk of the word" with great eagerness, many of them being young believers. On the last Sabbath evening the St. Margaret's Hall was full to its utmost capacity of standing as well as sitting room, many turning away disappointed. Mr. Scroggie was accompanied to the platform by most of the ministers in town, and spoke with great power from Is. xlv. 22.

Of particular cases or permanent results we shall not speak. These have been committed by many an earnest heart to the Lord of the harvest. It is fully expected in some congregations that there will be a larger ingathering than was ever seen before. The responsibility of the ministers of religion, which is felt to be great in guiding and feeding the converts, is greatly lightened by the sense of freedom in preaching to awakened congregations.

Happily a deputation of students from Edinburgh University had been arranged to visit Dunfermline, following up the weeks of united evangelistic work with mass meetings, for men only. At the first meeting, attended by about 250, the impression was very decided among old and young. The work among the students was felt to be very real, and one cannot doubt but many are seriously thinking out the question, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" On Wednesday evening, Professor Drummond, of Glasgow, addressed a meeting of men in St. Margaret's Hall, numbering at least six hundred. We ask prayer for this work, which is to be continued for some time in the form of evangelistic services on Sabbath evenings, and weekly meetings for fellowship.

THE DARK CONTINENT.

WHAT has been truthfully called "The Dark Continent," ought before long to lose any special claim to that title. What with scientific explorations across its central portions, with missionary efforts north and south and in between, not to speak of warlike operations in the Soudan and in the Transvaal regions, Africa bids fair to bulk as largely in the public mind as any of the great continents of the world. Additional light, of a deeply interesting kind, was thrown on this strange land at a gathering in the Kensington Town Hall, on Wednesday evening, last week. It was convened by Mr. and Mrs. Grattan Guinness, chiefly to commend to God in prayer several missionaries leaving for Zululand, and to impart information about the progress of missionary effort in other parts of the continent. A varied assortment of excellent views were shown by the limelight process. These, and the explanatory statements of Mr. Guinness, appeared to be much appreciated by the large audience. Mr. S. Morley, M.P., had hoped to preside, but was prevented by illness from being present.

After the preliminary proceedings, and while some Egyptian views were being thrown on the screen, Mr. Grattan Guinness said the hand of God might be plainly traced in connection with recent events in the Soudan, which up to a late period had been entirely inaccessible. An allusion to General Gordon and his experiences in the Soudan was warmly cheered. The two railways that are being constructed, in the Congo region and from Suakim to Berber, were referred to as probable important factors in the future development of the African peoples. There are six hundred different languages spoken in Africa, said Mr. Guinness, and the Scriptures, or portions of them, have been translated into only fifty of these.

Seelim, a coal-black representative of the peoples of the Soudan, gave a discursive address, in somewhat peculiar English, chiefly referring to the slave trade and the efforts of Gordon and his lieutenants to suppress it. Seelim has himself been a slave. With much simple pathos he described how, when a boy, he was carried off into bondage by the slave-traders, his father being shot down before his eyes, in the attempt to protect him from capture.

Mr. Guinness proceeded to say that Mr. Kestin, one of the Harley House students, had lately reached Alexandria, where he is now at work among the Jews, meeting with no little encouragement. There are, in Alexandria, many thousands of Jews of different nationalities and faiths, so that a large field is ready to the hand of this worker.

Passing from Egypt to Algeria and Morocco, Mr. E. H. Glenny gave some details with respect to the people of these regions, numbering about 15,000,000. The Berbers, of whom there are 10,000,000, are a distinct race from both the Arab and the negro. They are more open to the influences of the Gospel, and on all hands there is great readiness to receive the message of salvation. Their country is almost at our very doors; how comparatively easy, therefore, for us to take the Gospel to them. Within the last three years there have been planted a few missionaries, including some agents of the British and Foreign Bible Society. There are large districts to the south, however, where no messenger of the Cross has yet gone. A beginning has been made in translating the Scriptures into the Riffian and Kabyle tongues. Recent news from Mr. Baldwin in Tangier states that his wife is gaining considerable access to the Moorish women. In the province of Oran there are also not a few encouraging circumstances. Mr. Glenny made a fervid appeal to English Christians to press into the many open doors in North Africa, and thus obey the Master's call.

While some pretty views representing Congo scenes and incidents were being reproduced, Mr. Guinness read a brief statement giving the results of the recent Berlin Conference on Congo matters. The close of the Conference, he said, closed the second stage in the history of the Congo Free State, which is now recognised as a Sovereign Power by the other Great Powers. A constitution is being drawn up, and Mr. Guinness expressed the view that since Gordon's death, no fitter man could be appointed to the post of Governor-General than Mr. Stanley, whose endeavours have done so much to open up the Congo region to civilisation and the Gospel. There is to be free trade, an absolute prohibition of slavery, and a fair field to all the churches. There are already six steamers on the upper waters of the Congo, and a seventh is on the way. A portion of territory north of the Congo has been allotted to France, and a portion south of the Congo to Portugal. This latter portion was marked in black on the Congo map shown on the screen. Mr. Guinness remarked that he was sorry Portugal had received any part at all, in view of her conduct in the past with respect to slavery and other matters.

A fine photograph portrait of Mr. F. S. Arnot, the young African missionary explorer, was next represented. Mr. Guinness described him as a worthy successor of Livingstone; if the Lord should spare him, there was a likelihood that he would accomplish even greater things in the spread of the Gospel. He has crossed Central Africa almost without human resources, learning the languages of the people and preaching the Gospel as he went.

Another view shown was the family of M. Coillard, the French missionary to the Zambesi regions. After having been delayed six months on the way, and imprisoned by a suspicious African Chief, M. Coillard, according to the latest advices, had reached the Zambesi, and was about to start, almost alone, for the Barotsé Valley, leaving the rest of the party to follow.

Mr. R. Christison, a young Scotchman, who has already laboured in Zululand, in connection with the Gordon Memorial Mission, and is on the point of returning thither to establish a self-supporting effort, told something of the manners and customs of the Zulus, showing a close similarity to many ancient Jewish customs. There are few mission efforts at present in Zululand proper; he and a comrade were hoping to be pioneers in that dark and superstitious region. He thought itinerant work was the great need of these places. Mr. Harris, who goes with him, was present, as also was Mr. Kelly, who proceeds to Western America.

Referring to the general work of the East London Institute, Mr. Guinness said that during twelve years some 300 missionaries had gone from it to different parts of the world. The health of Mrs. Guinness had become severely strained; she is suffering from facial paralysis, and was unable to be present at the meeting. As to the home missions, Mr. Guinness spoke of the spiritual work at Bromley-by-Bow, where a new hall has been erected, and of the establishment of a Training Home for Young Women as foreign missionaries. There are now four houses occupied with the work—Harley House, the College there, Doric Lodge (the female training home), and Hulme Cliff College. In closing, Mr. Guinness referred to the great need of further monetary help for these various enlarged efforts, and made a strenuous appeal for practical fellowship in this matter.

The party leaving for Zululand were commended to God in earnest prayer. The same day as that on which the meeting was held the news reached this country of the death at sea of Mrs. Campbell, wife of Mr. G. Campbell, who has been engaged for a number of years past in South Africa on the staff of the Gordon Memorial Mission. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell were on their way home on sick leave, and the sorrowing husband is now in England with his two children, having committed to the deep the body of his beloved wife and fellow-worker, until the great day of resurrection and reunion.

HOME FOR FOREIGN GOVERNESSES (8, Sillwood-place, Brighton).—A stall will be erected for the benefit of the above institution at the United Sale of Work in the Duke of Wellington's Riding School, Knightsbridge, on Wednesday and Thursday, April 29 and 30.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND IN GLASGOW.

AT the close of the fourth week of Mr. Hammond's Glasgow meetings, The North Britis Daily Mail said:—"Mr. Hammond's first wee of work was given to Finnieston, the secon to Lansdowne U.P., the third to Cowcadden and the fourth to James Morrison-street, so tha he has touched every rank of society in the city The results have been singularly gratifyin Over 1700 young persons have professed faith i Christ, and have been carefully examined b experienced Christians. Those engaged in th after-meetings believe the work to be thoroughl genuine. Mr. Hammond is very careful both i dealing with inquirers and in conversing wit those who have been dealt with by others, so tha there is no inducement for any to make a fals profession. One minister reported that in h church he believed over six hundred person young and old, had been converted. More tha a hundred letters had been sent in by childre some of them exceedingly touching, and thes had been read and commented on from time t time by ministers or other gentlemen experience in evangelistic work. Some people are incredulous that children can entertain high thought and deep feelings about religion. It is great sin to doubt it. These hundreds c children will in the future be the men an women, the fathers and mothers, and th citizens of our country. Happy the people tha shall have many such, and happy the man, an his co-workers who go along with him, in producing such blessed results."

Another account referring to the work of th fifth week is as follows:—

Yesterday the reports very largely dealt wit Mr. Hammond's work among the young in th East-end of the city and in Govan. Last wee was devoted to Bethany Hall; from the report of Mr. Napier, Mr. Ralston, and others, appeared not only that at the special service the hall was filled, but that the results wer manifest and abounding. Large numbers c the young professed to see the evil of sin an the glory of the Saviour. At the special meetin for prayer and study of the Scriptures last Saturday evening many of the young were presen and their interest and conversation bore testimon to the reality of their convictions. Rev. Rober Howie said Mr. Hammond had been with hi on Sabbath afternoon and evening. He fe specially thankful for the afternoon servic which, in his own judgment, was fitted to b helpful to parents and others. He thought would be a good thing now and again if, instea of a sermon, or at the close of it, their churc service could be turned into an inquiry c conversation meeting, where office-bearers an people could come into close contact in regard spiritual realities. He believed great resul might be reaped in this way. They were als impressed with the importance of getting paren and Sabbath-school teachers alongside of the own children, and putting to them direct th question of their personal salvation, and that i their Sabbath-schools, instead of the ordinar lesson, the time during one evening now an again should be spent in personal dealing wit the members of their classes. He was delighte to be able to report that they had a great blessing on Sunday night, the church being crowde —about 2000 being present, and many youn people professing to give themselves to the Lor —not a few of these being children of office-bearers. Rev. Mr. Edgar, Rev. J. F. Daly, an Dr. Cameron also gave interesting cases whic had occurred in their own experience recentl all tending to confirm the impression that a re work of grace is in progress in the city.

GREENOCK.—Having a large number of po people in hospital and other departments of th poorhouse here, and being short of good reading, would be grateful for supplies of current magazin and monthly tracts which have been read and whic could be forwarded for a trifling sum. Senders parcels will much oblige by paying carriage.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

HE usual Bank Holiday meetings were held at . Kilburn Hall, on April 6. Mr. Russell Hurtch opened the afternoon meeting with a few ords of welcome to the many Christians present om other parts of town and country. Mr.
W. K. Gulston was introduced and com-ended to God, as one of four missionaries in conction with the China Inland Mission to sail r China on April 22. Pastor F. H. White showed om 1 Tim. i. 2 that Paul had experienced his ed of what he commends to Timothy—"grace, rcy, and peace;" and this not only at Paul's nversion but ever after. The first brush with the emy is often disheartening to the young convert;
t there is the advantage that he is then really st upon God. Mr. J. McCall counselled making rist the forefront of all testimony, Mr. Robin-n pleaded on behalf of twenty millions of Malays, r whose evangelisation no missionary from Eng-nd has yet been set apart.

During the afternoon much prayer and praise ere offered. Mr. Hurditch announced that furni-re had been provided for, and premises had been ken at Hastings, as a House of Rest in connection
th the Mission for Home and Foreign workers eding temporary rest. For this, and, indeed, all partments of the Mission, there is much need of cuniary support. The spiritual blessing in the rk generally, during the past few months, en-uraged the expectation of still greater things.

After tea and an open-air evangelistic service in ont of the Hall,

The evening meeting opened with prayer and aise. Dr. McKilliam said he had failed to realise e power of Christianity till he came in contact th a living Person. Taking the expensive spices to e sepulchre was zeal and love, but not faith. Do e believe merely what we understand? Common nse must go down on its knees to the Word of od. Past experience is valueless apart from esent faith. Above the world Christ shines out us more clearly. We cannot better attain to noch's position of pleasing God than by looking to and keeping near to Jesus. Mr. C. V. T.
nslow remarked that Esau had much, but Jacob,
e those who have Christ, had all (Gen. xxxiii.
-11). The Epistle of John shows the world der various evil aspects—transient, lustful, norant, deluded, anti-Christian, and satanic.
lomon was taught, "If ye forsake Him, He will st thee off for ever;" but Christ declares, "I ll never leave thee, nor forsake thee." Mr. eeman exhorted to holding fast the faith with a od conscience, to ensure freedom from entangleent, and consequent readiness for the Master's
e. Mr. Bicknell, of Bushey, gave an earnest ospel exposition.

Mr. Hurditch, addressing the representatives of e several branches, counselled some hitherto shut to a contracted sphere of labour to pray for a der field; and exhorted others, whose cups of essing are full, to ask God to give them larger ildings. Mr. Thorpe led in prayer, specially entioning a similar fellowship meeting at the indon branch, and the day's proceedings came a close with the Benediction.

SCARBOROUGH Y.W.C.A.—On Wednesday, pril 1, we entered our new home, No. 1, Haddorace, Aberdeen-walk, which we have been so uch looking forward to for the past few months.
e shall be able to provide beds for twenty girls.
e again ask for much prayer that God may cause
e Home to be a centre of blessing in our midst.
ill any kind friend make us the gift of a har-onium or American organ of suitable size for our ass-room? A. Douglas Dale, Secretary.

NATIONAL BIBLE SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND.—
ew auxiliaries of this Society have been formed r Abercrombie, Queensferry, and Stewarton. At e last Glasgow meeting of directors, Mr. John . Wilson, one of the Society's agents, received a rdial welcome on his return home after seven ars in China, where he had accomplished thirty issionary journeys, and sold 47,000 portions of ripture. The Hankow agent reports the issue in st quarter of 20,000 Gospels in the Society's new un-li version. Mr. Burnet, of Wu-hu, reports e formation of a native church in a distant pro-nce, through the reading of the Scriptures with-t the intervention of any missionary. Arrangeents were made for the employment of seven ditional colporteurs in India. The sale was ported, on the Society's account, of 696 Bibles 1 839 Testaments in Chili. Copies were laid on table of the Revised Standard Japanese New stament, just issued by the British and Foreign d the National Bible Societies; and of the Gospel Matthew in Chinyanja.

BRITISH SAILORS IN HAVRE.

MUCH has been done lately for our merchant sailors when in English harbours; but their needs have not yet been sufficiently attended to in foreign ports. In Hâvre, for example, only those who have inquired into the subject know the terrible state of things that exists there. About 40,000 seamen enter the port of Hâvre every year, 25,000 of whom sail under the British flag. Hâvre is the second largest mercantile port in France; but in no other port are there so many English sailors paid off. When paid off, where can they go till they can either return to their homes or ship for other voyages?

One who is bestirring himself in behalf of the sailors arriving in Hâvre says:—"No sooner has a ship entered the port here than the deck is crowded with runners and crimps of all descriptions, who are very liberal with the brandy bottle. This is, of course, the first step to ruin for the poor sailor, who comes ashore perhaps after a long sea voyage of 120 days. I have stood by and seen a poor fellow (who, as he expressed it, 'had made up his mind to go to the Sailors' Home, and take care of his money and himself a bit') fall before the first taste of the deadly poison. Thus his course has been entirely altered; for the man who puts the bottle to the sailor's lips claims him afterwards as his property. The consequence is that, in many cases, instead of the men's money being sent home, it is squandered, and often it is stolen from them. I could tell of many instances where men, having been paid off in the afternoon with £40 or £50, have been decoyed into the boarding-houses, and on waking the next morning have found themselves without a penny."

Another, who knows the evil to which the merchant sailors are exposed in the haunts of vice which surround the London docks and other ports, says that the state of things in Hâvre is far worse than in other places he has seen. Nothing can exceed the vice and infamy that abound all round the quay of Hâvre. Is this always to go on? and is no effort to be made in order to cope with these hideous evils? Does it not behove us to make even greater efforts for the good of our seamen when in a foreign country, and unable to understand the language, than when they land on our own shores?

Through the indefatigable energy of Mrs. Birnal, the wife of the British Consul, a Home (containing thirty-two beds) was opened two years ago on one of the principal quays. But since the appointment, six months ago, of Mr. and Mrs. Hermann, late of the Honfleur "Rest," it has been found that the house is not nearly large enough for the present requirements. It has therefore been decided to take a large house in a first-rate situation, capable of holding 100 sailors. The freehold can be purchased in six months' time; but in order to secure it, and furnish it, and also fit up with a good coffee-bar and mission-room, at least £3000 will be required. No one but those who have been on the quay at Hâvre, know what a boon such a Home would be for the thousands of sailors who come in there. Cafés (or, as they should really be called, brandy houses) abound, fourteen such places having been counted side by side on the quay. Nowhere in all the town can a Temperance bar be found. To the shame of our country be it said that the two largest and worst cafés, with low concerts every evening, are held and managed by English people. Should help be provided for the purchase and fitting up of the new Home, it is confidently hoped that the worst boarding-houses will be shut up, and that then the Sailors' Home runners, having no others to compete with, will have the joy of bringing up the ships' crews when they are paid off, to receive a warm and Christian welcome in the Sailors' Home, founded by the sailors' friends for their spiritual and temporal good.

It may be added, by way of encouragement for the future enlargement of the work, that during the last six months, since Mr. and Mrs. Hermann have been at the head of the present Home, over £3000 of the sailors' wages received at Hâvre have been remitted through the Home to their friends or to savings banks. Two undesirable boarding-houses have also been shut up in that time, thus proving that the sailors do appreciate the comforts of a Christian Sailors' Home. Any one travelling through Hâvre is invited to come and see all these things for himself.

Daily and illustrated papers, and books for the library and the sailors' bags, will be gratefully received; also the old clothes for shipwrecked crews, which often arrive there. The London General Steam Navigation Company has kindly undertaken to forward, free of charge, parcels from London, addressed to Mr. Hermann, Sailors' Home, Hâvre. Further information can be given by Rev. G. Whelpton, Hâvre; or the Hon. Lady Beauchamp, 3, Cromwell-road, London, S.W.

MR. HENRY THORNE AT NEWCASTLE.

THIS evangelist, whose former labours in the city are still remembered, opened a ten days' united Gospel Mission at Newcastle, on Saturday, March 21. Each day Mr. Thorne presided at the noon-day meeting at the Central Hall, Hood-street, when the attendances were largely increased. He conducted afternoon Bible-classes and evening Gospel services at the Y.M.C.A. Hall. On Sunday afternoon, March 29, Mr. Thorne delivered a special address to young men on the subject of "Temptation," at the Central Hall, when some 450 young men attended (including Mr. T. Moffit's Bible-class of 200).

The Mission closed on Monday evening, March 20, with a Service of Praise at the Central Hall; but two supplementary evening meetings were held at the Y.M.C.A. Hall. On Tuesday evening, in connection with the Y.W.C.A., Mr. Thorne delivered a discourse on "The Perils of Young Women," and on Wednesday evening he met inquirers. There were many of these at each service, and several interesting and decided cases were met with, especially among the associates of the Y.M.C.A.

MR. HENRY LAKIN IN GREENOCK.

A TEN days' mission in Greenock, under the auspices of the Christian Mission of that town, has been held by Mr. Henry Lakin, evangelist. During the week nights the meetings were held in the mission premises, the Star Hall, West Burn-square, which were filled every evening. One Wednesday evening Mr. Lakin spoke to a crowded audience on "How I was converted in a public-house, and what became of the sign, cards, dice, dominoes, and the remainder of the Devil's furniture." The story of the evangelist's conversion was listened to with rapt attention, and it had to be repeated on the Saturday evening.

The meetings have been principally attended by non-church-goers, and at every meeting there have been interesting cases of conversion. This special effort among the masses, as far as man can judge, has been crowned with success.

The Christian Mission of Greenock, under whose auspices Mr. Lakin has been labouring, has just finished a very successful year's work.

P. L.

BATTERSEA-PARK TABERNACLE.—Great blessing rests upon the word, and crowds attend the huge place, though double the size of the old building, and one of the cheapest, holding near 1500, and costing less than £4000. An effort is being made to remove £500 of the £1500 left upon it, and help is needed. The pastor, T. Lardner, is entering upon his 9th year. A meeting was held on Good Friday, when a large number was present. Warm, loving, helpful words were spoken, and a desire expressed that pastor and people might enjoy the fiftieth anniversary.

THE SOUTHWARK "HELP MYSELF SOCIETY" attached to the Pilgrim Church, New Kent-road, continues to be a centre of varied effort and much blessing to its members. The social entertainments, open-air services, colportage work, and personal visitation and other agencies are vigorously sustained with much manifest and blessed result in the salvation and social elevation of men and women. Mr. T. Barclay, the Vice-President of the Society, writing from the Pilgrim Hall, New Kent-road, S.E., makes an earnest appeal for larger support from the Christian public in order that the good work may be extended and the prevalent temporal distress relieved.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. W. Forbes has been giving addresses at Wapping, Shadwell, Whitechapel, Highbury, Mile End, and Bermondsey.

Mr. Charles Inglis has just paid a second visit to Norwich and its neighbourhood. Much blessing has been the result. Mr. Inglis is now holding nightly meetings at Wood-green.

Kentish Town.—On Good Friday we had a testimony meeting among our own people at Malden Hall, and were much encouraged by the witness given to the power of converting grace. Converts of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Mission were very manifest. F. Twinch.

Kirkby Stephen.—We are having much blessing just now in this neighbourhood, through the labours of Mr. Canning, of the Evangelisation Society. Scarcely a night passes without some decision for Christ, whilst others are anxious. Good Friday was a specially helpful day. An open-air meeting was held in the Wharton Hall Park, followed by tea and meeting at night.

Chicago.—Major Cole has been quietly at work during the whole winter at one or another of the churches of the city, and, while there has been no great excitement attendant, much good has been done. Thos. Harrison is at the Trinity M. E. Church, with the usual results following his labours. Many adults have been interested, and great numbers are reported to have been gathered in.—Evangelistic Record.

Tyneside.—The evangelistic services conducted by Miss Coates, of London, in the North of England, for the last three months, have been uniformly and remarkably successful. The three weeks' mission at Seaton Burn, Newcastle-on-Tyne, just concluded, has been much blessed. The chapels were crowded, many being unable to gain admission. Some notorious characters have been reclaimed.

Kinnoir, Huntly, N.B.—Mr. J. A. Smith, evangelist of the Banffshire G. V. Mission, has conducted meetings here which have been very well attended by all classes in the district. They will doubtless prove the means of lasting blessing to many. Mr. Smith, who has conducted meetings here before, has a striking way of setting forth the truths of the Gospel, which is used by God wherever he labours.

Gosport Y.W.C.A.—Mrs. W. E. Legg has visited this branch for a week's mission, and we have had much blessing not only in souls saved, but in the great help afforded to Christians. During the mission there were a children's service, and a drawing-room meeting for young ladies. The mission was brought to a close on Monday, the 31st, by a praise meeting. Prayer is earnestly asked for the undecided, and that those who have fully surrendered themselves may be kept looking unto Jesus.

R. M. J.

Norwich.—Cornelius Smith, his wife, and son, have concluded a series of services in connection with the Victoria Hall Mission in this city. At every meeting some anxious souls found peace in believing, and Christians experienced seasons of great spiritual refreshing. On Good Friday the evening service was preceded by a tea-meeting, at which between 400 and 500 sat down; the after proceedings were characterised by jubilant enthusiasm, and included some striking personal testimony. Two dear friends gave glory to God for the removal of disease in answer to the prayer of faith.

Bracondale, Norwich. Robert Adcock.

Down Lodge Hall, Wandsworth.—Arrangements have recently been made for holding monthly afternoon services for children in this spacious hall. On Saturday, April 4, the first of these interesting gatherings took place, when the service was conducted by Mr. H. Hankinson, of the "Children's Special Service Mission." The friends of the new Mission Hall were greatly cheered by the large attendance of children, and by the attention manifest throughout the service. It is earnestly expected that much abiding good will result from this new enterprise, which will, at an early period it is believed, become an important adjunct to the general work of the Mission. Hitherto, no special services for children have been held in this neighbourhood in which the younger members of the various congregations, as well as the large number unconnected with Sunday-schools, could be brought together for the purpose of listening to "the old, old story of Jesus and his love." The committee and friends of "Down Lodge Hall" are earnestly desiring a rich blessing upon these services for children and young people.

Brooklyn, N.Y.—The Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church (Dr. T. L. Cuyler's) received sixty new members on Sabbath, March 9, as the firstfruits of the revival work which has been going forward since the Week of Prayer.

Lexden, near Colchester.—Evangelitic services were conducted by Mr. John Harris, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Cowell, of Colchester, from March 29 to April 5. They were well attended throughout; many stayed to the after-meetings and received blessing. Several aged people gave bright testimony of being blest during a series of meetings held by Mr. John Harris in this place four years ago.

Rayleigh, Essex.—During the past fortnight evangelistic services have been held in the Baptist Chapel, by Mrs. Yeoland, who has delivered powerful Gospel addresses to large and increasing congregations every night, God owning her earnest labours by quickening the zeal of believers, and by calling out others to confess Christ as their Saviour and Lord. Mrs. Yeoland has now left Rayleigh to conduct a mission at Barnstaple, Devon.

Annan.—A series of evangelistic meetings, extending over a fortnight, have been conducted here by Mr. Richard Hill, of Melrose. There have been interesting cases of conversion, and the many Christians attending the meetings have had a season of refreshing. The Lord, who has given this evangelist much grace and ability, makes him helpful to many. In Annan we have much reason to bless God for evangelists; among those friends here who are most active and useful now are some who got good when Mr. Hammond was with us in 1861. E. Young.

Richmond, U.S.—With reference to the recent evangelistic services, held here by Mr. Moody and Mr. G. C. Needham, the New York Examiner says: "The Methodist churches have had over 300 additions, the Presbyterians about 100, and the Episcopal churches are preparing large 'classes for confirmation.' But our white Baptist churches have been the largest sharers of the blessing. The additions to these churches will reach nearly if not quite 600, while there is considerable interest among the coloured churches."

West Brighton.—The week's Evangelistic Mission, held by Mr. Spencer Walton at Hove, closed on April 1. Throughout this mission the evening meetings have been well attended, and characterised by great solemnity and the manifested power of God. The Bible-readings for Christians in the afternoons were crowded, and we believe that in this, as in the previous missions held by Mr. Walton in Brighton, the Holy Spirit has been dealing very searchingly with Christians. Many sinners have been awakened and brought to Christ.

Chiddingfold, Surrey.—Some months ago Mr. James Ayling, builder, of this village, was led to open a small mission-hall on his premises, at which Sunday afternoon services have been very successfully conducted. On Good Friday Rev. John Bonney, of Guildford, preached; the hall was quite full. For nearly an hour the preacher discoursed, and was listened to with marked attention; all went away edified and instructed. These meetings have been well attended, and it is hoped blessed to the people in this beautiful, but spiritually dark spot. H. K. A.

Barnsley.—During the past six weeks the "power of the Gospel unto salvation" has been manifested in Buckley-street Church, through the preaching of Mr. J. Jones. He was engaged to conduct a month's Gospel services, but at the end of that time so much good was being done that it was decided to continue the meetings for two weeks longer. A further extension of a week has since been made. During the whole of the mission God's Spirit has been convincing men and women of "sin, of righteousness, and of judgment." Nearly 150 have so far professed to find salvation. A. L.

Devonport.—A fortnight's mission has been held here by Gipsy Smith, George Evens, and the Gipsy Lass. The first night's service was attended by about 600 people; as the nights went by the interest grew and increased, and was sustained until the last. Many remarkable cases of conversion occurred. One man who attended the mission was on his way home, and remarked to his friend he wished he could be saved. This was overheard by a Christian brother, who told him the Lord would save him where he was, if he would earnestly ask for forgiveness. There he prayed, and there he was converted, under a lamp-post. Another man attended the farewell meeting; next morning he said to a Christian brother he wished he was saved. The earnest brother took the seeking one into the counting-house. There he found mercy. During the mission about 120 professed conversion. A converts' meeting was held on April 8.

At Bournemouth, Miss Wingfield Digby, other ladies and gentlemen of the Blue Ribb Gospel Temperance Mission, hired the Auct
Mart during the Easter holidays, and invited navvies employed on the South Western Railw to come there for their refreshments. Pape magazines, &c., were supplied, and the hymns addresses, and the kind attention shown them, w so highly appreciated, that many were saved fr drunkenness and from loss of their hard-earn money. Enough was subscribed to leave £10 towards a like entertainment at Whitsuntide.
Misses Andrews, Dr. Ambrose, and others, h also had a Saturday night meeting at the Café Westbourne, with the same object, and have b rewarded by some deeply-interesting cases of c version.

LGIN EVANGELISTIC ASSOCIATION.

HE Rev. William S. Macqueen, of South Australia, at present on a visit to his native for his health, was requested by this Asso- on to conduct a fortnight's evangelistic mis- in Elgin. Friends rallied around him, and nce, with prayer and effort, the meetings e very largely attended, deeply impressive, fruitful in conversion and edification. eral meetings were held in the open air, on Plainstones, at which there were large gather- listening to the preacher, as he powerfully the old, old story of Jesus and his love. On lay, the 29th, he preached a special sermon oung men, which was largely attended, t twelve hundred being present, and a large ortion of that number being young men.

is visit to Elgin will be long remembered as ne when many believers were greatly re- ned and quickened under his brief ministry, ell as a time when not a few were made to the reality of conversion, regeneration, con- ation, and glory, which were the great topics is powerful and eloquent addresses. Mr. queen's youth and ability have won for him lgin many friends, who, if they cannot get to stay in Scotland, wish him God speed is return to Australia, whither he goes soon, health being now restored.

ULL.—A Gospel Temperance Mission is being at Hengler's Circus, Anlaby-road, by Major oole. At the close of each meeting a consider- number of pledges and blue ribbons are n. Major Poole is accompanied by Mrs. Poole.

HE WELCOME HOME.—The Fo'c—s'le Meet- at the Sailors' Welcome Home, St. George's- t, has been the birthplace of many souls. Child has returned to her post, after an ex- ed holiday taken to recruit her health. The —s'le Meeting is held every night, it is in full g at ten o'clock, and prayer is requested that h blessing may rest upon it.

OCIAL PURITY.—Mrs. Wookey gave a very erful address to women, in the Hall of the ors' Rest, Portsmouth, on Friday, April 10. ut 700 were present. Earnestly and faithfully pleaded with them, and faithfully she warned n of the dangers and perils that beset their . Mrs. Wrenston followed with a heart-stirring eal and a fearless exposure of vice. At the close he meeting, over which Miss Wintz presided, umber of women joined the "Royal Naval ty Society."

M.C.A. IN IRELAND.—A conference was y held at Ballymoney; it was resolved to form .M.C.A. The branch at Mountpottinger, ast, formed as a result of Messrs. Moody and key in 1874, is taking active steps to procure a building. At a social meeting held for the fur- ance of this object, the Hon. Secretary (Mr. ert Boal) announced that a site had been ob- ed, plans prepared, the estimated cost being 0; of this, £317 had been subscribed, and one d in the meeting promised £25 if the building opened free of debt. A mission has been con- ed in Ballyclare by Mr. Robert McCann with ent signs of God's blessing.

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

SAVOY MISSION.—Three ladies have consecrated themselves to the work, but something special must be done for this great country, dark as China to the saving truths of the Gospel. Will your readers pray for such a beautiful country that the King of Glory may find his habitation there?

ALEX. DONALDSON.

6, Rue Donizetti, Auteuil, Paris.

A LIFE OF GENERAL GORDON has been published in Holland, the sale of which is almost unprecedented. The whole of the first edition was ordered before it was ready, and a second had to be issued at once. The author is Rev. C. S. A. van Scheltma, a clergyman well known in Holland for his extensive philantropic and religious labours. For many years he has devoted himself to the work of the Home Mission, in connection with which he has translated and published many well-known English books, such as "John Ploughman's Talk," all of which have had a large circulation.

ORPHANAGE AT NEUILLY, PARIS.—The south wing of the English Orphanage at Neuilly was opened last week by the Baroness Alphonse de Rothschild, who laid the foundation-stone last year in memory of Charlotte Baroness Rothschild, her mother, and subscribed 30,000 francs for its erection. The ground on which it stands, with the older part of the Orphanage, was the gift of the late Mr. William Galignani. Thus, a foreign Catholic, a Jewish lady of English birth, and British and American Protestants of all denominations, joined to found a purely benevolent institution, the chaplain of which is an Episcopalian clergyman. The Bishop of Rangoon presided, and he and the Rev. Mr. Harrison, Pastor Moulpied, and a Canadian minister, were among those who spoke. All the orphans, numbering 43, were present. They were comfortably dressed, looked in almost rustic health, and their exercises and copy books showed that their minds were as well attended to as their bodies. Madame de Rothschild told the children how, for the sake of a beloved mother, she wished to extend a mother's care through Miss Leigh to English orphans.—Daily News.

SPIRITUAL PRIDE.—A correspondent informs us that the lines in our issue of last week, page 18, are by Rev. Dr. W. P. Mackay, of Hull, and are given on page 239 of his book, "Grace and Truth."

TEMPERANCE LITERATURE FOR BLUE-JACKETS.—Miss Weston writes from Devonport:—We have brought out a new edition of our Naval Brigade News. It is much read by all classes, and highly recommended for our Temperance Societies and Bible-classes of young men, &c. It has a circulation of 10,000 a month, and is sent out by the Admiralty to our ships in the Royal Navy. The London publishers are the National Temperance Depôt, 337, Strand.

MEDICAL MISSION IN GLASGOW.—A meeting in connection with these missions was held last week in Cowcaddens Free Church, Rev. Wm. Ross in the chair. Dr. A. M. Smith gave an intensely interesting account of the Medical Mission, and his experience of the need of this agency and its value in the district. Fifteen hundred patients had free advice and medicine in the five months the Mission had been in operation, and fully 1700 had been brought within reach of the Gospel.

GEORGE-YARD, WHITECHAPEL.—On Easter Monday, a number of poor men and women who attend the Sunday evening services at this Mission, assembled at the invitation of the Y.M.C.A. (Gracechurch-street branch). After tea Mr. George Holland presided, and recounted the goodness of God to this Mission. He was followed by cheering words from Mr. William Forbes and other friends. The latter part was an open meeting for testimony, in which many men and women testified to the grace and power of God.

HUNGRY MEN.—The response kindly made to our plea for giving a number of the unemployed dock labourers at Millwall a free dinner has enabled us to continue this good work day by day with few exceptions. We have just returned from our morning distribution of tickets. Soon the daily quota was given away, but, as usual, we are followed up by a few whose tales of sorrow are such that, as before, we overstep the daily allowance. One poor fellow who bore the evident traces of former respectability told us yesterday that he had not tasted food for two days. We shall happily continue this good work for the present if friends will kindly continue to help. WM. CHORLEY.

A SADDENING SIGHT.

PASSING THE CROWDED DOORS OF A THEATRE.

CROWDING to hear the song,
Crowding to see the sight,
Alert to do the wrong,
Careless to do the right;
With anxious faces all aglow,
Unheeding that it ends in woe.

How wide the downward road!
What jostling on the way!
What energy bestowed
To make all glad and gay!
Apparently successful, too,
But ah! 'twill end in bitter woe.

The young, the aged, here,
The rich, the poor, crowd in;
The beautiful and fair,
As though a prize to win.
Pleasure thou seemest to bestow,
Poor world! but all will end in woe.

The narrow path for me,
By ransom'd pilgrims trod;
Where nought of sin can be,
The path which leads to God,
Where the blest fruits of Canaan grow,
And never, never ends in woe.

KING'S CROSS Y.M.C.A.

THIS Y.M.C.A. has just completed its first year, and on Friday evening last held its first annual meeting. St. Pancras Hall was well filled with an appreciative audience; the Male Choir rendered delightful service, and the various speakers did their utmost to make the meeting a success. The account of proceedings for the twelve months showed that the Sunday Afternoon Bible-readings were well attended; a Tract Society has been formed, and several members take part in mission work. Better premises than the Cabmen's Rooms afford are needed to extend and develope the work.

Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS, who happily presided, spoke some words of hearty encouragement. Mr. Robert Paton reminded the meeting that this new branch of the Y.M.C.A. was the outcome of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's late mission, and offered some words of earnest counsel bearing on God's purpose in placing us in the world. Mr. James Robertson appealed fervently to the young men to be up and doing, always remembering the Saviour's words: "Without Me ye can do nothing." Other gentlemen followed with vigorous and stirring words, including Rev. Z. B. Woffendale, Rev. W. Smith, Mr. Hewson, Mr. H. F. Bowker, and Sir H. Pitman, M.D.

The Association enters upon its second year with every prospect of increasing success.

KING'S WEIGH HOUSE FLOWER MISSION.—For the past seven years we have met on Saturday afternoons and carried flowers, which friends have kindly sent us, to the poor who live in the neighbourhood of the Mint. We are now prepared to resume work for another season, and shall be thankful for flowers, but especially grateful to any of your readers, ladies or gentlemen, who will help us as visitors. The work, which usually occupies about an hour, is very pleasant, and the flowers are highly appreciated by the recipients. I shall be glad to give additional information, or to receive communications from friends disposed to help. Address, Miss Kemp, care of Mrs. Hancock, Darby-street Mission Schools, Royal Mint-street, Minories, E.C.—Yours sincerely, BEATRICE KEMP.

GREENWICH UNION INFIRMARY.—A Flower Mission is carried on in connection with this institution. There are 300 beds in the infirmary, and there are also many old and sick people in the infirm wards of the workhouse, whose dull lives are wonderfully brightened by the gift of flowers and a text-card. We therefore appeal to those whose homes are in the country, and who could, without great expenditure of time or money, let the sick ones share in their spring and summer joys. Quite a little store of small spring flowers, if carefully packed, can be sent by Parcels' Post for sixpence. Boxes marked "flowers only," should be sent off so as to reach by Wednesday night. Flowers and text-cards, which are much prized, will be gratefully received by Miss Alice Day, Arreton, Blackheath-park, S.E.

Notes on Daily Readings.

APRIL 16.—JOHN X.

v. 11.—"I am the good Shepherd."—This is He whom we, through grace, are enabled to say, We e his people, and the sheep of his pasture. Like ieep, we are weak, destitute, defenceless, prone wander, unable to return, and always surrounded ith wolves. But all is made up in the fulness, bility, wisdom, compassion, care, and faithfuless of our great Shepherd. He guides, protects, eds, heals, and restores, and will be our guide ıd our God, even until death. Then He will eet us, receive us, and present us unto Himself, ıd we shall be near Him, and like Him, and with im for ever.—John Newton.

v. 29.—"No man is able to pluck them out of my ather's hand."—Christians, remember this is your appiness and blessedness, that "none can pluck ou out of your Father's hand;" that you are kept," as in a garrison, or as with a guard, "by e power of God, through faith, unto salvation," ıd that men and devils are as able, and shall as on make a world, dethrone God, pluck the sun ıt of the firmament, and Christ out of the bosom the Father, as they shall pluck a believer out of e everlasting arms of Christ, or rob him of one of s precious jewels (Deut. xxxiii. 26, 27).—Brooks.

vv. 20, 21.—"Many of them said, He hath a devil." Behold the usage which the blessed Lord received om his creatures! And behold with what meekess and gentleness He conducts Himself; not a ord of impatience proceeds from his lips, nor a ok of contempt or indignation is seen on his face. nd what was He doing to merit all this? Why, e was instructing the ignorant, and telling the retched that He was just going to die to save eir souls! Amazing love of God, and ingratitude ıd obduracy of men! Let not the disciple suppose at, in this respect, he shall be above his Master. hen a servant of Christ has done his utmost to do od to his fellow-creatures, let him not be surised if he meet with nothing from many but proaches and persecutions for his pains. The and point is to take Jesus for an example of ffering, and to be armed with the same mind —r. Adam Clarke.

APRIL 17.—JOHN XI.

v. 1.—"Lazarus, of Bethany."—Most beautiful is e way in which Bethany is named; in celestial ography, which counts places according to the ints who inhabit and beautify them, it was known Jesus, it is known for ever, as the town of artha and her sister Mary. It was their town, st as Bethsaida was of Andrew and Peter. "This d that man was born there."—Dr. Culross.

v. 6.—When He had heard, therefore, that he was k, He abode."—We should have expected the very posite of this; we should have expected to be ld that love gave Him wings, and that He hasted their help, and made no tarrying. But the delay as part of his plan of lovingkindness; it formed rt of the preparation He was making to give em a blessing according to his own heart, who res more for our being rooted in God than for r present happiness. He was letting them cry ıt of the depths, that they might afterward cry, Let Israel hope in the Lord; for with the Lord ere is mercy, and with Him is plenteous redempon."—Ibid.

v. 25.—"I am the Resurrection, and the Life."—e does not merely say, "I raise the dead," but I am the Resurrection." The resurrection, that victorious life—the life power conquering the ath power, and that, too, in its own domain. I n the Resurrection. I do not need to pray for y dead brother; I Myself have the keys of hell ıd of death. I am the Resurrection even now; no ed for waiting till the last day; immortality prently resides in Me. "And the Life." This is e of the profoundest expressions in this Gospel. points to his absolute being in contrast with the rived and dependent existence of creatures. It not merely that He makes alive. He is Life; e primal, all-originating, all-comprehending, erlasting Life.

v. 51.—"This spake he not of himself."—iphas spake not of himself, but God spake rough him as through a trunk, Caiphas in the antime never the wiser for it. It was not a word ringing up in his heart; it passed out of his outh, but never came in his heart. Good words e no rule to distinguish a prophet from a devil. ophecy doth not always presuppose sanctification. any have had visions from God, who shall never joy the vision of God. One beam of holiness is orth a noon-day of illumination. Give me grace, ıat shift soever I make for knowledge.

Thomas Adams.

APRIL 18.—JOHN XII.

v. 3.—"The house was filled."—So it will ever be where there is true piety, it will be manifest in the house; see Ps. cxxxiii., and Matt. v. 15, "It giveth light to all that are in the house." We never read of Mary of Bethany beyond her own home, yet what a burning and a shining light she was. What comfort for those women whose lot is cast in the seclusion of home life, and who are able to do little beyond it. Unlike Mary of Magdala, who appears to have been free from home ties and was able to follow our Lord on his evangelising tours.—M. E. Berkeley-Calcott.

v. 26.—"If any man serve Me, let him follow Me." —The pathway of true and faithful service is that of earnest discipleship. He serves best who lives nearest his Lord, and the chiefest reward of faithful service on earth is nearness to the Saviour in heaven (Rev. xiv. 4). A beautiful example of the spirit of our Lord's words in their application to Christian life is found in Bunyan's picture of Mr. Standfast when he came to the river: "I see myself now at the end of my journey. I have formerly lived by hearsay and faith; but now I go where I shall live by faith, and shall be with Him in whose company I delight myself. I have loved to hear my Lord spoken of; and wherever I have seen the print of his shoe in the earth, there I have coveted to set my foot too. His voice has been to me most sweet; and his countenance I have more desired than they that have most desired the light of the sun."

v. 32.—"I, if I be lifted up, will draw."—Here our Lord intimates the nature of his approaching death, predicts the consequences which would thence result, and intimates the means and the manner of men's conversion, that they would be attracted to Him by an exhibition of his death, for the sin of the whole world."—J. Angell James.

APRIL 19.—JOHN XIII.

v. 10.—"He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet."—Two cleansings are here indicated, one final and complete in itself, the other continual and growing in its application. In justification we obtain through the blood of Jesus a perfect standing, and are once for all "accepted in the Beloved," we are "bathed" (for so is the Greek here), completely covered, that is, by his grace and righteousness, nothing more needed to give us a place among "his own." But thenceforth we need daily cleansing for the life, as those who walk in a sin-stained world. The justified must be sanctified, and their sanctification as well as their justification must come through the cleansing power of Christ (1 John i. 6, 7).

v. 15.—"I have given you an example."—This act was designed to foster among them the spirit that should keep their strength from being wasted in internal strifes, and bind them in a strong, united brotherhood. It was by brotherly counsel and united prayer that their work was to be carried on. While that spirit ruled among them all would be well; but if they should begin to aim at lordly pre-eminence, and seats of distinction, the very heart would be torn out of the body. By all the memories of that Upper Chamber, by all the associations of that Holy Supper, let there prevail among us habitual watchfulness against strife and bitterness, and an earnest endeavour to live and love as brethren.—Dr. Blaikie.

v. 31.—"Now is the Son of Man glorified."—It is instructive to note how continually in this Gospel the Lord refers to the triumphant and divine aspect of his sufferings, rather than to the sorrowful and human, as in the other Gospels. Here He is on the eve of his deepest woe, yet does He speak of that hour as one of glory and victory over all his foes. As the strong Son of God, He already anticipates the certain issue of his sore travail as the Son of Man. See also chap. xii. 23, xvii. 1, 4. In view of the Cross He anticipates the Crown.

APRIL 20.—JOHN XIV.

v. 1.—"Ye believe in God, believe also in Me."—Believe in Me in like manner as ye believe in God. When the storm rages you believe that it will soon be calm again, for you believe in a God that rides upon the wind and governs in the storm. Believe that in my government of the Church, I have the same power as my Father has in the government of the world. Lean upon Me as you lean upon the Father, and you will say, as they said of old, "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in time of trouble."—Dr. Blaikie.

v. 9.—"Have I been so long time with you. . . ?" —How many of us stand on the same spot that we did when first we were Christians. We are like the Indians who could only gather the ore that happened to lie upon the surface, or could be washed out of the sands of the river. In this great Christ there are depths of gold, great reefs and veins of it, that will enrich us all if we dig, and we shall not get it unless we do. He is the boundless ocean. We have contented ourselves with coasting along the shore, and making timid excursions from one headland to another. Let us strike out into the middle deep, and see all the wonders that are there. So we shall be filled unto all the fulness of God, and not need to ask for any other vision of the Father beyond the all-sufficing sight of God in Christ.—Dr. A. Maclaren.

v. 12.—"Greater works than these shall ye do."—His going to the Father was to bring in a dispensation not of less but of greater power. The ladder between earth and heaven of which He had spoken to Nathanael, was to be a more wonderful medium than ever for the angels of God to ascend and descend.—Ibid.

APRIL 21.—JOHN XV.

v. 5.—"Without Me ye can do nothing."—The habits of grace, the actings of grace, and the perfecting of grace, are all from Jesus Christ. He does not say, "Without Me ye cannot do many things," or "no great thing," or "no difficult thing," or "no spiritual thing," but "without Me ye can do nothing." Whatever a saint may do by the power of gifts, or habits of grace, yet he can do nothing in a lively, spiritual, or acceptable way without the presence of Christ, without a constant dependence on Christ, without a sweet and special communion and fellowship with Christ.—Brooks.

v. 10.—"If ye keep my commandments, ye shall." —We have heard a good deal in these later years of full surrender and entire consecration, and thousands praise God for all the blessing He has given them through these words. Only let us beware that we be not led too much in connection with them to seek for a blessed experience to be enjoyed, or a state to be maintained, while the simple downright doing of God's will to which they point is overlooked. Let us take hold of and use this word which God loves to use—obedience. It was the meek and lowly obedience of Christ, as of a Servant and a Son, that made his sacrifice such a sweet-smelling savour. It is humble, childlike obedience, first hearkening gently to the Father's voice, and then doing that which is right in His sight that will bring us the witness that we please Him. Dear reader, shall not this be our life? so simple and sublime, obeying Jesus and abiding in his love.—Andrew Murray.

v. 16.—"Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you."—The first ministers of the Gospel were the choice of Jesus Christ; no wonder, then, that they were so successful. Those whom men have since sent, without the appointment of God, have done no good. The choice should still continue with God, who, knowing the heart, knows best who is most proper for the Gospel ministry.—Dr. Adam Clarke.

APRIL 22.—JOHN XVI.

vv. 8-11.—"When He is come, He will reprove. . . ."—We have heard much in these chapters of the work of the Divine Spirit in the Church; here we are taught as to his operations in the world. He will reprove (rather "convince") of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment. Conviction is essential to conversion, both are the work of the Spirit. First is the conviction of sin, the great sin of unbelief as to the person and work of Christ; Christ is the test for every man, and faith in Him the turning point of human destiny. Next is the conviction of righteousness, i.e., of Christ's righteousness, which is manifested by his acceptance at the Father's right hand, and by means of which alone the sinner who trusts in Him can be justified and forgiven. Then of judgment, i.e., the judgment of Satan as the Prince of this world; all his power has been taken away, and sentence pronounced upon him and all his works by the work of Christ (see chap. xii. 31). This conviction graciously wrought now in the heart, and made the ground of full reliance on Christ, is salvation; but whether so received now or not must ultimately come to every heart, proving to the finally impenitent the death-knell of doom, the sure and certain evidence of deserved condemnation.

vv. 23-26.—"In that day ye shall ask in my name." —"In that day" does not mean in a future day, but in one that is come. Instead of using Christ's intervention as Martha proposed (chap. xi. 22), instead of begging Christ to ask the Father, demanding each thing they needed of Christ Himself, they might reckon on the Father's giving them whatsoever they should ask Him in Christ's name. It is not a question of a Messianic link to get what they wanted, but they would be able to ask the Father in his name themselves. How blessed to know the Father thus hearkening to the children asking in the Son's name! It is of children on earth now the Lord speaks, not of the Father's house by and by. Evidently this is a capital truth, bearing powerfully on the nature of the Christian's prayers, as well as on his worship.—Kelly.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most important that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away].

LEICESTER.—The Congregational churches here have set apart a Sunday as "Lay Preachers' Sunday." Services were held in which lay preaching and lay preachers were commended to the prayers and sympathy of the people; and at several of the services lay preachers spoke. This idea should be taken up in other districts. Organised lay agency, in vital connection with our churches, is one of the demands of our time. Town churches must win the villages and hamlets for Christ, by finding out how to use the varied gifts of their members.—Sunday School Chronicle.

Mission and other Appeals.

Seaford Convalescent Hospital.—An appeal is made on behalf of this institution, which has done good service during the past twenty years. At the present crisis of its history, further public support is greatly needed. Secretary, Mr. H. Green, 36, Southampton-street, Strand, W.C.

The Dwellings of the People.—An appeal is made by the Mansion House Council on the Dwellings of the People, for pecuniary help in furthering the work they have undertaken. Details may be found in a circular issued by Mr. John Hamer, Hon. Sec., 3, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.

Evangelical Mission to Israel.—Mr. T. Miller, who has voluntarily laboured with Mr. D. Joseph in this Mission for ten years, makes an urgent appeal to Gentile Christians for help in connection with the work. We believe Mr. Joseph is doing good service, according to the means at his disposal, in relieving poor Jews, and carrying to them the message of the Gospel, and we cordially endorse Mr. Miller's appeal. Mr. Joseph's address is 394, Hackney-road, E.

Christian Union Hall, Cawnpoor.—Thanking you for securing one pound for us, I am obliged to come again to solicit your aid in behalf of "The Christian Union Hall" We require £210 in all, and of this sum we have by God's help raised £52. Can our brethren in England help us? We have now some sixty members, and daily prayer and praise go up from many, and especially soldier brethren, for whom it is a Home. Lord Radstock and the Hon. Mr. Waldegrave have worked here, and will bear testimony to the good done. —Yours sincerely, Arthur Foy, Superintendent Christian Union, Cawnpoor, India.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday Morning, April 11, 1885.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O. Orders payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

Give the Children a Chance for Life!

Our overcrowded English cities teem with young life needing to be transplanted if it is to be saved from ruin.

Our Colonies require, more than anything else, to be replenished by the importation of boys and girls, carefully trained in industrious and virtuous ways.

Will the readers of "The Christian" encourage us to persevere in the work of rescuing, training, and emigrating destitute and orphan little ones?

£8 - 10 - 0 will pay the entire cost of outfit, passage-money, &c., for one boy or girl emigrated to Canada, and thereby in all probability saved from untold perils.

153 Trained Boys left Liverpool THURSDAY, MARCH 26, for our Canadian Home.

350 others, girls and boys, will (D.V.) leave before August next.

£102 will defray all expenses for 12 children.

Or £8 - 10 - 0 will pay for one.

Who will help, and help quickly?

Please reply to Dr. T. J. BARNARDO,

18 & 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

"AN EXCELLENT TEXT-BOOK FOR BIBLE CLASSES."—Sabbath School Magazine.

The Number "SEVEN" in Scripture.

COMPILED BY

S. A. BLACKWOOD, C.B.

AUTHOR OF

"The Shadow and the Substance" "Forgiveness, Life, and Glory," &c., &c.

Tinted Covers, 1/; Limp Cloth, 1/6; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2/6.

"From Genesis i. to Revelation xxii., all the many times the word occurs are duly noted; and each book is dealt with seriatim, so that reference is easy. We hope Mr. Blackwood will add a similar treatise on the numbers three, twelve, and forty."—The Rock.

"A very complete and well-arranged manual."

The Baptist.

"A little book which can scarcely fail to interest the Biblical Student, illustrating as it does the use which is made of the number seven in the sacred volume."

Publishers' Circular.

"This compilation is both curious and instructive. It is quite remarkable how frequently the number seven occurs in the Old and New Testaments; and in a recent consecutive study of the Scriptures, Mr. Blackwood has noted down, not only isolated cases, but groups of instances; and he publishes them to stimulate further search, and to arouse inquiry. . . . One great want of the day is revived attention to the secret searching and study of Holy Scripture."

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE.

(UNABRIDGED).

The special features of this Edition are the NEW TRANSLATION, Revision, and Extension of the PROPER NAMES OF THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS, with their meanings in the Original Languages. The Twelve following exquisite Steel Plate Engravings:—

Samaria.
Elisha's Fountain, Jericho.
Rephidim.
Damascus.
Mount Tabor.
Tyre.
Hebron.
Jerusalem from the South.
Shechem—Sychar.
Tiberias.
Bethany.
Athens.

And Six beautifully-coloured Maps.

The Rev. J. L. Porter, D.D., Professor of Biblical Criticism, speaking of the Steel Plate Engravings, says:—

"I have examined with care the views for Biblical Illustration. . . . The Engravings are very beautiful. In clearness, accuracy, and general effect, they surpass, I think, any I have seen. The places represented are all familiar to me; and I have been particularly struck by the fidelity with which your artist has reproduced Frith's admirable photographs."—J. L. Porter.

"It is beautifully got up, carefully edited, and all has been done to make the work as useful as possible. Every Christian home ought to have a copy.—Oldham Chronicle.

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS.

A Complete and Authentic Account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of Primitive and Protestant Martyrs in all parts of the World.

By John Foxe.

WITH TWELVE FULL-PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS.

"As a complete edition of Foxe's Martyrs, this is by far the handiest and most attractive we know. In paper, type, illustrations, and binding, the book does great credit to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, to whom the Christian public are indebted for this timely publication."—Primitive Methodist.

"Messrs. Morgan & Scott have just published a new edition of Foxe's Book of Martyrs, which deserves a word of greeting. The present edition extends far beyond Foxe's times; having been enriched by the Rev. J. Milner and others; and brought down to the present century by the Rev. Ingram Cobbin. Altogether it is a cheap and complete Book of Martyrs, well printed and elegantly bound; and suitable for a gift-book."

Record.

"We cannot but express the desire that the circulation of this volume may be as extensive as its merit so well demands. It is elegant in the upgetting; and paper and print are a credit to its enterprising publishers."

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of a LITTLE GIRL at BARROW.

Mr. F. L., writing me about two-and-a-half years since, says:—"I take a particular interest in reading your cases every week, beside which I have known your medicine for many years." He then describes his daughter's case as being subject to attacks of bronchitis and inflammation, exceedingly susceptible to colds, with almost constant cough.

The result of a regular use of the medicine with liniment for three months was that there was general improvement. The father writes:—"She had a slight attack of bronchitis; but shook it off much sooner than ever before. She has gained flesh. I recommend your medicine all that I can." In the following March, notwithstanding the severe winds, she continued "pretty well."

The correspondence continued till the last letter, dated October 7 (last), in which Mr. L. says:—"Our little girl is quite well, and has commenced school. She is stouter now, and appetite good." In ordering a supply of several large bottles for his own family and friends, Mr. L. adds:—"We find your treatment the best cure for any colds and coughs, and, in fact, for all throat and chest complaints."

The lip of truth.
The lip of wisdom.

THE FEET:
Walking in God's ways.
Walking circumspectly.
Walking perseveringly.

"It is a prettily printed manual, compiled by the worthy incumbent of Christ Church, Pau. He justly as well as quaintly claims three P's as descriptive of his purpose. He intended to be personal, particular, and practical. And he has certainly succeeded. He starts from the fact that we are saved for service; and his suggestions are founded on the certainty that He who has saved us will help us to serve. Busy folk will find here a thought for every day connected with the service of the body. Each week is devoted to a particular part; beginning with the heart and ending with the feet. The compendium has, it will be perceived, a distinct character of its own; and those who use it can hardly fail to find it edifying."

OFFICE: THE BOYS' HOME, 95, SOUTHWARK STREET, LONDON, S.E.

DEAR FRIENDS,

The time draws near when it is desired I should leave for Canada with 100 emigrant boys, and personally see them settled in their future homes, and also make permanent arrangements for the careful supervision of those already placed out, and the judicious selection of situations for those who are to follow—duties which have been temporarily undertaken by kind Christian friends in the Dominion.

Our Emigration Council have selected Mr. and Mrs. Brace—who have been well known for the last nine years in connection with the Lord's work at the Coffee-Rooms, Dorking—to act as our representatives across the Atlantic.

We have £800 towards the £1000 needed for the expenses of the boys. The average cost for the rail and ocean fares, outfit, &c., of each boy is

This sum provides a really good warm outfit (expressly manufactured to our order to suit the climate), and repays the expense of the journey of the elder boys to Manitoba—about 1300 miles beyond Toronto. Any friends who are interested in the details of these matters are invited to inspect a specimen outfit at our office any day after Monday, May 4.

Will not some friends, by a gift of £10, secure the gratifying reflection that they have been enabled to put one of "Nobody's Boys" in a comfortable Canadian homestead? The smallest contribution towards the £200 required for the comfortable dispatch of this band will be very gratefully received. How many readers will give, say 5s., as a little token of Christian sympathy in these efforts?

Yours faithfully,

J. W. C. Fegan

GEORGE YARD RAGGED SCHOOLS, &c., Whitechapel, E.

Received with many thanks, a Parcel from A. O. B.

D.V., The Thirty-First Annual Meeting will be held on Monday evening, April 27, in the Large Room, George-yard, High-street, Whitechapel, E.

The Right Hon. The Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G., will preside.

Doors open at seven o'clock.

George Holland will gladly forward tickets to any friends requiring them

There are more than 30 missionary agencies in operation. The weekly attendances of Children, Young Persons and Adults, exceed 6,000.

Friends are invited to visit this Institution any day but Saturday.

LAMB AND FLAG RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION,

10, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

The many calls daily made on Christian benevolence have for some years kept me silent, but the time has now come when I must ask for help.

Larger premises are absolutely required for the increased work of this School and Mission, and I cannot, without making the facts known, continue to turn away from our doors the many boys and girls who are eagerly seeking admission, at the dangerous age of 14 and upwards. Will some of those who are blessed with means help me to raise £1,500? This would provide the accommodation needed to gather in the wanderers.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged School has taken for the sixth year consecutively, the largest number of prizes for long service and good conduct at the hands of the Ragged School Union.

Contributions will be thankfully received by J. C. Sherrard, Hon. Director and Treasurer, 7, Oxford-square, Hyde-park.

ZENANA AND MEDICAL MISSION. School and Home, 58, St. George's-road, S.W. Christian ladies trained for Foreign Medical Mission Work, by two years' curriculum. Ladies so desirous may attend midwifery alone. Dr. Griffith, Hon. Sec. Treasurer, G. J. Green, Esq., L. and C. Bank, 3, Victoria-street, S.W.

Funds urgently needed.

SAILORS' REST AID SOCIETY.—Rests for Naples, Messina, Pozzuoli, &c. Mission ship for Mediterranean. Seamen's Gospel Temperance League. Treasurer, J. S. Alexander, Esq., Ashfield, Leominster; or office of The Christian.

THE BENEVOLENT OR STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Treasurer, Alderman R. N. Fowler, M.P. (Ex-Lord Mayor); J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman; Mr. Ex-Sheriff Clarence Smith, Hon. Secretary.

For ninety-nine years this Institution has visited and relieved the destitute sick, by an entirely unpaid agency, consisting of over 280 Christian men and women. Many sad cases have constantly to be passed over from want of funds.

The Committee will be thankful for the Society being remembered in the testamentary arrangements of the benevolent.—Office of the Society, 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

GREAT COLEMAN'S. — Gentlefolk of limited means needing change and rest, will find all advantages of a gentleman's country house. Drives given. Terms 21s. per week, inclusive. For particulars apply to

Mrs. Griffith, 45, Finsbury-square, E.C.

CRIPPLED BOYS' HOME, Kensington, W.—Instituted in 1865 to feed, clothe, educate on Christian principles, and teach a trade to crippled boys between 12 and 18 years of age. 80 boys now in the Home; accommodation for 100, if funds allowed. Several candidates waiting admission. Funds urgently needed.

H. R. Knipe, Hon. Sec.

RESCUE WORK IN POPLAR.—Manor Cottage, Kerbey-street, Poplar, E. Founded by Mrs. Wilkes, 1878. Treasurer, Henry Green, Esq., Blackwall, E. Miss Cooke, 68, Mildmay-park, will also receive contributions for this work of mercy. Mrs. Wilkes at home Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays, to see friends and give information respecting this effort to seek and save the lost.

TO CHRISTIAN WORKERS.—Fox-court Ragged School and Mission, Gray's-inn-road, a few doors from Holborn. Teachers urgently needed for the Sunday evening boys and girls' schools; also for the week-night classes.—A report and all needed information will be gladly sent upon application to the Hon. Secretary, Thomas Fagg, 136, Pentonville-road, N.

THE COMMITTEE of the Ladies' Samaritan Society of the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, 25, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, earnestly plead for contributions in aid of the poorer patients and their families. The smallest gifts in money or clothing will be thankfully acknowledged by the Committee

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

Instituted 1772.
Patron: THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.G.
President: G. WILLIAMS, ESQ.
Vice-Presidents: A. PEASE, ESQ., M.P., S. D. WADDY, ESQ., M.P., Q.C., and J. H. GLADSTONE, ESQ., Ph.D., F.R.S., &c.
Treasurer: F. A. BEVAN, ESQ. Honorary Secretary: THE REV. W. TYLER.

This, the oldest of all the evangelistic societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night, and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or the Editors of The Christian.

JAMES ATKINSON, Secretary.

Under the Special Patronage of H.R.H. the Duchess of Connaught and Strathearne and H.R.H. the Duchess of Teck.

THE ANNUAL UNITED SALE OF WORK from Benevolent Institutions in connection with the SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING FEMALE WELFARE (President, the Lady Gertrude Foljambe) will be held (D.V.) on Wednesday and Thursday, the 29th and 30th of April, at the Duke of Wellington's Riding School, Knightsbridge. The Sale will be opened by the Countess of Aberdeen at 12 o'clock. Admission, Wednesday, 2s. 6d.; Thursday, 1s. Children half-price.

THE CHRISTIAN, JAN. 15, contained a letter describing the work being carried on amongst Christian workers in East London by the Bethnal-green Free Library, and stating that £250 was needed to continue the winter's work, &c. In response, about £150 have been received, and the Committee most earnestly ask for further aid, which will be received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

LONDON FEMALE PENITENTIARY, 191, High-street, Stoke Newington, N. (Founded at Pentonville). This Institution has been for 78 years sheltering the unfortunate, mitigating their sorrows, and by means of religious instruction and industrial training fitting them to occupy positions of usefulness. Never was such a charity more needed. Present number of inmates 70. The Committee being in want of funds, earnestly plead for help. Contributions, however small, will be thankfully received by Barclay, Bevan & Co., Bankers, 54, Lombard-street; the Office of "The Christian;" and at the above Institution.—W. E. Page, Secretary.

ANXIETY OF SOUL.—Any to whom the way of salvation is not clear, are invited to communicate, either personally or by letter, to W. S., care of Evangelistic Secretary, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

REDUCED GENTLEWOMEN.

THE Christian Public is aware by this time of the lamented death of my beloved sister, Julia Corke, the originator of the effort to establish the LUTHER MEMORIAL HOME, to grant rent-free rooms to the above class.

It is earnestly hoped and believed that this needed work may still be accomplished, that Christian Workers will take it up, and by their prayers, sympathy, and exertions to raise funds, to add to the £200 already subscribed, strengthen the hands of the Treasurer (Miss Julia Fox, 54, Kensington Park-road, Ladbroke-square, Bayswater) and of myself, who, having worked in the cause from its commencement, will gladly take up this legacy of my beloved sister.

Funds continue to come in which bereavement has prevented my acknowledging as yet. Thanks for all. Cards for Collecting Shillings will be gratefully supplied, and Contributions thankfully received by the Treasurer, or by—

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.
Established 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

THE PSALMS OF JUDGMENT.

THE revelation of God in Christ, as the Fountain of Grace, overflowing in streams of mercy to men, possesses for our minds so powerful an attraction, and is, moreover, so perfectly adapted to our condition of helplessness and guilt, that no one can wonder much if other less tender aspects of the Divine character are viewed with little sympathy, if not wholly rejected as articles of faith.

I have sometimes considered the throne of God, as presented in the words of Psalm lxxxix. 14, as high and lifted up upon the four pillars—Justice, Judgment, Truth, and Mercy—and fancied that I stood watching while a number of curious visitors inspected the wonderful structure and commented upon the relative merits of the parts. And, first, they view the column Mercy. Its beauty and grace are unanimously commended. Not a voice is raised to question its fitness as a basis for the throne of the King. Its quality has been the theme of our greatest poet, and commends it to the sense of all the King's subjects.

Next comes the column Truth. This, too, is admired: not so warmly as the first, it is true, but yet on the whole it is pronounced good and fitting. That the King should keep his word is admitted to be an element essential to the value of his mercy. Each is necessary to the other. No doubt truth in the character of the King, if it be too unqualified and too rigid, may have some unpleasant consequences for offenders; for if He be ever unchangeably true to his promises, there may be danger of his being true also to his threats, which would be terrible to contemplate. But let this pass. The absence of the pillar Truth might on the whole be worse for us than its presence, and let us hope that Mercy may so qualify and soften it as to render it harmless.

Next in order, the column Justice comes under examination, and draws out much surprise and keen criticism. From the first its shape, form, and proportions are found unpleasing. It is too high, too solid, too severe, too plain, too angular; not graceful, not beautiful, or at least not suitable for its position beneath the throne of the God of sinners. Besides, it does not correspond with the first of the pillars. It is a different style of architecture. It is quite out of place. Some mistake has occurred. It is insufferable that such anomalies should be introduced into a structure where all should be harmonious, and all should be adapted to the views of the subject, not merely to those of the King. In fine, the spectators condemn the pillar unanimously, as unfitted for its position, however much may be said as to the correctness of its proportions theoretically.

Lastly, the company moves round to the fourth column, Judgment, but it must be confessed with little predisposition for approving it, so deeply have their feelings been wounded by the last discovery. And now they are at first dumb-stricken—to be face to face with the pillar of Judgment in the King's throne. Words cannot utter their dismay. To be so rudely disturbed from dreams of universal mercy by this revelation is too much for mortal man. Judgment! What! a throne founded upon Judgment? That may suit earthly sovereigns, ruling their subjects with rigour for their rebellion, executing vengeance on their enemies, punishing with banishment, servitude, or death, the lawless and criminal. Possibly kingdoms would fall which failed so to do. Possibly thrones would totter were crime unjudged and criminals unpunished. Judgment is very well on earth, among men. But that God should adopt such a principle in government is incredible. The pillar must come down. The architect must be reprimanded. Fetch men to work with the pickaxe and shovel of criticism, with the powder and dynamite of blasphemy, but let not a moment be wasted in destroying such a hideous monstrosity, such an outrage on nineteenth century notions. This is their instant and indignant demand as the visitors turn disgusted away.

But as they go I notice the guide approach and thus reprove their impetuosity: "Gentle sirs, you approve the column 'Mercy' in the front, but doubt the wisdom of placing 'Truth' so near it. Can you not see that mercy without truth would afford no security to man, for the promise might be broken, or the temper of the King might change, but God's truth secures the operation of his mercy?

"Again, you question the fitness of Justice as a foundation for this structure. But it is manifest that truth and justice are twin sisters. A character of truth cannot be devoid of justice. For justice is simply truth in the field of government. Therefore the three pillars are congenial and mutually dependent. And as for Judgment, which you desire to overthrow, justice without judgment would be a mere name, a word, a shadow. Judgment is the executor of justice, it enforces her decrees. A court of justice without a prison of judgment would be powerless. Thus the presence of justice as a pillar involves that of judgment, even as the presence of mercy involves that of truth. And, indeed, mercy itself would have no meaning were judgment to be upset. It is the fear of judgment that makes men sue for mercy and value it when given. The throne itself, its stability, security, authority, benefit, and terror, depend upon the four pillars each and all being maintained."

This little parable may serve to illustrate the nature of the complaint against the Psalms of Judgment. Is it not simply the familiar one of the criminal against the law that condemns him? Take, for example, Psalm cix. It is a prophetic Psalm of David, referring, as Peter has told us, to Judas (see Acts i. 16). "Men and brethren, the Scripture must needs be fulfilled which the Holy Ghost by the mouth of David spake before concerning Judas." It cannot, therefore, be charged against David as an utterance of vulgar vindictiveness. It is spoken by the Holy Ghost. It is prophetic of the betrayal by Judas, and the words are the words of the Lord Jesus, invoking woe upon his head. Terrible, indeed, are the twenty-five successive "Lets" and "Let nots" with which is pronounced the condemnation of those who, amid abounding light, love darkness, and in the presence of proffered grace choose wrath. Terrible, too, to think that souls, forewarned by such prophetic imprecations, continue to this day to trample under foot the Son of God, and put Him to an open shame. But can we safely or wisely, because of these terrors, reject them as human inventions? Let us view the matter calmly in two respects—present and prospective.

The fearful comminations of Psalm cix. and others need present no difficulty, as coming from the lips that were full of grace, to those, first, who notice the providential dealings of God in this present day of grace, wherein He occasionally afflicts with each one of these curses those against whom his righteous judgment awakes; and, secondly, to those who believe that the occasional and uncertain punishment of sin in this world will be deepened into certain and eternal punishment hereafter. To such they only prove what spiritual instincts had before taught them—that our Lord's Divine righteousness of soul in condemnation of sin was not for an instant invaded by his love for his persecutors and desire for their salvation. To finite and sin-stricken minds such a combination of characteristics as perfect grace and undiminished justice may seem incompatible, but in God, and especially in Him who, in order to find issue for his boundless, unsearchable love to sinners, was to endure in his own person the full force of the justice of God in judgment against them, the union is intelligible, compatible, and essential.

And here it is worthy of notice that the language of this Psalm cix. indicates, even in its strongest denunciation, the prevailing tone of the Lord's mind of grace and forgiveness. As for example when, in verses 14 and 16, He says, "Let the iniquity of his fathers be remembered with Jehovah, and let not the sin of his mother be blotted out . . . because that he remembered not to show mercy," &c. This is the utterance of one the purpose of whose life and death were that "iniquity" should be "remembered no more," and that "sin" should be "blotted out," and that so definitely and emphatically, that it is needful here to raise a protest, and to except from the operation of the current of mercy which He Himself had, so to speak, released and set flowing in full volume to all around Him, those who should despise the message and conspire to destroy the bearer of it. The words of the 16th and 17th verses, moreover carry our minds forward at once to the warning so often uttered by our Lord in the days of his flesh, "For if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your heavenly Father forgive you your trespasses." "As he loved cursing, so let it come unto him; as he delighted not in blessing, so let it be far from him." The words may differ, the form of utterance may change from prayer to prophecy, from curse to threat, but the sentiment is the same.

What do men mean to suggest when they point to our Lord's prayer upon the cross, "Father, forgive them," and contrast it with these Psalms of David? Will they show that where our Lord was forgiving David was vindictive? Let them take heed of using blasphemies, for who was it who said, "Woe unto that man by whom the Son of Man is betrayed! it had been good for that man if be had not been born" (Matt. xxvi. 24). Could words better be found to condense into a single verse the whole of Psalm cix.?

Was it a sudden access of vindictiveness that drew forth from the well-spring of love the eight woes of Matthew xxiii. against the opponents of Christ's teaching? Oh! let men beware how they reject the counsel of God against themselves! God's "righteous Servant" vindicates that title by words of terrible judgment, no less than He vindicates his name Jesus by words of grace and salvation; and those who deny that the Perfect Man could have pronounced the less awful denunciations of the Psalms should pause, and ask themselves who it was that warned men in language of overwhelming reiteration of the "worm that dieth not," and "the fire that can never be quenched."

But an attempt has been made to sustain the charge of imperfection in these Psalms of David by connecting them with certain acts of his life, notably with that of the sentence on Shimei, in which, as it is alleged, he manifested a spirit of vindictiveness and revenge. Now, nobody will for a moment contend that David's actions were in every case free from blame, or were entirely in accord with his inspired writings. Neither is such an argument necessary in the attempt to defend those writings from charges of imperfection, for otherwise every part of the Old and New Testaments would need to be similarly sustained. God chose to use sinning men as his instruments of communication with the world, and their occasional failures no more affect the truths they taught than the bends in a tube affect the quality of the stream that it conveys.

But in this particular case David is not open to the charge made against him. Intelligently studied, the story of Shimei sustains David's long proved character for generous, forgiving grace; and it shows that he had not, while so acting in accordance with the dictates of his heart, forgotten his duty to the state as its ruler in righteousness.

For when one demanded the death of the traitor because he had cursed Jehovah's anointed in the day of adversity, he refused to allow it (2 Sam xix. 21, 22), thus recalling his repeated successful efforts to protect his arch enemy Saul from the stroke of vengeance; recalling to mind his anger and grief when he found that Abner, the rebel against his throne, had been treacherously killed (2 Sam iii. 28—39). And so Shimei was permitted to enjoy all the liberties of the worthiest in Israel to the end of David's life; lest any should charge him with personal vindictiveness. But at his death, mindful of the evil effect which open rebellion, such as Shimei's if still unpunished, would certainly involve as against the public peace and order, he gave a solemn charge to Solomon to execute righteous judgment against him. Thus with more than human wisdom was David guided by the Divine Spirit how to manifest personal grace, and yet not to sacrifice governmental righteousness.

In a word, this very incident in David's history, instead of constituting an argument against him for lack of grace, becomes the key when rightly handled to solve the apparent discrepancy between the psalms of grace and the psalms of malediction, between the blessings and the woes uttered by Jesus Christ, and between his offers of universal pardon to believers and his threats of eternal punishment against the rejecters of grace.

If those who resent the painful side of truth presented in these Scriptures would pray God by his Spirit to unfold to them the meaning of the words, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for therein is the righteousness of God revealed," they would perhaps cease to question the harmony, the unity, of all the Word of God.

Righteousness is the foundation of the throne. Only in the sacrificial satisfaction of righteousness can any Gospel of Christ be published, and failing man's consent to come to terms on the basis of righteousness victorious in the Cross, he must inevitably fall under the terrible sentence of righteousness victorious outside the Cross. God's nature requires it. God's throne demands it. God would not be God were it otherwise.

ILLUSTRATED THEOLOGY.

THE FALSE AND THE TRUE CONTRASTED.

I.—Concerning the Holy Spirit.

THE words, "Grieve not the Holy Spirit," test our thoughts respecting the Gracious Comforter very thoroughly. These thoughts are false or true, very much as this precept is hard or easy, forbidding or kindly. The very simple illustrations following will explain my meaning:—

(1) The False.—A little girl is just about to start on a long railway journey. She is in the care of a lady who has only lately entered the family as a governess, and who is still somewhat dreaded by the child as a stranger. Just before they leave the station, the little girl's father, who has come down to see them start, bids her farewell. "Good-bye, dear," he says; "see that you are a good girl, for Miss ——," glancing at the new governess—"is very particular, and easily offended. Take good care that you don't grieve her." These unwise words bear evil fruit, wakening fears in that child's heart which seem to her to darken all her future. It is dreadful, she thinks, to be entirely in the charge of one who is quick to see a fault, and as quick to reprove it. How she hates to remember those parting words, "take good care that you don't grieve her."

Are there not many who shrink from the precept, "Grieve not the Holy Spirit," with a similar feeling? Forgetting that holiness is love as well as purity—love that compassionates and forbears, that gently fans the smoking flax, and makes much of our weak, childish attempts at loving service—they think of the Holy Spirit only as a Being easily offended, and hard to be won. The command, "Grieve not the Holy Spirit," only reminds them of his hatred of sin. Of "the love of the Spirit" they know nothing. Accordingly, the command seems hard and forbidding.

(2) The True.—Another father went down to the same train that day on a similar errand. His little girl was also going a long journey; but in this case the child's companion is her mother—a wise, cultured, Christian mother, who had won all her daughter's love, and trust and admiration. "Good-bye, dear," says the father, as the train is about to move; "you'll be a good girl, won't you? For if you behave badly you'll grieve your mother." "Oh, father, I couldn't grieve mother! I'd rather do anything than that."

There are men and women among us who know God the Holy Ghost, as this child knew her mother, and to them the words, "Grieve not the Holy Spirit," are full of a tender, constraining power. So well do they know his love, so real and vivifying are his comforts, that it would be a keen sorrow to them to grieve Him.

May we each one be made wise to attain to such bright, true thoughts of the loving Spirit, that our fear of grieving Him may no more be the dark oppression of dread, but the strong, tender fear of trustful love.

II.—Concerning our Father's Care.

(1) The False.—A visitor in a certain family proposes to take the little boy—the only child of the family—with him for a walk. "I'll take good care of him, and bring him safe home," he says, meaning what he says. But, alas! his idea of what taking good care implies is defective. So long as he keeps him from tumbling into the ditch, or over the cliff, and guards him from dangerous cattle or wild, savage dogs, and brings him home at last, he thinks he has done his part right well. He quite forgets that what may be an easy pace for his larger step may be a very distressing one to the little man at his side; also that stones and trifling roughnesses, that are nothing to him, may prove a great annoyance to the child. To make matters worse, he is a botanist. His mind is too much occupied with various plants that make green the hedgerows, to have any words to spare for the boy, who, consequently, finds the walk very dull and tiresome. Little wonder that long before they get home he is wretched, and tired, and cross. The visitor has kept his word, as he understood it. He has guarded him from the ditch and the cliff, the cattle and the dogs, and brought him safe home again. Nevertheless, the child had a very bad time of it while under his care.

I will venture to ask you, my reader, if the above does not remind you of certain ideas you have sometimes entertained of the Great Father's care. You have thought of Him as pledged to bring you safe home at last; also to carry you through the greater perils of the journey—those of which the ditch and the cliff, the cattle and the dogs, are symbols. But you never really expected Him to cheer you with his converse, to suit his pace to yours, or to take careful heed to all the smaller difficulties of the way. According to your faith so has He been to you. We marvel not if you complain of the stress and weariness of life, and sigh often for the home-going.

(2) The True.—Next day the boy's father takes him out, and his idea of care goes very far beyond providing for safety only. His is the large generous care of true Parenthood, which concerns itself with everything (no matter how small) that affects the child's comfort and well-being. He condescends to the child's thoughts, entertaining him with bright and healthy talk. He is most careful to suit his pace to the child's. He never fails, too, to observe the roughnesses of the way, and the little stones that sometimes are so troublesome to little feet.

Does the above illustration express your real idea of the Father? Do you love to think of Him as taking heed to the little stones in your pathway? If thus you think of Him, then thus you will find Him. According to your faith, will He be to you.

"Blessed is the people that know the joyful sound: they shall walk, O Lord, in the light of thy countenance. In thy name shall they rejoice all the day."

NOTES ON THE SCRIPTURE UNION READINGS.

APRIL 23.—PSALM XXII. 1–18.

v. 11.—"Be not far from me, for trouble is near."—This psalm is full of Christ; the part of it we read to-day sets forth his sufferings on the cross when "He died for our sins." The first verse contains words used by our Lord when He was in his deepest woe (Matt. xxvii. 46). The eighth verse forms the very taunt his cruel foes flung at Him as they mocked and reviled Him (Matt. xxvii. 43). Verse 18 was fulfilled when the soldiers cast lots for his seamless robe (John xix. 23). The whole portion reminds us of the heavy load Jesus bore for us, and the heaviest part of it all was when the comforting presence of God was withdrawn from Him. The presence of God makes even heavy burdens light; we can do all things when He strengthens us, and is near to us, but if God is absent we are weak indeed. But He is always near to those who call upon Him. None ever seek his face in vain who seek through the Saviour's name.

APRIL 24.—PSALM XXII. 19–31.

v. 26.—"The meek shall eat and be satisfied."—The first part of this Psalm told of "the sufferings of Christ;" this tells "of the glory that should follow" (1 Peter i. 2). His prayer was heard, and, raised from the dead, the blessed Redeemer is now exalted high at God's right hand, able to save all who come unto God by Him, and destined to reign for ever as "the King of kings and Lord of lords." What a precious promise the motto for to-day gives us, if we are among those who are "meek and lowly in heart," as Jesus was. The feast of his love is spread for them, and they shall be like Naphtali of old, "satisfied with favour."

APRIL 25.—PSALM XXIII.

v. 6.—"Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me."—David in his early life had been a shepherd, having the care of his father's sheep on the plains of Bethlehem. In 1 Samuel xvii. 34—37, you read how he risked his own life in defending the lambs of the fold from a lion and a bear. In this he was a type of Jesus, "the Good Shepherd," who gave his life for the sheep, and who, in love to "his own," watches over and provides for them continually (John x. 11—15). How blessed a lot is theirs who are among the lambs of Jesus; "goodness and mercy," the two sweetest attributes of God, shall follow them all their days, and then when life below is ended, they shall "dwell in the house of the Lord for ever." Is Jesus your Shepherd, if not, hasten to his fold. He is seeking the lost and wandering sheep; He is seeking you (Matt. xviii. 12—14).

APRIL 26.—PSALM XXIV. 1–10.

v. 3—"Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord?"—If you would go to heaven you must have your sins forgiven, and your hearts made new and good. There is only One who can do this for you. That One is the Lord Jesus Christ. He can wash away your sins in his own precious blood. He can make your hearts new by putting the Holy Spirit in them. He is the Way and the Door into heaven. He has the keys in his hand. Ask Jesus in prayer to get ready a place for you in that world where there is no sorrow. Ask Him to put your name in his book of life. Ask him to cleanse you from all your sin, and to put the Holy Ghost in your heart. Ask Him to give you power to fight his battle against sin, the world, and the devil. Jesus Christ is ready to do all this if you will only ask Him.—Bishop Ryle.

APRIL 27.—PSALM XXV. 1–11.

v. 1.—"Unto Thee, O Lord, do I lift up my soul."

Some look to man for strength and aid
When faith is weak, and heart afraid,
Yet find that in their day of need
They lean upon a broken reed—
A treacherous staff. But blest is he Who leans, Almighty God, on Thee.

The house built firmly on a rock
Fears not the raging tempest's shock;
So they whose faith, and hope, and love,
Are fixed on Christ and things above,
Remain unmoved,—and blest is he,
Whose help is found, O God, in Thee.
—L. Squire.

APRIL 28.—PSALM XXV. 12–22.

v. 15.—"Mine eyes are ever toward the Lord, for . . ."—These words remind us of Heb. xii. 1, 2, where we are told to "run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus." Many snares are laid for our feet, and many a net spread by the enemy to catch us, and bring us to destruction. The only way to escape them is to have our eyes always fixed on Jesus. He can and will save us from the fowler's snare. Dr. Watts says, of those who do this:—

"Just as a hen protects her brood,
From birds of prey who seek their blood,
Under her feathers; so the Lord
Makes his own arm his people's guard."

APRIL 29.—PSALM XXVI. 1–12.

v. 2.—"Examine me, O Lord, and prove me; try my reins and my heart."—David is said to have been a man after God's own heart, and one great reason for this is because he was thoroughly sincere, and made it his chief concern to have his heart right with God. This was why the Lord chose him to be king, as you will see if you read 1 Sam. xvi. 7. You have the proof of his thorough uprightness toward God in the fact that "his reins," that is, his thoughts, were continually directed to God's word and ways, while his heart, his affection, was fixed also on God. Read Psa. cxix. 9—11, also xviii. 1, cxvi. 1. Being really in earnest and truly desirous to keep God's way, he could ask the Lord to examine and prove him. God does do this for all of us, as he did for Israel (Deut. viii. 2). Oh, how earnestly we should seek to have our hearts right with Him.

TWO PICTURES.

At the Bristol Fine Arts Academy there are shown two very beautiful but forcible pictures. The first represents a lamb cut off from the shepherd's snug fold by floods of water. A river flowing by has risen by the heavy rains, and has spread over all the lowlands. The solitary lamb is standing on a mound of dry grassy earth, which is slightly higher than the surrounding land. The little thing stands there like some daring boy who has gone down too far to the sea, when the tide has come quietly in, crept all around him, and left him desponding and without any hope of escape. The sheep in the picture is all alone, surrounded by a waste of wild waters, crying for help in vain. There is a cottage in the background, but there seems to be no life in or about it. The evening has come on, too, and the red sun is sinking fast, and leaving in the west a fiery light behind him. Altogether it looks a most dreary, dismal outlook for the poor sheep.

Not far from this picture hangs another, where Jesus is seen with a smiling face carrying two little lambs in his arms. They seem very peaceful and contented as they look up in the face of Him who lovingly bears them. We looked upon the pictures with mingled thoughts. We thought of the lambs whom Jesus carries in his bosom, of those who are safe in the Great Shepherd's fold. We thought, too, of the little sheep who are away from the Shepherd's fold and care, and who are standing all helpless and alone amidst the dark, cruel waters of sin.

What a sad thought, that there are some children who are not in Jesus' fold; it is sad, because in the midst of their want and danger they do not realise the love and care and kindness of the Good Shepherd. The lonely sheep on the flooded moor is in want and in great danger. The lambs which rest so peacefully and contentedly in the Saviour's arms have all their wants satisfied, for the Lord is their Shepherd, and "they shall not want." If you are not "safe in the arms of Jesus," ask Him to take you up out of danger and want. He is looking down upon you and waiting to bless you. The old prophet has said, "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd: He shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom."

For hearing before judging.
For thinking before speaking.
For holding an angry tongue.
For stopping the ear to a tattler.
For being kind to the distressed.
For being patient to all.
For asking pardon for wrong.
For speaking evil of no man.
For being courteous to all.

BIBLE DOUBLE ACROSTIC.

Initials—In Scriptures old, these utterances, with wisdom rare, abound.

Finals—Instruction from the Scriptures new, in plenty here is found.

(1) He to a man of high estate
Explained what ancient seers relate.

(2) The joyful news, with accents glad,
She tells to those who think her mad.

(3) A place for precious metal famed.

(4) One of ten sons in Scripture named.

(5) Though tall of form, and fair of face,
'Twas not his lot the throne to grace.

(6) Herein the Lord his people blames,
The king condemns it to the flames.

(7) The Church on earth this title bears
Until her Lord again appears.

(8) Musicians skilled, in ancient days,
Employed these instruments in praise.

Rev. W. HAY AITKEN at EATON CHAPEL.

THE mission at Eaton Chapel, Eaton-square, now being held by Rev. W. Hay Aitken, has been marked by great spiritual power. The effectual presence of the Holy Spirit has been most manifestly felt at the morning addresses on the Spiritual Life. They are held each morning at 11.30, and will be continued until the close of the mission. Mr. Aitken has been taking the Blessings on the Tribes, as given in Deut. xxxiii. The thoughts of many hearts have been revealed, as, morning by morning, with wonderful and heart-searching power such as we have rarely experienced, he has dwelt, with an inspired eloquence, on each separate blessing. It has been felt to be a time by many of solemn rebuke to worldliness and unbelief, as well as of grateful consecration and self-surrender.

The evening services have also had God's marked blessing upon them, and the strong, clear messages of the full atonement wrought on Calvary, and the burning appeals founded thereon, have not only led many to the Lord Jesus, but have strengthened many others faith and confidence. We ask earnest prayer for the remainder of the mission, which will close on the 27th. On Sunday, the 26th, Mr. Aitken will preach at eleven and seven o'clock, and to men only at three o'clock.

SANDGATE SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE.—The annual report of this admirably-worked Institution shows that the Home provides something more than a place for recreation and resort for the soldiers of Shorncliffe Camp. Direct spiritual work is done, and has been greatly blessed in the past. Mr. Bottomley, the superintendent, has laboured long and well here, and the good work he is doing should commend itself to the support of all interested in the spiritual and moral welfare of our soldiers.

CONFERENCE ON SOCIAL QUESTIONS.

As announced, a Conference was convened at Powis Hall, Westbourne Park, last week, extending over three days, by Dr. Sinclair Paterson and Pastor Frank White. A prayer-meeting was held on the Monday evening, when prayer was made unto God for his presence and blessing.

SAVING THE CHILDREN.

A goodly number assembled on the first morning to consider

THE PERILS OF HOMELESS CHILDREN IN A GREAT CITY.

The subject was opened in a paper read by Mr. J. W. Fegan, who portrayed the sufferings and misery of children whose street occupations engendered idle habits, and exposed them to innumerable temptations. He contended that legislation should limit their hours of occupation and regulate its character.

Mr. Cousins, of the Latymer-road Mission, thought schools for religious teaching should be opened for children every evening. Miss Cole, of the Orphan Home, Kilburn, called attention to the vast number of children under five years of age who are not admitted to the schools. For these the establishment of homes was suggested. Ministers should preach a sermon once a year on behalf of orphanages. The condition of our homeless and destitute children, said Dr. Barnardo, ought to speak with a loud voice to our churches. Few, perhaps, were aware that there existed in London a class of men and women who bought children only to destroy them. Mr. Toye, of Lewisham, bore testimony to God's faithfulness in supplying the needs of his Institute, and Mr. W. Williams (who was introduced as a pioneer in rescue efforts among poor children) gave a brief sketch of his work. Thirteen training ships have sprung up since the starting of the Chichester and Arethusa. The work rapidly grew from nine boys to more than ten thousand, who now are earning a respectable livelihood.

At the afternoon-meeting the subject was resumed. Colonel Puget, who presided, reminded the audience that the disciples of our Lord were among the great hinderers of the spread of his kingdom by preventing the children coming to Him. Christ's praise is never perfected until the children join in.

Miss Mittendorff told how God graciously met with her after coming to England, and she then resolved to begin a work among children. Her great endeavour was to win their affections. No child had been under her care who had not been ultimately led to the Saviour. The recounting by Mr. Henry Hill of the origin and progress of his work in Whitechapel, so well known to our readers, seemed fresh though not new. The awful mischief being done to boys by the low theatres was spoken of as indescribable. His great aim was to get them off the streets, and, by means of the Whitechapel Institute, educate them bodily, mentally, and spiritually.

After an address by Mrs. Meredith, who said that all the philanthropy in the world would be in vain if the Gospel be not clearly presented to the children, Mr. Curtis contended that early and improvident marriages were a most fruitful source of the poverty and misery that abound. Mrs. Giniver, of the Holloway Orphan Home, said she had most hope in individual effort, and urged all workers to beware of letting their work come between them and God.

HOMES FOR HOMELESS CHILDREN.

At the evening meeting the hall was quite full. Mr. J. A. Groom gave an account of work among the flower-girls, orange and watercress sellers, &c. These girls had a strong aversion to becoming servants. One of them said, "I would sooner go to jail than to service." With the help, however, of a little guile, Mr. Groom has succeeded in getting many of them into situations where they have opportunity of doing a little domestic work as well as business, and they ultimately become good servants. Mr. Curtis believed that the remedy largely lay with parents, who ought to teach their children what suffering and poverty awaited them if they did wrong. A worker present said she was at the present time in correspondence with a large number of former inmates of her orphanage, all of whom remain steadfast. Mr. MacAulay suggested evening shelters for children similar to those for cabmen. Rev. H. Topping said he had found great difficulty in getting the children into orphanages on account of the conditions imposed in most cases. He condemned the system of election by votes. A poor widow had spent £40 of her little pension in trying to get her children into orphanages by votes, and yet had failed.

Dr. Barnardo spoke on the need, character, and difficulties of the work. In an address extending to three-quarters of an hour, he dilated with much eloquence and fervour on each of these points. The cry of Christendom weeping for her children because of their misery is an exceeding bitter one. The apathy and indifference of many Christians in this matter are startling to think of.

POVERTY IN GREAT CITIES.

The subject for Wednesday morning, when Mr. T. A. Denny presided, was

THE PRESENT DISTRESS.

Mr. George Holland said there could be no doubt as to the existence of this distress in all parts of London. Thousands rise every morning not knowing where the food for the day is to come from. Not in London only, but in the provinces was this the case; among the causes he enumerated were the loss of home industries, trade leaving the country, the low price paid for labour, competition, high rentals, and the large number who are altogether out of work. Many are drawn to London to secure work at good pay, but this is soon done, and then they are penniless. Recently, only seven persons out of 150 that were assembled could muster one halfpenny each to pay for a soup dinner. Thousands live on bread and water every day, with a cup of tea once a week. Among the answers recently given by children as to why they looked so sad, were the following: "I have had no food for thirty-six hours." "I have got no bed for to night." "Mother has no work." "Father came home drunk last night." Ought there not to be a day of humiliation and prayer? There must be more union among Christians, less selfishness, and more prayer to God for help. Let there be more doing and less talking about it.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson thought the "Stores" were partly to blame, because they took business out of its ordinary legitimate channels. The Chairman (Mr. Denny) dealt some vigorous blows at the "middle-men," who reduced the wages of the poor operatives to the lowest limits, while making good round profits themselves without any effort. He attributed the existing distress partly to the free trade policy of our present Government, but this incursion into the domain of politics was met with a firm protest from Rev. Dr. W. Morison, who was supported by the meeting generally. Dr. Morison said, subsequently, that the Church must beware of pauperising the people by an undiscriminating philanthropy.

On Wednesday evening the Conference met in Talbot Tabernacle; there was a large attendance. The subject set down for consideration was REMEDIES — REAL AND IMAGINARY.

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., presided, and, after the opening services, addressed the meeting on the subject, which he said was not new to him, having been conversant with it in the city of Liverpool for the last twenty years. The question of "Saving the children," which the Conference had considered on the previous day, was in his judgment the most important of all; little could be done to improve the condition of the poor until greater efforts were made, through private and national agencies, in the direction of rescuing the children and preparing them for the duties of life. We have lately become familiar with the terrible and overwhelming poverty and wretchedness of many parts of London. Having consulted all the best statistical authorities on the subject, he had come to the conclusion that, bad as they are, things are yet not so bad as they were in the beginning of the century. The evil is to be accounted for by the fact that all the helpless poverty in the provinces seems to gravitate towards London, so that here we find a greater residuum than in the towns of the north. He feared that in London matters had got worse during the past two or three years, through the depression in trade, coupled with the constant influx of agricultural labourers and needy foreigners. Such a state of things is a disgrace to us as a Christian nation, and it is a good sign of the times that the Churches are awaking to a sense of the evil. It is quite within the scope of the Churches to deal with it. If people are placed where their physical surroundings are very bad, they must deteriorate spiritually. With the preaching of the Gospel there must, therefore, be efforts to enlighten the poor as to the proper care and culture of the body. Our religious teachers too often confine themselves so exclusively to a consideration of spiritual matters, that they are comparatively ignorant of domestic and social economy.

There are many spurious remedies being broached. The disease is so complicated that real remedies are not so cheap and easy as might be imagined. There must be judicious and long-continued treatment before a cure can be hoped for. Reverting to some of the causes of the poverty, Mr. Smith alluded to the rapid increase of our population within the last half-century. For human beings to be heaped in such masses as in London must be bad, and anything that will tend to scatter them over the world is the best thing that can be done. Great cities have nearly always been bad cities, and history shows us that they have nearly always been destroyed in some way; as if God saw that it was not a fitting thing that this state of matters should continue. There is no effectual means of preventing the demoralisation of London except by scattering the people. Man is, by his natural constitution, above all things a tiller of the soil, but this order has been reversed through our artificial style of life. Improvements in our land laws may within the next few years bring about some amelioration; but the peopling of the great open spaces of the world is what we have to aim at. It cannot be right that three-quarters of the population of the British Empire should be crowded into that little corner of it which we call England. An experiment which has been tried in Liverpool, of placing poor children abroad, has proved eminently successful. Out of some 1500 poor children emigrated to Canada during the past few years, 1450 have turned out well—a larger proportion, he ventured to say, than we should find among the well-educated and well-to-do children who are brought up, and who stay, at home. The great difficulty met with in scattering the children is the lack of knowledge and capacity, caused by defects in their early training. We must take means to give them an effective industrial training if we would bring about a real and adequate improvement in their condition. Promiscuous charity often aggravates the evil rather than removes it. Industrial training is needed not only among the children of the poor, but the children of all classes in society. It ought to be undertaken as a Christian duty. The whole nation must learn that the education of the hand is as important as the education of the head. Even in the middle classes, the number of people who are dependent on the charity of others is appalling, such is the artificial life into which we have got. We have reversed God's order, which is that man should earn his bread by the sweat of his brow. The foolish idea that in order to be a lady or a gentleman we must not be taught to use our hands, is responsible for much of the genteel poverty and distress that abound in our midst.

The subject of Medical Missions, as one important remedy, was dealt with by Dr. Robert Chambers, of the Marylebone Medical Mission. He worked, he said, in one of the very poorest parts of London, though it is in the West-end. He quoted from a letter published a year ago, in which the state of the Lisson-grove district was painted in colours as black as words could paint it. He described the modus operandi of his mis sion work, which is tolerably well known to our readers. Physical nourishment and warmth are supplied to the very needy; to all the Gospel is preached, and efforts are made to induce habits of sobriety. Sympathy and practical help must be shown to these poor people, as well as the faithful proclamation of the Gospel.

Rev. A. G. Brown said, the more he knew of this subject the more difficult he found it to suggest real and effective remedies. There must be a classification of the abject poor as well as of other classes of the community. The question is too many-sided to be cured by any one specific. We cannot afford to do without any kind of remedial effort. It is not only a religious question, but a sanitary and a social question. The actual housing of the poor is something terrible to think of; its demoralising and degrading effects cannot be imagined by anyone who has not a personal acquaintance with it. People say, Let the housing arrangements be reformed. That is a somewhat difficult matter when we consider that much of this wretched property belongs to parish officials, who will not move without strong compulsion. We want Christian people to take a far deeper and more personal interest in the local government of our great cities. At present this is too often left in the hands of the publican and his friends. Drink has, doubtless, much to do with the existing state of things; but to say that drink produces the poverty of sempstresses and others who work twelve, fourteen, or sixteen hours a day for a shilling, is rather a cruel statement. Emigration, too, is well enough, but we must prepare the people for that. At present we are seeking to emigrate those who are not wanted. If we want to do a big "export trade," we must manufacture an article that it will pay other countries to import. Instead of teaching poor boys decimal fractions and classics, let us teach them a trade. Mr. Brown cited some truly horrible statistics about East-end overcrowding, e.g., 340 rooms in the Shadwell district, containing 240 separate families. He had seen eight, ten, twelve, and fourteen persons, including parents and grown-up children of both sexes, "pigging together" in one room. He put in a touching plea for greater consideration and sympathy for the poor women, while reprobating the "lazy, loafing blackguards," who are utterly undeserving. Let us doff some of our own dignity, and let all ministers of the Gospel feel that they are really poor-law guardians, instead of handing over the poor to the tender mercies of Government relief, and whining all the time because they do not come to the churches and chapels. Mr. Brown closed by relating a suggestive personal experience. A poor man he met in visitation asked him if he was not a missionary, and if he was a gentleman, what had brought him there. When he replied that it was the love of Christ that brought him, the man replied, "Then there is something a precious sight more real in religion than I gave it credit for."

Ned Wright said he believed the great and ever-widening gap between the rich and the poor was one source of much of the discontent that exists among the lower classes, and that is producing a class of men as dangerous as dynamite. Arguing from his own experience, he said that nothing would change the hearts of the people save the Gospel of Jesus Christ. He thought we were getting greedy as a nation, and over-stingy in the distribution of our charity. Jesus Christ fed the hungry, whether they were deserving or not. It is this spirit of practical love for the unlovely and undeserving that will win the hearts of the masses.

After some remarks by Mr. Chorley, another gentleman said he believed one of the most crying evils of the day was the underpaying of the toiling masses. There is a craving among purchasers for cheap goods, no matter how insufficient the remuneration that has been paid to the worker.

Mr. T. A. Denny said he had seen poor men and women working long and hard for next to nothing. It was the intervention of the "sweaters" that reduced the pay of the makers. An ulster, for example, that was produced at the first cost for 10s., would be sold over the counter for 30s. Why should not Christian capitalists combine and have a warehouse in the West-end for the sale of articles for the making up of which proper prices had been paid? He referred with approval to the experiment being made by Mrs. Sarah Heckford, in High-street, Shadwell, by employing poor women as seamstresses at fair remuneration.

Mr. Cousins, of the Latymer-road Mission, spoke of the thriftlessness of many of the poor in that neighbourhood, and referred to the conference on the Drink question that had been held that afternoon in Exeter Hall.

Mr. Whitwell, who is much interested in the question of Sunday closing, said that while all possible remedies are needed, 120 millions spent annually in drink in this country is a portentous fact; if the amount were diverted into useful channels, how much needed relief it would bring to the industrial classes. Many men of capital, too, instead of lavishing money on the adornment of their own residences, might by an equal expenditure improve the condition of the homes of the poor, and remunerate labour. He urged discrimination in the distribution of charity, quoting the case of one London square where a tradesman declared to him that most of the money given in charity was spent in drink.

In winding up the discussion of the evening, the Chairman said there ought to be more sympathetic intercourse between rich and poor. Anything that will bridge over the great gulf that separates these extremes of society, and will induce more workers from among the rich to take a personal part in relieving and evangelising the poor, is to be welcomed. Workers among the poor must seek to teach the girls in poor families such elements of domestic economy as will fit them for becoming domestic servants both at home and abroad. As to emigration, he said he had that very afternoon been present at a conference for bringing together, for mutual action and co-operation, the twenty-five emigration societies now at work in London. These societies only emigrate some 3000 persons a year, whereas the annual increase of the London population is 100,000. As an instance of the pauperising effects of indiscriminate almsgiving, Mr. Smith mentioned the case of a bequest left by a man 200 years ago, for the benefit of his descendants. That bequest has now grown very large through the increase in the value of property, and every one of the man's descendants, to the number of 200, is a pauper. While relief must be administered to all who are in danger of starvation, the great aim ought to be to raise the character, and call out the self-reliant qualities of the poor. The lack of combination among the East-end poor is one difficulty in securing for them proper remuneration. Another element in the problem is the extreme want of thrift and foresight among the English people. He knew of artisans earning £4 and even £7 a week, who saved nothing in prosperous times; as soon as a period of trial came they were in dire need. We have to teach the people the duty of exercising their powers of reason and judgment, by providing for times of adversity in periods of prosperity. The circulating of thrift literature among the poor would be useful in this respect.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

Dr. S. Paterson presided on Thursday morning, when was the topic for consideration. He remarked that the attitude of the Church toward the fallen must continue to be the same amid all changes of public opinion and State legislation—viz., that of compassion.

Mr. E. W. Thomas, of 200, Euston-road, related at some length his experiences of rescue work in London. He contended that, both in Paris and in Brussels, the State regulation of vice had failed. London certainly was not now so demoralised by spectacles of vice as in former years. Not less than 30,000 "cases" had come before him since the beginning of the work with which he was associated. In reply to questions by the Chairman and others, Mr. Thomas said that doubtless many are actually trained to sin. Poverty as well as inclination leads many astray. Not a few persons get a living by procuring victims for the dens of vice.

Mr. W. Fowler, M.P., said the city of Glasgow had been marvellously changed by the direct repressive measures of the police. If the citizens of London were to take the matter up heartily, the evil would be repressed in London; but if the citizens will not act, then the State must do it. He would ask Mr. Thomas if the drink was not the cause of much of the evil. Mr. Thomas replied that he had never met with a fallen woman who was an abstainer. Mr. Thorpe Stuart, of the Rescue Society, thought that chastity should be inculcated by parents and teachers. Very few Jewish girls fall, and this was probably due to their being instructed while young.

The afternoon meeting was one of much interest and profit. Mrs. Fisher was there to speak about her labours in City warehouses, with which excellent work our readers are familiar. In some of the warehouses a great change is observable in the general demeanour and behaviour of the girls. At one place the visitors read to the men as well as to the girls, and nearly 400 persons are thus reached under one roof. An employer said only the previous day as soon as she entered, "Stop all the machines while Mrs. Fisher is here, that she may hold her meeting." Nearly all the City warehouses are now open, and a number of ladies help in the work. The audience were evidently astonished to hear, from the speaker, that many of the girls make aprons such as they had on at a payment of only 6d. per dozen! The majority of the girls can earn only 5s. or 7s. per week; what wonder that they too often swell the ranks of the dishonest and the vicious.

Miss Macpherson said that in one workshod she knew earnest prayer was made for the conversion of the worst woman in the place; in a few days she was truly changed. Captain Thom suggested that the forewomen in warehouses should be specially sought after, as their personal influence was frequently paramount.

REACHING THE RECKLESS.

The evening meeting was held in the Tabernacle, this subject being considered. A paper prepared by Mr. George Hatton was read, in his absence through ill-health, by Mr. Frank White. It described rescue work among prisoners and convicts. A gradual decrease in crime had been going on for several years, and it was admitted by police officials to be due largely to this work among discharged prisoners. Mr. Robert Paton, in the course of a vigorous and interesting speech, startled the meeting by revelations showing how men became criminals. Official statements, extracts from daily papers, testimonies of the police, and personal observation, all went to prove that the vile and pernicious literature so largely circulated among boys and girls is a chief cause. The story of a highwayman now running in a popular weekly, under the guise of gallantry and heroism, taught and sanctioned the worst crime. Mr. Paton narrated some facts that had come under his notice, showing clearly that crime could be traced to such pernicious reading.

Captain Thom, of the City Mission, spoke of the reckless outcasts among fallen women. He had generally found that as they lost strength and beauty they descended, by degrees, from the west to the east of London. "I carry with me an awful weight," said the speaker, "as I survey this terrible evil." The only thing that could successfully combat it was Divine pity.

Miss Macpherson, in pathetic language, urged the imitation of Jesus in reaching the reckless. By way of encouraging workers she told of the progress of work among cabmen, policemen, railway-men, and others. Jesus tells us to fill up every minute, to feast the poor, and go after the lost.

Dr. Paterson said he once spent a good part of a month in prison with a condemned criminal, seeking to save him. His experience was, that the worst and most reckless can be touched through some part of their being. He reminded his hearers that they each had some weak point in their physical constitution, which, but for God's grace, would have proved their ruin. Let us remember this when visiting the criminal, and seeking to rescue our fallen sister.

In briefly closing the Conference, Mr. Frank White thanked all who had assisted. He had found great encouragement from the words spoken, and felt sure that blessing would follow. Mr. White, we may add, gave no stated address at any of the meetings, but a keynote was struck at the opening of most of the sittings by his brief readings of Scripture, with apt illustration and exposition. Certainly the presence of God was manifest throughout.

GLIMPSES OF CHRISTIAN WORK.

By GAWIN KIRKHAM.

AMONG THE NAVVIES.

At the mouth of the River Orwell, on the Suffolk side, a new dock is in course of construction, where about 300 men are employed. At present the adjacent village of Felixstow is in a scattered, unfinished state; but bids fair, in course of time, to be an attractive and picturesque seaside resort. Last year the Open-air Mission sent down a preacher for Sunday services through the summer at the request of the Vicar of Walton, the Rev. C. H. Marriott, to whose parish Felixstow is attached. At these meetings there was always a sprinkling of healthy-looking, well-dressed working men. They were the navvies engaged in the construction of the afore-named dock. On inquiry I found that Mrs. Dyer was working among these men, and holding meetings twice a week at their dinner hour. Visiting Felixstow a fortnight ago, I accompanied this devoted worker to one of these noon meetings. The gathering was held in a rude shed, into and around which the men crowded with a readiness which showed how patience and perseverance may gain the confidence of those who are not too ready to commit themselves in religious matters. A red-hot stove gave out twice as much heat as was required, and the fumes of tobacco-smoke further rendered the atmosphere anything but enjoyable. Here Gospel addresses are delivered, and here the word came home with power, for some of the men are thoroughly changed in heart and life, while others have died in the faith who first received the word in this humble place. On the day of my visit I founded my remarks upon Job xii. 8, "Speak to the earth and it shall teach thee;" my object being to show how men may gather spiritual lessons from the ground in which they daily toil.

CONTENDING FOR THE FAITH.

Recently I have heard five lectures by as many different lecturers of the Christian Evidence Society. On each occasion discussion was allowed, and the utmost fairness was maintained by the Chairmen. The ability, courtesy, readiness and learning displayed by these lecturers impressed me very deeply, while the frivolousness of most of the questions and objections of the Atheists and infidels surprised me; for I thought they would have had something more reasonable and substantial to advance. If they have nothing stronger in reserve the citadel of Christianity is not yet in danger. Some of these lectures were delivered at the Mildmay-park Conference Hall, and were numerously attended.

QUIET AND UNOSTENTATIOUS.

Amid the strife and confusion in the world, civil, political, and religious, how charming it is to know that many are > "Content to fill a little space

> If God be glorified."

On an afternoon in March, when the sun and the wind were struggling for supremacy, I entered the little village of Trimley, about three miles from Felixstow, in Suffolk. Here I found a lady who, touched by the spiritual needs of the villagers, had erected a pretty "village room" for evangelistic and other meetings. The room stands in her own grounds, and is surrounded by spreading beech and other trees. Here she ministers the word of life to the people, aided occasionally by some from the neighbourhood, and in summer by visitors to Felixstow. Being an abstainer from intoxicants, she has set apart a room in her house, very pleasantly fitted up, where the men and youths may spend their evenings free from the temptations of the public-house. How much more satisfactory is such a life than one spent in mere worldly pursuits and the love of ease.

IN NORTHAMPTON.

The stranger who has heard of Northampton as an infidel town, must be very much astonished in passing through it to find, if possible, a larger number of churches and chapels than in an ordinary town of 50,000 inhabitants, and that these places are, on the whole, well attended. He expresses his surprise, and is told it is a Christian town, though it is admitted that there is a district inhabited chiefly by unbelievers. While spending Palm Sunday there, I came to the conclusion that God has many witnesses in it, and that these witnesses do not testify in vain. First, I was taken to a tramps' breakfast in St. Katherine's School-room, where about fifty men from the lodging-houses are gathered every Sunday, who, after being fed with the bread that perisheth, have the bread of life broken to them. At eleven I joined Thomas Rawlinson for an open-air meeting in the market-place. He had his harmonium and banner, which aid in gathering the people. The audience, some 250 in number, was composed almost exclusively of men. Who they were I know not, but they listened with evident interest to the story of Christ's public entry into Jerusalem. In the afternoon I spoke to an audience of about 100 in the Young Men's Rooms, usually taken by the Mildmay Deaconesses. These devoted ladies have been at work in the town about two years, and have gathered in converts from the railway men, policemen, tram men, shoemakers, and others. On a previous visit I addressed about 320 shoemakers' wives, gathered for a tea-meeting, by their invitation. On this Sunday night, the Old Theatre, said to hold 1500, was crowded, many being turned away. This building has been taken by the Rev. E. G. Parr, Chaplain of the Gaol, for a series of special services.

"THE SINGERS WENT BEFORE."

I am somewhat jealous lest, in our eagerness to make the Gospel attractive to the people, we use methods which are not in harmony with the mind of the Spirit. But the singing of Gospel hymns, provided the singers are themselves godly, is surely not only lawful but expedient. One Sunday evening recently, I noticed an illustration of the power and sweetness of this Gospel singing. The friends who worship in a small mission hall in Barrett's-grove, Stoke Newington-road, stood just off the high road, after their Sunday evening meeting, and held a brief service of song. The evening was cold and the streets muddy, but such was the power of the sweet strains that a large crowd soon gathered, to whom the word of life was also preached. These friends had a lamp on a pole, which served to illuminate both their books and the crowd at the same time.

AMONG THE BIRD FANCIERS.

A cold Sunday morning in March is not very tempting for open-air work, even by men, but Miss Macpherson was out in the Bird Fair, off Shoreditch, with a banner, two harmoniums, and three bands of workers, occupying as many stations. And the people gathered and listened as they might be expected to do only on a fine summer's day. How I wished that Miss Macpherson had had a band of preachers round her that they might learn from her how to address a street crowd, for it must be admitted that, with all their advantages of training, there are yet to be found preachers who are dull and prosy and uninteresting. May such a noble example for street workers stir up many to go and do likewise.

THE WEST LONDON AGRICULTURAL HALL has recently been commenced between the site occupied by Messrs. Moody and Sankey's hall last year and the Addison-road, Kensington Station. Numbers of labourers are at work. Perhaps some of our readers in the district will be led to care for the spiritual welfare of the men.

IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS.—The thirty-sixth anniversary meetings of this Society were held in Dublin last week. Lord Plunket, Archbishop of Dublin, in presiding at one of them, laid stress upon the importance of supporting the Society, because of the time being favourable to the drawing closer together of the members of different churches. Rev. Horace W. Townsend gave an outline of the Society's report, which will be presented at the London May Meeting. Rev. W. E. Burroughs remarked that a great deal had been said about the controversial character of the Society's work, but all connected with it would say that the Society did not seek controversy. There must, however, necessarily be controversy when the truth is affirmed to controvert error. The great object they had in view was to put the Bible into the hands of their fellow-countrymen, and to let the Gospel tell its own story.

"IF IT DIE . . . . MUCH FRUIT."

Toilers! can ye trust the Master;
 Cast your precious seed away—
Leave it there beneath the furrow,
 Hide it from the light of day?
Sow in faith; through joy and sorrow
 Lo, the promise standeth plain:
"There shall dawn a harvest morrow,
 Seeds that die shall live again."

Soldiers! can ye trust your Captain?
 Bear for Him the daily cross?
Can ye give up all to serve Him,
 Count for Him the world but loss?
Is there danger? Comrades, brave it;
 Lo, the promise standeth plain:
"He that gives his life shall save it,
 Seeds that die shall live again."

Children! can ye trust the Father,
 Though your dearest fade and die?
Though the earth be sad and darkened,
 See the bow is in the sky.
Winter's gloom is chill and dreary,
 Yet the promise standeth plain:
"They are resting who were weary;
 Seeds that die shall live again."

Christians! can ye trust your Saviour?
 Living, trust in Him who died:
Dying, trust Him still, who liveth
 Through the shadowed vale to guide.
All are in his holy keeping;
 Lo, his promise standeth plain:
"Brightly working, calmly sleeping,
 All his seeds shall live again."

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

The work of the Thrawl-street Mission during the winter, has been more than usually interesting and active. Besides all the ordinary agencies for the spiritual and temporal benefit of the poor "outcasts," so numerous in Spitalfields, the hall has been opened all night every Saturday, to shelter such as were without a lodging. So numerous were these found to be that scores had to be refused admission. They were allowed to sleep till seven o'clock on Sunday morning, when they received a substantial breakfast. Many literally devoured the food, and showed signs of being at starvation point. After the meal a religious service was held. Some have professed to be converted. Several were set up in a little way of business, loans were made to others, and to others work was secured. Some of these are doing well. A few have been sent home, and several youths and girls have been got into homes or refuges.

Besides this work, we have provided lodgings for some hundreds during the winter who would otherwise have been exposed to the cold all night. Free meals have been given to thousands more, and a soup supper to the poor children one night each week. Bread and coal tickets have been freely given also; clothing has been distributed to many, and an amount of benefit conferred that cannot be tabulated or its beneficial results stated. This work has been earnestly and unostentatiously done in the Master's name, besides all the religious services that are held every Sabbath and every week-night, and upon which the Divine blessing has rested. The heavy expense has been met up to this time, but if the work is to continue, as we are very anxious it should, help will be needed and will be gratefully received by

James Atkinson, Secretary.

RAILWAY MEN IN LONDON.—The ladies interested in the men connected with the Metropolitan Railway gave their annual teas during Easter week, when about 500 men were entertained. Gospel addresses by different gentlemen, and some touching testimonies from the men themselves, were given. This mission commenced sending monthly packets of Gospel literature to each man employed on the line, some five years ago. About 600 men are supplied, and God has greatly blessed these silent messengers, as proved by many facts that have transpired. Will other Christians help in this quiet work for the Lord? Invalids who are not able for active work could tie up the little packets, and send them forth with prayer. Each packet costs from 2d. to 3d. per month. The names of stations and men will be gladly supplied by Miss Jackson, 21, Stanley-gardens, London, W.

THE LORD'S WORK IN SCOTLAND.

By DR. MOXEY.

SINCE my last brief notice of the Edinburgh Students' Holiday Mission, several reports have come to hand from various quarters, showing that there is an unwonted spirit of inquiry abroad throughout the land. The work seems to be specially addressed to, and advanced by, the young, but the middle-aged and even those in "the sere and yellow leaf" are participating in the blessing. The agency that God seems to be more manifestly using is personal testimony, and the testimony that seems the most effective is that of newly-born souls. The very simplicity and informality, often the apparent weakness of the statements, seem to constitute their strength. God's ways are not our ways, and what I have heard objected to as the puerility of some of the young converts—objected to as such by old believers—seems often to be the very thing that tells with anxious souls. In fact, we are getting constant reminders that our stereotyped methods are often powerless, where a few words from an inexperienced convert, only a few days old, will be used of God to bring light and liberty to a labouring soul trembling on the threshold of life.

REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND.

In Glasgow a wonderful work is going on among the children, and one of the principal daily newspapers is regularly chronicling the triumphs of grace, not scrupling to quote letters from the little ones, and telling how one is used to bring another. Rev. E. Payson Hammond seems likely to have a repetition of the glorious work that God wrought through his means in Dumfries and Annan, as well as Glasgow, some twenty years ago. He has a wonderful knack of getting the little ones to listen to him as he tells of Jesus and his love, and the affection he so easily gains from them to himself he manages very simply and naturally to transfer to his Master. Those of us who escaped from childhood into youth and manhood without Christ, and who recall the miserable experience and the dark sin we went through, hail this work with all our heart, and we hope that our brother's services may be utilised, if he can spare himself to us for the time, throughout the length and breadth of the land. "Our children for Christ!" is our cry; and then godly parents will be spared the awful agony of gazing, helpless and hopeless, on the dead body of a son, whose soul they know is not with Christ.

Dr. Andrew A. Bonar and Mr. Howie, of Govan, have each had a week of the evangelist's services. The churches have been crowded night after night, and I hear that the average ingathering of these lambs has been over rather than under 500 per week. It is reassuring to hear, at the same time, that special efforts are used to verify these results, and that each case dealt with is particularly inquired into, and followed up where practicable.

Mr. Hammond is working under the auspices and directions of the United Evangelistic Association, who have placed the daily noon meeting in his hands. They seem to be taking a leaf out of Mr. Moody's book, by restricting each series of meetings to a week. Probably they have good reasons for this procedure, but there are instances wherein it looks as if the work were almost unwarrantably stopped at the very moment of fullest and deepest blessing. The question is now being ventilated in the newspaper I have referred to, as to whether these young converts should not be received into the membership of the churches. A judicious reception of this nature would go far to disabuse the minds of many Christians who think that the simple Gospel is too abstruse for the understanding of a little child, and who are sceptical as to the conversion of children.

MR. J. M. SCROGGIE.

Our brother, Mr. John M. Scroggie, has been greatly owned of God in Edinburgh, Greenock, and Dunfermline, and in each place his work has been followed up with the happiest results by deputations of students from the Edinburgh University. I have had the joy of assisting both in Mr. Scroggie's and the students' meetings. I have a letter from Greenock begging me to come over and help them, and hardly a post comes without similar applications. Nor is this by any means confined to one or two of the Lord's servants; the desire seems general, and ministers tell me that people are coming to inquire the way Zionward, who would not have dared to do so a year ago. Is the Spirit of God indeed moving upon the face of the land; and are we to be blessed with another God-sent-down revival? The good Lord grant it, and rejoice the hearts of those who remember 1859 and 1860; and hear the prayers of us who were then so dead in trespasses and sins, that we actually lived in the midst of the glorious resurrection, but saw not a sight of it, nor caught a sound, nor even knew of its existence, till we came into the blessed Light of Life and heard the report.

My Greenock correspondent says: "The Circus was full on Sunday evening, about 2000 men being present (it being a students' meeting for men only), and many could not get in. A deep impression was made, and several decided for Christ. Last night again we had a glorious meeting, and again blessing."

DEPUTATIONS OF STUDENTS.

Deputations of students are working this week in Wick, Jedburgh, Dunbar, Greenock, Talkish, Bo'ness, and Stirling. The secretaries, students themselves (viz., Mr. John C. Thomson, M.A., 18, Nicholson-street, and Mr. R. A. Hill, 7, St. Margaret's-road, Edinburgh) arranged for a week's meetings in each place, beginning with the Sabbath evening. In some places, as in Stirling, a second week's work needs to be carried on. One of the secretaries writes: "The moving among young men has been so marvellous that in Stirling we felt it our clear duty to go forward. I myself was in Greenock on Sabbath evening, and we had a splendid time. The meeting was held—as are those now going on—in Cooke's Circus, and the great building was crowded to overflowing in every part; even all available standing room was fully occupied. The presence of the Holy Spirit was a very vivid reality from the first, and it was a truly blessed time. Several openly professed decision for the Lord Jesus in the after-meeting, and many, I am certain, took the step during a season of silent prayer we had. A great work is going on. Wherever our men are working God is giving blessing."

On an average six men compose each deputation, but the secretaries have inaugurated a system of exchanging the men during the week, certain experienced men, of course, remaining right through, for the sake of giving unity to the series; so that many voices are heard during the week. The great distinguishing features of the work are that the addresses are given almost exclusively to men only, and are practically confined to personal testimony. I have heard from old-fashioned Christians many objections to the latter course, saying it was an insult to the intelligence of the young men of a provincial town to expect them to turn out and listen to the unconsidered, and it might be unwise, statements of youngsters who must necessarily be so ignorant of things divine. They admitted that such testimony might serve to interest Salvation Army audiences, but believed that educated men would resent such childish treatment. At one place where I went with the students my services were, so to speak, jumped at and prominently advertised, to the comparative exclusion of the students, and mainly on the grounds above stated. I need not say I took care that my interesting fellow-workers should not be thus put aside, and a fruitful after-meeting was the result of our combined work.

As an instructive and independent commentary on the value of the students' efforts and methods, I subjoin a few quotations from a letter I have received from a gentlemanly young man, who remained to be spoken to on that occasion. He says: "After your earnest words with me on Sabbath, I believed I had taken Christ for my Master, Lord, and Saviour; but, like the most of young Christians, I looked into my heart instead of to the risen Lord. The book you gave me ('Safety, Certainty, and Enjoyment') removed my doubts. I stuck to that rule of Brownlow North's which recommends prayer and daily reading of the Scriptures. On the following Thursday a students' meeting was held, and it was there that I got, as it were, my keynote in the praise of Christ. The 'joy unspeakable' came to me that night; and last night at the meeting my cup of joy was filled to the brim, I might say, by seeing three of my own friends brought to the knowledge of Christ Jesus—two of them partly by my influence." One of them, to put it in the words of the dear student who pointed the way to them, "went home rejoicing to tell his mother what a Christ he had found." It is being proposed to send out deputies from our own city to the villages around. The harvest indeed is plentiful, and I thank God the labourers are not few.

Next Saturday student deputations leave for Brighton, Dalkeith, Cupar-Fife, Kirkcaldy, Alloa, and Broxburn, and the secretaries are prepared to follow up this week's work if necessary. Will your readers pray for the students and for the places they visit, and let a united cry go up to God for another great national revival.

MR. SPENCER WALTON AT BRIGHTON.

DEAR SIR,—I should very much like to state with thankfulness the great blessing that has attended the mission recently held in the parish of St. Matthew. For five days Mr. W. Spencer Walton has been with us holding Bible-readings in the afternoon, and evangelistic services in the evening. There has been more manifest blessing during this short mission in the conversion of souls and the strengthening of God's children than I have seen during the past four years. This is the last of the series of missions that Mr. Walton has held in different parts of Brighton; in all of which the Lord has manifested his presence and power.

W. T. M'Cormick, Vicar of St. Matthews.

At the close of the five missions held by Mr. Spencer Walton during the past eight weeks, it was decided to invite all who had shared in the blessing so fully bestowed, to unite in hearty thanksgiving to God. On Wednesday evening, April 15, nearly three thousand persons assembled in the Dome for that purpose. A large number have professed conversion, while others, by means of the valuable afternoon Bible-readings, have learned the blessedness of whole-hearted consecration. Rev. J. G. Gregory presided.

The young converts were warmly commended to the Lord in prayer, and afterwards addressed shortly by Mr. Spencer Walton. He told how God in his love makes a request: "Follow Me." Consecration is the response to this. Then He enjoins confession: "Go home and tell thy friends." Then He gives a promise: "I will never leave thee," which ensures confidence: We may boldly say, "The Lord is my helper." Then there is triumph: "Who shall separate us from the love of God," &c. Then there is God's purpose towards us: "That they whom Thou hast given Me be with Me where I am." Thus we have conversion, confession, confidence, conquest, and completeness. An earnest appeal was also made to any who were still rejecting the voice of love, from the words, "Is it nothing to you?"

The meeting was closed with the singing of "The crowning day is coming," and one verse of the grand old hymn, "All hail the power of Jesu's name." Truly the people sang praises "with gladness of heart," for the Lord has fulfilled "the good pleasure of his goodness," and the name of the Lord Jesus has become precious to many through the faithful testimony of his servant.

DUBLIN VISITING MISSION.—The Bible-women who visit Roman Catholic families in Dublin in connection with this Mission continue to have much encouragement in the work, notwithstanding that it is attended with difficulties and sometimes danger. Many interesting incidents are met with, showing the transforming and comforting power of God's Word.

Notes and Comments.

DURING the past week the hope that there will be no war between England and Russia has much increased. It is a cause of thankfulness that not a few ministers of Christ have preached against such a war; that many petitions and memorials have been addressed to the Cabinet in the interests of peace; and that prayer is being made continually, in public and in private, that so fearful a calamity may be averted.

The following extract from the letter of a correspondent of The Pall Mall Gazette deserves to be pondered well by those who are clamouring for war:—

> "I beseech you that the voice of the toiler, however feeble, may be heard at this supreme crisis in the history of our country. A war with Russia means the slaughter of many thousands of British lives and the expenditure of, may be, fifty millions of British money, and these lives and that money will mainly have to be provided by the lowly workers of the nation. Trade will be demoralised in every level, society generally will be disorganised; but it is the poor men and women who are living from hand to mouth in the back streets of London, the wretched labourers in our fields, and the poorly paid and ill-employed workmen in all the towns of the kingdom, who will feel the great pinch of the terrible conflict—it is they chiefly who will have to both pay and weep. And why? Because (at the worst) a hot-headed Russian soldier has brought his men into collision with an armed body of Afghans boiling for a fight. The toilers of Britain and the toilers of Russia have no quarrel; why should the affairs of a miserable little State of Central Asia be permitted to make them enemies, and cause them to expend their earnings and their blood in needless conflict against each other?"

Our evening contemporary roundly accuses the Established clergy, especially the bishops, who ought to be leaders of a peaceful public opinion, of being "dumb dogs all":—

> "The Salvation Army, whose General has set apart a day of fasting and prayer among all his followers that so great a disaster as war between England and Russia may be averted, shows more appreciation of the duties of a religious teacher than all the hierarchy of the Establishment."

It is time that this reproach (which we fear does not apply exclusively to one section of the Church) were rolled away. Bishop Fraser, Drs. Dale, Allon, and others in and out of the Established Church, are worthy and honourable exceptions. Speaking broadly, however, as far as the usual channels of publicity are concerned, it would seem to remain true that the Christian sense of the nation has not received the guidance in the right direction that might have been expected from its appointed teachers.

No more pathetic contribution has been made to the literature of social wrong and social suffering than "The Black Army" (threepence) which Mrs. Wilkes, of Manor Cottage, Kerbey-street, Poplar, E., has written and sent forth. "The Black Army" is the terrible array of lost women that is daily and nightly on parade in all our large cities—"the Devil's Own," as our sister calls them. Thank God for the many who, like herself, are spending time and strength in trying to induce these lost ones to desert the ranks of the foe of humankind and enlist in the army of light. How much, and what constant, encouragement they need. This little book of Mrs. Wilkes' is anything but pleasant reading, but its perusal is a duty that Christians ought not to shrink from, if they would join in the battle with sin and sorrow that needs to be waged on every hand.

With reference to a recent note on judicial oaths, several correspondents write drawing attention to legal enactments which provide that any person who has conscientious scruples about oath-taking can make an affirmation when giving evidence.

The Bishop of London made his first public platform appearance last week, in Exeter Hall, when he presided at a Conference on the subject of Saturday-night drinking. His Lordship's well-known Temperance ardour ought to help on the crusade against the hydra-headed evil that seems to baffle all efforts to cope with it. The fact that, during three hours on a recent Saturday night, 200 selected public-houses in different parts of London were visited by 86,608 persons, shows how much has yet to be done. We sincerely hope that some restrictive legislation will speedily be attempted by the Government; they may count on the hearty support of all right-thinking members of the community, without distinction of party or sect.

We have received a number of letters concerning the so-called Imprecatory Psalms. One correspondent very well suggests that they would be more correctly described as Judicial Psalms. Others propose an alteration in the translation of David's instructions to Solomon regarding Shimei—that the negative should be repeated, "and bring not his hoar head to the grave with blood." But there seems no sufficient ground for this; and it is quite unnecessary. See the paper on the subject in our present issue.

A correspondent in the United States writes to us suggesting that young men who are tempted to indulgence in drink, by the many allurements to it in this country, should be sent to the State of Kansas, where no drink is allowed to be sold or manufactured. He says that the State of Iowa, to which many young Englishmen have gone, is as bad as England in this respect.

The Bishop of Derry, preaching in the Chapel Royal. Dublin, at the service attended by the Prince and Princess of Wales, upon the subject of "the Resurrection as a Fact and as a Power," said that sometimes in the existence of a nation conditions arise which rapidly produce changes that not long before seemed to be outside the range of rational calculation. He illustrated this thought by the prairie fire, oftentimes lighted by a spark, perhaps from even a child's hand, and added:—

> "For such a condition of thought and mind in this land let us hope and pray. . . . In this our land there shall yet be two words, not stamped upon stone or metal, upon coin or plinth, but upon the fleshy tables of men's hearts, upon remote mountains, in great cities where the voices of thousands, homeless, or barricaded within squalid walls, now rise like the restless hum of bees that have lost their queen. Those two words are, Pacata Hibernia. From brother to brother shall come the Easter greeting, which came first from the heart of the risen Christ, "Peace be unto you."

To these words how many now weary of strife and unrest will fervently say, Amen!

Friends of the blind will be glad to know that while Dr. Moon is in Sweden, the work of embossing is being carried on, as usual, by his daughter, Miss Moon, at 104, Queen's-road, Brighton. It is, therefore, greatly to be desired that contributions may not be withheld, but increased, in consequence of Dr. Moon's absence.

The statement by the Duke of Argyll in Good Words for April, that the coal of this island will be exhausted in 106 years, if the present use and exportation go on, is one that is seriously exercising the thoughts of many persons. The providence of God has given us this store of energy in the coal-fields; we are now annually using and exporting 163,800,000 tons. According to this, our coal measures will be exhausted in the third generation from our children. The Duke of Argyll writes not only as an eminent geologist, but as having been the chairman of a Commission on our Coal Supply.

In the same paper the Duke refers to an interesting conversation he once had with Mr. Darwin, and states his own impression that many scientific men are more Darwinian than Darwin was. They rejoice in Darwin because they think he discovered some process of creation that dispenses with God. The Duke holds that in this they misrepresent Darwin, who told the Duke that nature as an effect and an expression of a Divine Mind often came over him with overwhelming force."

At this period of nature's energies the Church is fittingly beginning the season of its religious anniversaries. When nations debate about unsheathing the sword for mortal combat, the followers of Christ are uniting to assail the strongholds of Satan. In the April number of a Chronicle of a great society the complaint is made of a diminished interest in foreign missions. This complaint is scarcely just, in the face of the facts that at two recent missionary meetings in Exeter Hall the attendance was overflowing, though at one of them the rain poured in torrents. At the other, hundreds could not get into the crowded hall. If there is diminished interest anywhere, may it not be because the public has been appealed to instead of the devout; eloquence has been more sought than sanctity; and the orator has been more in demand than the prayerful man of God?

At this anniversary period we may recall the one emphatic lesson which the past ages have taught, and that is, that meretricious efforts to extend the kingdom of Christ have always been disappointing and abortive. It is only a spiritually-Christianised Church that can maintain interest, and Christianise the world. These things are to be hoped for at this time:—that the conscience of the Church in reference to missions may be quickened; that the obligation to pray for the world may be deepened; that stumbling-blocks of suspicion and uncharitableness may be taken out of the way; that glee and laughter-awakening stories may be restrained by the remembrance of the solemn fact that two-thirds of the human race do not know the world's Saviour; and that "the Macedonian cry" of unsaved millions may be heard.

The list of anniversary meetings we published last week will show that home agencies are becoming increasingly various. The range of Christian benevolence is aiming to be as wide as social sins and miseries. All this is powerfully telling on men. The changed sentiment of the multitude towards Christianity is largely owing to the present humane spirit of Christians in relation to human sorrows. That all who call themselves Jesus Christ's may be of the same mind is the one demand of these troubled and critical times.

Says a correspondent of The Methodist Times:—"The spiritual destitution of some villages in this country is appalling, and calls for speedy attention. The squire and Ritualistic influence bid fair to crush out the feeble Nonconformity of these parts, and the Conference should do something to alter this state of things."

We are glad to say that Mr. Luff's poem touching a poor woman in Whitecross-street, brought in enough to allow her 5s. weekly, up to May, thus helping her over the winter.

We are having almost daily confirmation of the remark by the Bishop of Newcastle, cited in our last issue, as to the prevalence and "awful malignity of the poison of impurity." The recent revelations connected with the appearance at a London police-court, and committal for trial, of a creature in the shape of a woman, who has been trafficing wholesale in the bodies and souls of her sisters, show that the very highest ranks of society, both English and foreign, are honey-combed with this deadly "poison." Unless the Lord have pity upon us as a community, and purge us by some tremendous fire of public exposure, we appear to be in danger of perishing, like ancient Rome, through inherent corruption. We seem to have few pulpit prophets who are brave enough and honest enough to warn us of our fate. Thank God He has not left us without a few wise, courageous prophetesses, who cease not to make appeal to the best and most chivalrous feelings of the man, but it would appear too often in vain.

One of the blackest features of the case to which we have referred is the alleged complicity of our police with the traders in vice. The evidence produced on this point appears to be unimpeachable, and the matter must surely be sifted to the bottom. If the adminstration of justice and of law is thus tainted at the fountain-head, what wonder if foul streams flows out in every direction.

The continued existence if not increase of the foreign traffic in white slaves, emphasises the need for constant and unwearied vigilance in checkmating the infamous projects of those emissaries of the devil, who, like their master, are ever going about seeking whom they may devour. We gladly print the following letter that appeared in Monday's Daily News, and hope it will be extensively reproduced in the English, Scottish, and Irish Press:—

"With reference to the reports which have recently appeared in your columns, allow us to say that we shall be most happy to make inquiries, through our agents and correspondents on the Continent, respecting the bonâ fides of situations offered to English girls, through agencies or otherwise. We would strongly urge parents and guardians to thoroughly satisfy themselves as to the respectability of situations before sending girls abroad.—Yours, "Thos. Cook & Son.
"Ludgate-circus, London, E.C."

Professor Delitzsch says of Dr. Saphir's sermon, "All Israel shall be saved" (just published by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 6d.):—"Dr. Saphir has already written many things, and only lately a beautiful and thorough Luther Commemoration lecture; but nothing from his pen has so deeply touched me, and many other readers, as this powerful appeal to Christendom from the lips of a Jewish Christian. For, like the Apostle, Saphir also is a son of Israel; without Christian believers from Israel, there would be no Church in existence; the first Christian congregations in apostolic days were Jewish."

YOUNG WOMEN IN LONDON.

Last Friday was a great field day of the Y.W.C.A. at Exeter Hall. The lower hall was occupied most of the day by a convention of lady officers and other workers, in which a large variety of topics bearing on the welfare of young women were discussed.

At the morning Conference, with Lady Hobart as president, Miss Moor (Bristol) recounted the rise and progress of the Y.W.C.A., finding plenty of matter for encouragement in the future from what had resulted in the past. Miss Macleod (London) set forth some of the duties of secretaries, and referred to the importance of the employment agency as a help to the many young women who have to carve their own careers in early life. Miss Marrable, of Dublin, reported on the Irish branches of the Association. Miss Bell (Eastbourne) showed forcibly how love to Christ and love to souls must be the mainspring of all successful effort. Miss Burgess (Brighton) advocated close attention to "ways and means" in conducting the branches, and pleaded for the cultivation of thrift among the members. Miss Wright (Manchester) in the same vein imparted much excellent advice as to the necessity of business habits in doing work for Christ. With respect to the special branch on behalf of young women in restaurants, &c., Miss L. Trotter and Mrs. McNeile spoke of the vast importance of catering for these, and especially of looking after friendless girls arriving in our great cities. Attention to the equally great needs of foreign young women in England was claimed by Mrs. Higson (Norwood); and Miss Fothergill (Darlington) put in an earnest plea for the cultivation of a missionary spirit.

After an interval, another meeting was held, under the presidency of Lady Beauchamp. Earnest spiritual addresses were given by Miss Raymond (Brixton) and Miss Thwaites (Salisbury). A paper by Mrs. Bayly (Streatham) was read, in which the special social dangers that surround the path of young women were wisely and delicately discussed, and preventive methods pointed out. Miss Wills urged the claims of total abstinence, and Hon. Emily Kinnaird drew attention to the need of imparting such education as would fit young women for the responsibilities of family and domestic life. The very important subject of "Literature" was dealt with in a paper by Miss Denny (London), who earnestly invited gifts of good and attractive books for the Y.W.C.A. libraries. The work of junior branches and that among factory and laundry girls was also described by several ladies practically conversant with them. Secretaries from different parts of the country reported progress in their various districts, and the interesting engagements of the day were terminated by a prayer-meeting after tea.

PUBLIC MEETING.

The great hall was crowded from end to end in the evening with an audience composed, with hardly an exception, of women, most of them being in the springtime or early summer of life. Some speakers remarked on the striking contrast in the appearance of the hall from that of the previous evening, when the young men's anniversary was held. Once more we had to suffer the disappointment of Lord Shaftesbury's inability to preside, though he sent a very cordial letter expressing unabated interest in the welfare of the fair clients of the Association. Mr. Campbell-White, of Glasgow, kindly took the chair in the absence of the noble Earl. An excellent report, read by Mr. W. T. Paton, showed a considerable increase both in the number of branches, in the membership, and in the general work of the Association at home and abroad. On the question of finances, Mr. Paton said that £3000 were wanted at this juncture for proposed developments of the work.

The Chairman reported favourably on the progress of the work north of the Border. They were just about to erect a Young Women's Institute in Glasgow, at a cost of £12,000.

Rev. H. Price Hughes believed that the future historians of the world would record that the May meetings now being held in London, would be of more importance in moulding the destinies of the race than the debates in the House of Commons. Of all the May meetings none could be more important than this. It is only now, after the lapse of 2000 years, that we are giving woman the place of equality which she lost through the fall, and to which Christ restored her. We are beginning to discover that she has a mind that can be developed. The stress of modern industry, however, has greatly imperilled the safety of family and social life. From the very constitution of society there must be many young women who can never be married. That is a serious fact that ought not to be regarded from a "giggling" standpoint, as it too often is. The position of woman to-day is perhaps more defenceless than ever; at the same time she is better guarded—if she is a Christian. If not, how can she hope to meet the perils of London life? The gifted George Eliot professed herself a sceptic, but we have lately learned that she rejected Christianity virtually because she was ignorant of it. The speaker told of a highly-educated young woman of his acquaintance who became a Roman Catholic, and who fell into the common error of drawing a line of demarcation between a "religious" and a "secular" life. This distinction is nothing more than a relic of mediæval superstition. "Divine service" does not commence at 11 o'clock on a Sunday morning, as we are sometimes told on the notice-board of the church, but at six o'clock in the morning, when the servant or the daughter rises, and begins to make ready the family breakfast. There are many women who have to lead obscure and even dull, monotonous lives, who are yet serving God as much as the preacher of the Gospel. Mr. Hughes proceeded to exhort his fair hearers to help in securing a greater atmosphere of purity, in spreading the principles of total abstinence, in promoting work among the poor, and in stopping the insane war feeling that is abroad. If it is true that woman brought sin into the world, it is true, at the same time, that the seed of the woman has bruised the head of the serpent. Might all before him be like those true-hearted women who were last at the cross and first at the sepulchre.

Rev. E. A. Stuart addressed the young women from the words, "We love Him because He first loved us." If they could but get a glimpse of Christ and his love to them, they would not think it any hard thing to love Him in return. The rest of love, the confidence of love, the obedience of love, the activity of love, the sharp-sightedness of love, the companionship of love, and the memory of love, were expounded in turn from passages in the Gospel of John ("the disciple whom Jesus loved"), and applied to the everyday life of the young women. He exhorted them every morning to get some little word from the Bible, and roll it as a sweet morsel under the tongue the whole day through; getting good thoughts in is the best way to keep evil thoughts out.

An interesting part of the proceedings was the presentation of a number of prizes for excellence in Bible study. The Stratford choirs sang some choice pieces during the evening.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.—At the monthly meeting for workers held on Wednesday evening, the 15th inst., at the Home of Industry, Commercial-street, Mr. Merry, who has arrived from Canada, and Mr. E. H. Glenny gave earnest exhortations. Mr. Baron spoke on the present state of the Jews. Three things, he said, are necessary to aim at in going among them—viz., to remove their prejudices, correct their erroneous notions, and manifest the Christ life. At Birmingham a large meeting has just been held at which several Jews in high life were present and manifested the deepest interest in the teaching concerning the Messiah. Miss Macpherson introduced to the meeting a Jewish worker, who asked prayer for a Bible-class he is conducting among Jews in connection with the Home. Stirring words were spoken by Miss Macpherson as to the work in the neighbourhood and the need of helpers.

YOUNG MEN AT EXETER HALL.

FOR the first time, we believe, during the forty years' history of the London Y.M.C.A., Lord Shaftesbury was this year unable to be in his accustomed seat as chairman of the annual meeting. At the opening of the proceedings in Exeter Hall last Thursday evening, a letter was read from the Earl deeply regretting his compulsory absence, and paying a warm tribute to the worth of the late Lord Cairns. As Mr. J. H. Tritton remarked, after reading the letter, there was only one possible chairman in the lamented absence of their President, and that was Mr. George Williams, the Treasurer. This choice was ratified by the loud and long applause of the crowded audience.

Prayer having been offered by Bishop Perry, an abstract of the report was read by the new and stalwart Secretary, Mr. E. J. Kennedy, who received a most cordial welcome. The report was made up of the usual details as to the different branches of work carried on by and on behalf of young men, but was not marked by any feature of special interest. "The primary aim has been the salvation of the souls of those who have come in contact with the Association; around this important centre have circled the different agencies." These comprise, in the order stated, a daily prayer-meeting, evangelistic services, Bible classes and lectures, social gatherings, foreign missionary meetings, educational classes, athletics, &c. The financial statement would have been most satisfactory but for an outstanding loan of which £750 is yet unpaid, and the balance of mortgage debt on the building amounting to £8000. The adoption of the report was formally moved by the Marquis of Ailsa, and seconded by Mr. H. Arbuthnot, who urged that this mortgage debt ought to be cleared out of the way at once.

The Chairman said the year had on the whole been a prosperous one, though there was this little matter of £8000 outstanding; but they were not afraid of that; they had good friends in the City who would help them. After some pleasant recollections of the International Conference last year at Berlin, Mr. Williams said he had just received a letter from the second city in Japan stating that they had a flourishing Association which is exercising an influence for good; they are hoping soon to have a building that will accommodate 1000 young men.

Mr. J. H. Tritton read a resolution of condolence with Lord Shaftesbury in his time of physical weakness, praying that he might be restored to health and thus be able to benefit by his presence and counsel the many Christian institutions with which he is so intimately connected. The transmission of this message to his lordship was voted by acclamation.

The three set addresses of the evening were worthy of the occasion. It was, if we mistake not, the first appearance of Rev. Professor Elmslie as a speaker at an Exeter Hall anniversary. We can only say that we hope he will be seen and heard there many a time and oft in the years to come. The Presbyterian body at large, and the Queen-square College in particular, are to be congratulated on the possession of such a gifted man—one who has evidently sat to some purpose at the feet of his whilom colleague in the ministry of Regent-square Church, Dr. Oswald Dykes.

CANON FLEMING ON SPIRITUAL TEMPTATIONS.

"Is the young man safe?" is a question that many parents are asking about their sons in this great London. There are hosts of these sons who are without a home in the true sense of the word, and we want them all to be safe. Safe in London? Yes, because safe in Christ. There are temptations everywhere, though it is true that the pitfalls set for the feet of the young in London are more than usually appalling. As to spiritual temptations, of which he had specially to speak, there was first the danger of forgetting and forsaking youthful habits of devotion and of study. It is not easy always to "stand fire" in a place like London, where there are so many to oppose; but we have had many noble examples. If all cannot be a Cairns or a Gordon or a Studd, all may "dare to be a Christian." Another danger to be guarded against in London is irreligious associations. A man in a great city must have associates of some kind, and here the value of the Y.M.C.A. comes in. If good companions are not sought out, evil ones will soon present themselves. But no young man need be without the best associates, and the purest enjoyments, if he will enrol himself in the ranks of this institution. The fountains of worldly pleasure will never slake the thirst of the soul, but he who comes to Christ and who companies with those who love and serve Him, will find lasting and solid happiness in the present and good hope for the future.

DR. CLIFFORD ON INTELLECTUAL TEMPTATIONS.

As Christ is the source and the strength of our spiritual life, so, too, He is our guide and inspiration in intellectual struggles. Let us not willingly harbour spectres of the mind; doubt need not be invited. But if these temptations come unsought, let us face them with courage and faith in the God of truth, who will help us through. They must be fought, as Christ fought the tempter, with the sword of the Spirit—the Word of God. These intellectual temptations will come in this inquiring age—a free Press and free speech are scattering them everywhere. The assailing voices of doubt and scepticism meet us on every hand. To many honest and truth-loving souls these temptations come with peculiar force, but for the most sorely-tempted there is a word of courage and hope. Fear is paralysis, but faithfulness is victory. One strong temptation in these times is to deem knowledge a greater thing than character—to appraise intellectual skill as higher than purity and righteousness of life. We are in danger of becoming thinkers rather than doers. I do not depreciate intellect or knowledge. I rejoice in a theological tournament, and am glad that we can get the great thoughts of great minds for a penny a week, as well as some of the dreariest philosophy at half-a-crown a month! But man is not simply a logic-chopping animal; he is more than 48 ozs. of gray brain matter, with thinking as its only function. Some references by the speaker to General Gordon as a "doer" were loudly applauded. Christ's last approving sentence is not "Well guessed," but "Well done!" Like Christ, let us be about our Father's business. Many fall because they "think" when they ought to "obey." Another danger is that of confounding intellectual conceptions of Christianity with its essential and eternal principles. It has been asserted that Christians are always fighting about theories, but it is not true; here, at least, in the Y.M.C.A. we are concerned with facts and deeds. Christians have differed, do differ, and must differ, in their statements of truth, so long as they think at all; but behind all differing expressions there is the essential substance of the faith once delivered to the saints. A living, personal trust in Christ brings the only possible solution of many difficulties. Another temptation is that of thinking that the teachings of physical science give us a greater foothold of certainty than Christian faith. On this point Dr. Clifford quoted a strong commendation by Mr. Gladstone of the biography of Ellen Watson, who, though a great scientific thinker and student, found no peace of soul, no certainty and satisfaction, till she rested on the revelation of God in Christ. Trust Christ and obey Him in the midst of all doubt and difficulty, and you will be able to face and master all the intellectual temptations of life.

PROF. ELMSLIE ON BUSINESS TEMPTATIONS.

Without attempting any concrete presentation of these difficulties, he desired to present some helpful thoughts as to the high ideal that ought to be set before every business man. Life is not a game of chess, with men and women as the inanimate "pieces" being moved by the hand of some player. A man's work shapes him as much as he carves and fashions his work. The slow-moving agricultural labourer is largely the creation of his occupation, as is the keen, restless artisan of the city. Even a clergyman cannot take his holiday without being found out! There is no trade or profession but has its weak points as well as its strong points. Therefore every man ought to take stock of his life's calling and see where its pinch lies. Let him see, too, how his work is done; on that will very much depend the development of his character in the direction of honesty, and thoroughness, or of the opposite. When a man is not master he loses one great stimulus, he is tempted to "scamp" his work. This is one of the great curses of modern industry, and is as bad as the direct breach of one of the ten commandments. Such a man is really a defaulter in the eyes of all honest men; while he is scamping his work he is forming himself into a scamp. There is a danger also of a shrinkage in the mental capacities, by the engrossments and specialities and mechanisms of the world's industries of to-day. A man must, therefore, find other outlets for the exercise of those powers that cannot be brought into play by his daily occupation. Another danger is that of being so exhausted by the stress of daily toil that mind and spirit suffer through the weight that has to be borne by the body. The need for patient waiting for earthly advancement will prove another danger unless a man is sustained by faith and hope and trust in God. Let no man despise his trade, or think a business life cannot be a heroic one. The world of "quality" too often sneers at business as a vulgar thing, but the accusation is foul and false. A great life-actor may be found on the boards of a barn; on the other hand, a ninny is a ninny, though he have a seat in the House of Lords. Some of the greatest and most heroic tragedies of life, bringing out noble qualities of heart and brain, have been enacted in the busy marts of London's City.

The combined Evangelistic Choirs of North London and Stratford discoursed much sweet music during the evening, and altogether the young men and their friends had a good time.

MR. J. M. SCROGGIE AT BLACKHEATH.

IT puts one in mind of old times to see Mr. J. M. Scroggie, the Scottish evangelist, again at work in the suburbs of London. Many will remember that a year ago he ministered to the "overflows" from the great meetings at New Cross, and there are many who had reason to remember him with a pleasure which rather increases than dies away.

The present scene of his work is at Blackheath, and we have the satisfaction to report that much blessing is accompanying. For the past fortnight meetings have been held every night, with the exception of Saturday, and it is expected they will be continued till the end of the month. Last Friday evening in the Alexandra Hall he had the assistance of Rev. J. Wilson, of Woolwich, and the Woolwich Male Gospel Choir, which rendered very beautifully some of the pieces which, when we hear, we are reminded of Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan. Mr. Scroggie drew his lesson from David's treatment of Mephibosheth, and the details of this story were very skilfully used in illustrating the Gospel message. Many remained to the after-meeting, and the results were most encouraging to Mr. Scroggie and the friends who so ably support him in the work.

ANTWERP EXHIBITION.—Mr. John Stabb, the venerable founder of the Monthly Tract Society, is about to proceed to Antwerp to arrange for the distribution of Tracts and Gospels in various languages during the forthcoming Exhibition. He will also arrange for preaching and general evangelistic work. This effort necessarily involves extra expense, and I shall be glad to receive help from those interested in the extension of Christ's kingdom on the Continent.

J. R. Mackenzie, General Secretary.

LEE AND LEWISHAM Y.W.C.A.—A small Institute in connection with this branch has been opened. There will be evening classes and meetings, and also board and lodging for respectable young women in business. We ask help from your readers for this first year, especially when the expense of furnishing, &c., falls heavily upon our scanty resources. We believe this Institute, which has been called "Cairns House," will be a blessing to the neighbourhood, and the birthplace of many souls.—Yours faithfully, (Mrs.) Anna D. Atkinson (President).

REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND IN GLASGOW.

THE week of meetings at Partick was begun under the most favourable auspices. The attendance was very large, the area of Newton-place Church being filled with the young persons and the Christian workers taking charge and many friends interested in the work. The second night the meeting was about as full. The beautiful church was brightly lighted, the children were happy and well behaved, the workers received them with the greatest pleasantness, the music was charming, and last, but not least, the hearty welcome accorded to all by Mr. Morgan, the minister, put every person perfectly at ease.

When, after a number of hymns and audible prayers by all present, Mr. Hammond proceeded with his address, he was listened to with the utmost attention. It is not easy to secure this from nearly a thousand children, but with the efficient aid of the ushers it was fully obtained. All this, however, was only preliminary to the second meeting, which forms the real business of the evening. It is most striking to observe the deep earnestness which then pervades the assembly. All is forgotten but the one subject of the welfare of the soul for eternity. A great deal of conversation goes on, but it is with deep solemnity. As the friends speak of sin and its condemnation, the utter helplessness of the sinner in the matter of salvation, the love of Jesus, his mighty power to save, his atoning death, the simple acceptance of faith, the new life, new hope, power, new prospects—heads get drawn together, eye meets eye, heart goes out to heart, the tears start and fall down the face, and the final decision is given for Christ. Sometimes prayer follows, sometimes the warm, hearty grasp of the hand, resolution of soul for God and eternity seems to pass as by spiritual power, and the young creatures are lifted to a higher platform. An influence greater than that of man is present and felt. From a merely secular point of view, the scenes presented by such meetings are a school for educating the noblest resolves and enthusiasm of humanity; but, measured by the higher standard, the issues of the decision of a moment are spiritual and eternal.

In the meantime the flood of song flows near the audience, filling the whole house with praise, and the singers are from time to time joined by large groups and clusters of the young, who aid with their sweet voices to increase the full volume of melody. Mr. Hammond relies in a great degree on the use of his hymns in the "Gems of Praise," of which a supply was provided these two nights by a friend anxious to help forward the work. This example might be followed with advantage.

We were glad to see in the noon meeting the large turn-out of ministers and influential laymen in full sympathy with Mr. Hammond's work, ready to support him with their aid so far as their own engagements will allow, and with their prayers. It is quite refreshing to see the hearty feeling of friendship with which he is received on all hands, and it is plain that this is thoroughly met and reciprocated by Mr. Hammond. The noon meeting of Monday was described by some present as the most stirring, most refreshing, and yet most solemn that they had been at for a long time.—Daily Mail, April 15.

CARRUBBER'S CLOSE MISSION.—The fourth annual social meeting of the Carrubber's Close Mission Gospel Temperance Society was held last week. There was a very large audience, about 1500 persons being present. Mr. T. R. Marshall occupied the chair, and many leading friends of the work were on the platform. The Chairman, in his opening address, referred with gratitude to the fact that they had now such a splendid hall, and gave some interesting reminiscences of the hall of former days. Rev. George Wilson moved a resolution calling upon the licensing magistrates to refuse all applications for new licenses and transfers, and also largely to diminish the number of existing licenses which are admittedly out of all proportion to the real wants of the community. Rev. Mr. Grant, Rev. Mr. Campbell, Rev. John Smith, Count Bobrinzki, Dr. Wilson, and others also addressed the meeting.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

GOSPORT.—Mr. H. Cook, Belle-Vue-place, Stoke-road, Gosport, writes that small book-bags and Gospel books for the seamen are much needed.

MR. A. TURNBULL, blind evangelist, Edinburgh, has held three weeks' Gospel services at Backworth, Northumberland, which have been the means of blessing to many.

WE are glad to hear that seventeen new missionaries have been added to the staff of the Manchester City Mission since the new secretary, Mr. J. W. MacGill, entered upon his duties.

MR. A. G. MARMENT has conducted a seven days' Gospel Temperance Mission in Tiverton, with great success. 114 Gospel Temperance pledges were taken. Many abandoned ones started on the "Up line." Mr. Marment possesses a wonderful power. His residence is West Brampton, Newcastle, Staffordshire.

A. M.

ROMFORD.—We have received the interesting information that the late Inspector Simmonds, who was murdered near Romford in January last, and whose faithfulness in the discharge of his duties was very highly spoken of, was an exemplary Christian. The story of his conversion is extracted from the journal of Mr. J. Gulland, a most useful evangelist, during the last twenty-five years, in Essex, but who, we regret to hear, is now in great affliction and trial.

ESSEX.—Mrs. Yeoland laboured with us from November, 1884, to the middle of March, 1885; During that time meetings were held at Maldon, Althorne, Burnham, Bradwell, and Tillingham. At each place the Master owned and blessed her earnest efforts in the salvation of souls. Many of these had been among the worst characters in the places where they lived, and their conversion is being spoken of as a marvellous proof of the power of the Gospel to save men. This good work of grace still goes on.

WILLIAM THOMSETT.

BROUGHTY FERRY, N.B.—Mr. Joseph Cleworth has concluded a three-weeks' mission in connection with the Free Churches here. From each of three congregations ample testimony is borne to the interest his work has created, and the good it has done. The attendance has been exceedingly good; there has been, on the part of many, an earnest desire to find the Saviour, and to realise the power of God's message. The interest which has been awakened is only to be ascribed to a deepening of spiritual life, and the simple, pointed declaration of the Gospel.

W. E. T.

RYDE, I.W.—A series of deeply interesting evangelistic services under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. has lately been held in this town. The mission preachers were Captain Dawson and Mr. John B. Bain. Besides the Gospel services, there were Bible-readings, meetings for Sunday-school teachers and workers, and gatherings of children and mothers. Many anxious ones professed to find peace, and on more than one occasion at the after-meetings upwards of thirty stood up to be prayed for. The ministers of the town and the evangelical clergy cordially joined in the movement.

NEWPORT, MON.—Messrs. Mateer and Parker have closed a three weeks' mission in Newport and vicinity. Services were held in several of chapels, but during the last week they were conducted in the circus rented for this work. Many professed to have decided for Christ, and to have experienced the "new birth." The meetings held in the Circus were largely attended by non-churchgoers; and it is believed that many of them have been saved through this mission. The visits of these devoted brethren cannot but be blessed to all the churches that may have their co-operation.

J. D.

SWINDON.—Mr. Wm. Nobbs preached in the Central Hall and Merton Hall nearly every night of January, and several were led to Christ. Believers were greatly refreshed, and wished him to visit them again. So he was there for March, and again the Lord gave much blessing to believers, and some were led to Christ. He baptised also in Central Hall nine men and four women. There are between 200 and 300 in fellowship there, and most of them are very warmhearted Christians; one who was baptised had been led to Christ through Mr. Nobbs two years ago, when visiting Swindon. He now superintends the Sunday-school at Central Hall. He is the son of an engine driver whom Mr. Nobbs was used to lead to Christ, and baptised with others about 22 years ago. "Instead of the fathers, the children." "Praise the Lord, O my soul." Mr. Nobbs will be glad of prayer, that he may be guided in all future work.

CHERBOURG, FRANCE.—DEAR SIR,—I have just returned from a three weeks' visit to Cherbourg, where I have been helping in the work begun on board the Mystery by Mr. Lerendu. Meetings have been held night after night on board, the saloon and cabin being crowded, and many on deck listening by the opened hatchways. Many soldiers and sailors attend, and we are contemplating the establishment of a permanent mission in that important and hitherto neglected field. Many have testified to the good they have received. There is also an important sphere of work among our English seamen. Two lines of steamers run regularly from England, and many English ships trade there, but there is no place at present for the men but the public-house or cafés. Mr. H. Cook, of Gosport, is unable on account of his other engagements to undertake the French work, but is willing to lend his vessel for the work as long as it seems the Lord's will. I feel it laid on my heart to carry on the work thus begun, looking to the Lord for the supplies. My friend Lerendu is unprovided for, but is also ready to go on in faith, trusting in the Lord. My permanent address is 45, Colomberie, Jersey.

A STORY OF VILLAGE WORK.

DEAR SIR,—It may be of some interest to your readers if I tell briefly of meetings that were held on Good Friday at Shipton, in Hampshire, especially when the circumstances leading up to those meetings are taken into consideration. Shipton is a village situated about a mile and half from Tedworth. The late Mr. Studd lived there—being master of the Tedworth Hounds, and a great sportsman. Some of your readers may know the story of Mr. Studd's conversion. When Messrs. Moody and Sankey were in London ten years ago, a friend who was interested in the work of the evangelists sent copies of THE CHRISTIAN to Tedworth House. Mr. Studd was attracted by the reports of the London meetings, and determined to go and hear the preacher. He went to London, heard Mr. Moody, and was converted, Mrs. Studd and other members of the family being also led to Christ. Upon this great change, other changes followed. The race-horses were disposed of, the dogs given up, and the enthusiastic sportsman became an earnest disciple of the Lord Jesus. The hall of the mansion was used for religious services, the preachers being supplied by Mr. Studd through the Evangelisation Society and others.

But the Lord called his servant to himself, and the other members of the family soon left Tedworth. The Christians there (and many I was told found the Lord during the time the services were held at Tedworth) then had some difficulties to contend with. Mr. Studd's successor having no sympathy with the meetings, they had to be discontinued for want of a place to meet in. Not being able to obtain a site in the immediate vicinity of Tedworth, the nearest patch of ground that could be bought was at Shipton. Here an iron room has been erected, which makes a very comfortable room for services. Here the Christians have been and still are holding their meetings.

With others I received an invitation to meet with them on Good Friday, and truly it was good to be there. Friends were gathered there from Devizes and Salisbury. Mr. Hallet, of Bath, was there to meet and encourage the Christians at Shipton. The meetings took the shape of Bible-readings, morning and afternoon, and a meeting for Gospel addresses at night. Dinner was provided for friends from a distance at one o'clock, and there was a public tea in the afternoon. It was felt to be a precious and a profitable time. The expositions of Scripture by Mr. Hallet were especially helpful.

When the departure to China of Mr. C. T. Studd has given such a joy to the Church at large, it was particularly interesting to move among the old servants of Tedworth House, and hear their humble and very natural recital of the change wrought in the lives of the family. I could not convey to you anything like an adequate idea of the interesting details I was able to hear from the lips of the people, regarding this work of God.

Letters to the Editor.

STORES v. SHOPS.

SIR,—In answer to "Dubitans," I would say I have had always the same conscientious scruples about buying my goods at Co-operative Stores, or at any so-called wholesale place at a distance from where I live. Once for all I settled the question for myself, and quieted my mind, and kept a good conscience in the matter, by obeying the command to "love my neighbour." We often read and hear sermons from the text, "What shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world and lose his soul?" It may with equal propriety be said (and with Scripture sanction), "What shall it profit a man if he gain a few shillings or pounds annually by going to the Stores, and losing the esteem and love of his neighbours, as well as the opportunity to glorify God his Father, and have power and influence for good among those neighbours?"

I was on a visit lately to a friend who had thoughts on this very matter, and, after talking it over, he came to the conclusion that as money was a talent to be used rightly, and for God and his neighbour, he saw and said "that one of the first uses of the money was to buy daily necessaries, and that in buying them of his neighbours he was doing them good, enabling them to get a living and pay taxes, and in their turn do good again to others." In most cases I find in town or village that the tradesman who finds me a ready-money customer is quite willing to give me every advantage in return for dealing with him in preference to sending to London Stores. At the end of the year I believe I am better off, for I have no carriage of goods to pay nor any trouble. CERTUS.

SIR,—Travelling as I do into scores of towns, I am able to speak with knowledge on the dire effects this Co-operative movement has had on almost every branch of trade and manufacture. Knowing the customs and usages of retail trades, I can vouch for the inaccuracy of the statement in "Dubitans'" letter, "that the tradesman has no other chance of doing a lucrative business than to get all he can from his ready-money customers." Bad debts to a retail or wholesale trader are the same as death in the flock to a farmer, and have to be written off the profits, whilst ready-money customers are now, and have been for years, allowed a discount off their purchases in a large majority of retail shops, not charged a percentage to make up for bad debts. It is a gross libel to say that such is generally the case throughout the country.

If this evil, selfish, grasping spirit is persisted in the results will be very disastrous. Officers in the army and navy derive their pay to a large extent from the taxes paid by the retailers of the country; how much are they returning to those who have to find their salaries? By building up colossal Civil Service, Army and Navy, and other Stores, are the members of such doing unto their neighbour as they would he should do unto them? "Live and let live," says Honesty to all his family. "I will live, but you may starve," says Co-operation to the Retailer. What Christian can hesitate as to his proper course in this matter?

MANUFACTURER.

SIR,—None, I think, among your readers have valued more than I the articles on Trade, but my opinion has been during this discussion—and is still —that this subject of "Co-operative Stores" is second to none in importance in its bearing on this question. I am not inclined to instruct "Dubitans," the whole thing to my mind being, beyond question, for Christians, an abomination. What "Dubitans" says about trade with country shops compared with the Stores is certainly not correct. As far as my experience goes country shopkeepers have to help poorly-paid people through and out of their difficulties while the money often goes to the Stores. We hear a great deal of the "Bitter Cry." Have "the Stores" nothing to do with that cry? If the money is sent to the Stores, and country districts are drained, what are the people to do but go to large cities to work for the starvation wages of which we are so often told in your paper?

I should like to tell "Dubitans" that "there is no such thing as half-pay," and if he obtains goods cheaper at the Stores, he thereby, to the extent of that cheapness, contributes to the "Bitter Cry." T. S.

DEAR SIR,—I reside in a bright, pleasant town, about one hundred miles from London; from its situation by the sea, and its lovely surroundings, it is a favourite summer resort, and has in its vicinity many handsome residences occupied by wealthy persons. Time was when it was a flourishing place; the principal street was filled with nice shops, and an air of prosperity pervaded the place. Alas! it is different now; in the street I speak of many shops are closed, in most cases because the owners have been unable to meet their liabilities. Shopmen and others in their service are thus thrown out of employ, and they, instead of being employers of labour, have joined the enormous number who are seeking employment.

I recently went into a shop in this street, and was surprised at the delay in getting the article for which I had asked; the young attendant apologised, saying it had, with other things, been packed up, preparatory to giving up the business. I expressed surprise at business being at such a low ebb, in a town where there were so many wealthy residents and summer visitors. She replied: "If these people acted as they ought to do, there would be abundance of business for all; the tradesmen have largely contributed to providing the attractions of the place, and they naturally expect a return by having a share of the custom of the residents. These persons, however, purchase literally nothing in the town, except milk, meat, and vegetables; they get all their other supplies from London stores. Many of them give away tracts, and talk of religion; yet, instead of 'loving their neighbours as themselves,' and doing as they would be done by, they are actually taking the bread out of the mouths of shopkeepers, their wives, and children."

CRUEL CHEAPNESS: SUGGESTIONS.

SIR,—I have been much interested in the articles and letters on this subject which have appeared in your recent numbers. May I offer one suggestion for lessening the evil, namely, that ladies should buy their own material and place it in the hands of the needlewoman direct, paying a fair price for the work, thus avoiding the intervention of the middleman, and the warehouse and shopkeepers? It might involve more personal trouble in seeking out the needy and reliable workwoman, but it would be far more benevolent than elaborate charity organisations, which often pauperise the undeserving.

I have recently met with an instance of a widow at the East-end making tennis-aprons for a City house at fivepence per dozen, finding her own thread, and having to fetch and deliver. Out of what sort of homes and hands can these articles come? G.

Redhill.

DEAR SIR,—You invited suggestions on the subject of "Cruel Cheapness" and the remedy. May I briefly sketch a plan which I have had in mind for some months past, but have withheld, hoping to be forestalled by some more influential person?

I propose that a large Society should be formed in three branches—

(1) Manufacturing and wholesale traders.
(2) Retail traders.
(3) Customers.

(1) The manufacturing branch should pledge itself to pay fair rates to all needle-workers employed, such rates to be settled by a Board, and published monthly in certain newspapers. The rates paid to miners in the North are thus settled, and revised and published at intervals, so surely the plan could be extended. The wholesale traders who are not manufacturers, to pledge themselves to buy only of such manufacturers as belong to the Association.

(2) Retail dealers to pledge themselves to buy only of such wholesale merchants as belong to the Association, or pay Association prices for work.

(3) Customers—ladies and others, pledged to buy only of retailers belonging to the Association.

The list of members of each branch to be printed; the list of branches 1 and 2 to be published as widely as possible.

I think, Sir, that if our leading City and West-end firms organised something of this kind, ladies would gladly co-operate. As things now are, they have no security that by paying higher prices at one shop than another they are thereby contributing to the better remuneration of the workers.

The publication of wages seems to me to be the keynote of the scheme.

I write to you, Sir, because your paper deals with these subjects more frankly and impartially than any other with which I am acquainted.

ONE OF THE MANY.

THE LEGAL PROTECTION OF MINORS.

SIR,—The Criminal Law Amendment Bill has been re-introduced by the Government, and has already passed its second reading; but I regret to say that the age of protection has been lowered from sixteen to fifteen. This means that protection will only be given up to the fifteenth birthday. The Bill, if it passes, will only protect girls of fourteen even from the trade of vice. The measure will be therefore practically useless.

I want the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to realise what this deliberate lowering of the age of protection accorded to the young means. In the House of Lords the Bishop of Peterborough gave a case that came under his own eye—that of a very respectable working man, whose daughter of fifteen or sixteen got enticed into a den of infamy. He went to the authorities to know if the law gave him power to enter that house and claim his own child. He was informed that the English law gave him no such power; "though," as the Bishop sarcastically remarked, "if the woman had stolen his spoons instead of his daughter, he could have gone to the nearest magistrate and taken out a search-warrant, and entered the house and recovered his stolen property."

In the case of the so-called "Infant School" at Hull, in which the police found fourteen children, the oldest only fifteen, it came out in the trial that the poor mothers had gone repeatedly to the house and endeavoured to rescue their children, but had been driven off by the prisoner "with horrible abuse," having no legal power to enforce their parental claim. The man was arrested and fined £100, not for having made his living out of the souls and bodies of these unhappy children, but on the ground that he had sold unlicensed liquor. The liquor is sacred, and guarded by the law, but the bodies and souls of our children are not.

The lowering of the age to fifteen means, therefore, a deliberate attempt on the part of our legislators to limit to the age of fourteen the right of a poor parent to rescue his own child from a life of infamy, and out of the hands of those who are trading on her corruption, and thereafter to hand over his rights to the keeper of a den of infamy. It means that we are to consider "infant schools" such valuable institutions for other large towns besides Hull, that parents and legal guardians, as well as the community at large, must have no power of interfering with them, but must be liable to be driven off from their sacred precincts "with horrible abuse." It means that England, through her two Houses of Legislature, is to be made to declare in favour of vicious children of fifteen. Are we going, as a nation, to submit to this?

It is no use pointing out to us that the Bill raises the age at which abduction is an indictable offence from sixteen, where it stands now, to eighteen, for the law against abduction will always be practically inoperative in the great majority of cases, for three reasons. First, it only applies to a girl in the custody of her father or her legal guardian. The mass of our working-class girls are out in situation or in business soon after they leave school at thirteen. Secondly, it does not apply to the commonest case of all, a little, unruly girl, who, in a fit of temper, runs off of her own accord. No one abducts her, she abducts herself; and the vilest den of infamy can harbour that child in her fit of naughtiness, against the will of her parent, and make a profit of her corruption. Nor does it in any way apply to an orphan girl, who especially needs protection of the law.

Nor will it help us in dealing with our wretched home evils, or give us increased facilities in prosecuting the agents who recruit for this nefarious traffic, invaluable as that clause in the Bill will be in putting a stop to the exportation of our English girls. But our young girls at home, for the most part, drift into the open traps that the law allows to be set for them on every side, partly through temper, idleness, poverty, and the standing bribe of plenty of money and no hard work to our poor little maids-of-all-work, too young to have the instincts of a woman to guard them; a formal agent is very rarely employed. If the ever-increasing number of almost childish victims which makes our streets the shame and disgrace of our land, and fastens on us the terrible stigma of taking no care of our young, is to be effectively dealt with, it must be by making harbouring an indictable offence up to the full legal age of majority, or at least up to eighteen, and by giving the legal guardian a right of search.

What, then, can we do? As a practical measure I would suggest to anyone who has a vote, or who is the wife of a householder, to write at once to their own member of Parliament, protesting against the lowering of the age of protection, and requesting them to vote for the Amendment which will be moved for restoring the age recommended by the Committee of the House of Lords, and originally adopted in the Bill. I should suggest enclosing the private leaflet, stating what is going on, called "The Legal Protection of the Young," Papers C. and D., drawn up by eminent London barristers, and possibly a copy of "England's Law for Women and Children," all of which can be had at Messrs. Hatchards, Piccadilly.

Owing to the necessary reticence we have endeavoured to observe on this painful question—a reticence that only the fell compulsion of having at any cost to save the children forces one to break through—there is a widely diffused feeling in both Houses of Legislature that this is a question to which the country is indifferent, and that there is no public feeling to back up a more thorough-going measure. The first step is to dispel that impression. Some of the purest and highest men that we have are in the House of Commons; men like Mr. W. E. Forster, Mr. Samuel Smith, Mr. Samuel Morley, and many others. These men will work with us heart and soul as soon as the Bill comes down to the Lower House. Let us strengthen their hands by doing our utmost to drive home to the heart and conscience of the individual M.P. that this is a question on which the country is thoroughly determined. The right and sound feeling of the nation will soon spread to its representatives, and we shall get a righteous law which will enforce the rights of the poor as well as the rich father, and which will protect the working-class girl who has only her character wherewith to earn her bread, as well as the rich heiress whom by the present law it is felony to touch up to the age of twenty-one, punishable with twelve years' imprisonment.

INFORMATION WANTED.

DEAR SIR,—The attention of some young men is being drawn to New Zealand and Tasmania at the present time as fields for evangelisation. I know at present of two or three who are entertaining the former country as a sphere for mission work. I believe that if some of your readers, who are acquainted with the present state of these countries in connection with the Lord's work, would communicate a little of their experience, such would be read with great interest, and no doubt with profit.

Yours faithfully, EVANGELIST.

THE SOUDAN.

DEAR SIR,—It would be extremely interesting at the present moment if some information were given about the Swedish Mission set agoing nearly twenty years ago in the same region, I believe, where war now rages. I am not sure if the notorious Osman Digna had not something to do with the persecution that arose against the missionaries soon after they began their work. Some of them, I think, were murdered, and what ultimately became of the Mission I never heard; or whether it or any trace of it exists still, I do not know. I met some of the first missionaries at Cairo on their way from Sweden to Suakim, and would feel a great interest to know, as no doubt many more of your readers would, whether the Mission survives now, and if not, why it left the field. I trust that war, however, terrible in itself, may prove on this occasion to be "the ploughshare of the Gospel."

Yours truly, W. MACKINTOCH.

DOMESTIC SERVANTS FOR CANADA.

A Home has been opened in Toronto to receive servants of established character on their arrival there to seek employment. Admission to this Home is limited to those emigrants who go out on the application forms in use by the members of the "United Englishwomen's Emigration Association." In my visit to Canada last year I found the demand for servants spread over every part of that vast territory. The great facilities which exist for young women settling early in life creates perpetual vacancies. The work is hard, for in many families one servant only is kept, and where the mistress works hard herself, she expects a good deal from her servant. But the pay is good, and the climate, though severe, is healthy and bracing.

I can receive some applications from ladies who wish to help worthy young women to emigrate, but as the forms of certificate are strict, no one without thoroughly good recommendations would be eligible.—Yours, &c., (Hon. Mrs.) E. JOYCE.

St. John's Croft, Manchester.

NOTES FROM NOVA SCOTIA.

DEAR SIR,—Many Christians will be interested in hearing of God's work in this part of Nova Scotia. We have truly had a wonderful time of blessing. After the Week of United Prayer Gospel meetings were held in Truro five nights a week, and on Sunday afternoons, for two months. We had very soon a wonderful breakdown; at the after-meetings the Christian workers were busy night after night dealing with large numbers of inquirers. A deeper, truer work of God I have never seen. Truro was shaken, Christians were quickened, the drinking bars were deserted, everyone was talking of the meetings.

Space will not admit of my entering into details. Upwards of three hundred converts have joined the churches through these meetings, and about ninety have joined our Y.M.C.A. This only partially represents the spiritual results of this unspeakably blessed work. All ages and classes have received a blessing; many dead formalists have been truly converted, and are now full of thankfulness and joy.

The work spread all round into the country, and we have had meetings for many miles round Truro. Night after night, sometimes in terrible snowstorms, the people gathered, driving many miles in open sleighs to hear the Gospel message. At Onslow, near here, we have had a great break-down, and have been busy night after night with inquirers at the after-meetings. Thank God, the work still goes on, and sinners are coming home to God. I really think nearly half of those who attend my mission hall have been converted since the year began at these special meetings, and we are all rejoicing together.

Our brother, William Mickle, a Nova Scotian (educated at Princeton College, U.S.), has been the chief instrument, in God's hand, for bringing about this wonderful work. Gifted with rich natural gifts, and with the consecration, earnestness, and wonderful simplicity of our brother Moody, he is just such a man as we need in Gospel work, and he has truly built up believers in Bible truth. Young men especially have been brought to Christ, and a great many of our farmers have remained to the after-meetings, and have decided for Him. I earnestly hope that God will lay it upon the heart of one of our gifted sisters to come over from England to have a campaign among the women with the co-operation of the earnest workers of the Y.W.C.A. All Canada has been cursed with formalism and dead evangelism; abundant signs show now that showers of blessing are coming upon the whole Dominion.

Yours faithfully,
ARTHUR F. GURNEY.

Wick House, near Truro, N.S., April 1.

DEAF AND DUMB EMIGRATION.—In a pamphlet entitled "A Future for the Deaf and Dumb," Miss Jane E. Groom advocates the emigration of persons so afflicted to North-West Canada, on the ground that it would alleviate the suffering they endure in this country from poverty and inability to earn a living. She desires to "form a colony of these sorely-afflicted people, where they would be able to keep themselves in comfort, and where they might cast off their shackles of semi-pauperism, which almost overpower their present efforts to support themselves." Her plans are already matured, and friends so desiring can communicate with her at 235, Dalston-lane, Hackney, E.

PADDINGTON-GREEN CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL.—The second annual meeting of the contributors to this hospital was held on Thursday, April 16. Mr. George Hanbury, the treasurer, presided. The honorary secretary, Mr. W. Mitchell, Carruthers, read the report for 1884, which stated that 288 in-patients had been admitted during the year, and that 9356 new out-patient cases were attended, the total attendances being 29,328, or an increase of 10,669 over those of 1883. There were 398 casualty cases which received attention. The hospital provides twenty-five cots. The yearly expenditure is about £1700, towards which there is a subscription list of £679. During 1884 a sum total of £258 was subscribed by the working men of the district. On December 31 there yet remained a debt of £1000 upon the hospital.

EVENTIDE.

"At evening time it shall be light."

O SAVIOUR, as the lengthening shadows creep
Across the moorland in the evening grey,
Seems it the ending of that weary day
Thine own have waited for Thee. Yet they sleep
Who could not watch beside us for one hour.
Forgive them, Lord; they have not known the rest
Of leaning on thy bosom, where, full blest,
They should have had from Thee the watcher's power.

Mine eyes are lifted to the pent sky-cope—
I hear the distant murmurings on the shore
Of signs and wonders, and above the roar
I catch the gladness of a new-found hope.
Thou'rt coming! O my Lord, thou'rt very near,
I seem to hear the music of thy feet
Descending in the clouds of heaven—sweet
And restful numbers to the watcher's ear.

The world is weary, Lord; it needs thy peace—
The wrinkles of unrest are on its brow;
It may not hearken to thy message, now,
But bid thou, Lord, its wars and conflicts cease,
And men and brethren, watching for the dawn
That ushers in the glory of the King,
Shall whisper, heart to heart, the hopes that bring
A blessing on the sun-tipp'd wings of morn.

O Servant, Elder Brother, Saviour, Christ,
The weariness of earth is on me set,
And tears of longing dew mine eyelids; yet
I know Thee faithful—Thou wilt keep the tryst.
The shadows deepen—can it be thy voice
Will break the midnight watches, calling deep
Through gloom and silence, wakening out of sleep
The heir of promise, and thy child of choice?

O Master, as these wond'rings on me press,
Guide Thou my feeble vessel through the storm;
Let me in all behold thy pitying form
Beside me, to uphold me and to bless.

M. BUTLER GERDS.

IN MEMORIAM.

ARTHUR MACGREGOR.

WE laid to rest this afternoon the remains of one of our young open-air mission members in Brompton Cemetery. Arthur, son of Major MacGregor, had not finished his twenty-first year when he was carried off by rheumatic fever after a brief illness. His future was full of hope, but the Lord had need of him for higher service. Mr. John Stevenson (China Inland Mission), in a brief address at the grave, told how our young friend attended the Exeter Hall meeting when the noble band of seven, Stanley Smith, Studd, &c, took leave of England on their way to China. The conviction came to him that night that his path of service lay in China also. But this has not been realised. Surely some young man will be "baptized for the dead," and say, "Here am I; send me."

April 17. G. KIRKHAM.

Y.W.C.A., FINSBURY INSTITUTE.—A sale of work will be held at 31, Finsbury-square, E.C., from the 28th to the 30th inst., on behalf of this institution. It will be opened at 11 a.m. on Tuesday next by Rev. R. C. Billing.

OTLEY AND WHARFEDALE MISSION.—A series of exceedingly interesting and successful meetings was held in connection with this mission on Easter Monday. Perhaps the most interesting, because the most unusual, was the young men's breakfast, to which there sat down 150 young men employed almost exclusively in the various workshops of our town. At the succeeding meeting speeches, admirably adapted to the requirements of young men, were delivered. The afternoon was set apart as the "children's time;" the "bairn's service" was conducted in the Westgate Chapel, which was literally packed from ceiling to floor. In the evening a public tea was held in the Mission Hall, to which at least 400 persons sat down. Afterwards, a crowded and enthusiastic meeting was presided over by Mr. W. S. Greaves, when addresses, characterised by much spiritual power and Christian earnestness, were delivered.

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

Romish Converts.—On Sunday, April 5, Pastor Berthe, of Brest, received thirty converted Roman Catholics at the Lord's Supper. The Presbyterian Church at Valparaiso has also added to its numbers 150 Roman Catholic converts.—Christianisme.

Spezia.—On Sunday, April 12, a conference on Holiness, held in the locale of the Spezia Mission, was attended by numerous believers from the neighbouring churches of the Mission. Two native pastors and Mr. Anderson spoke, and much blessing is expected to the work from that refreshing season.

Native Tribes and Drink.—No liquor is allowed to be sold to any aboriginal native in any portion of the southern part of New Guinea. This was proclaimed to chiefs and people, who were assembled, when the British flag was hoisted for the first time. General Warren will not permit a drop of liquor to be brought into his camp in Bechuanaland.

Don Rafael Blanco, Cadiz, writes: ". . . At Puerto (near Cadiz) we possess a modest seminary, where six young men are preparing to become evangelists, pastors, or schoolmasters. All of them being poor it is but little they can afford. The administrative committee are obliged to supplement whatever is wanting for their maintenance. The sum we require annually for each pupil is £30.

MM. Coillard and Jeanmairet were well when last heard from December 22, 1884. M. Jeanmairet was left at Leshonia, Zambesi, while the rest went on their journey. M. Coillard says: "It is not fever, or other obstacles on the way that affect me, but the rapacity of the poor Zambesians, who, without the least concern, place you on a small island, and there leave you until they have extorted forced presents of all you possess. We keep near the Saviour, and draw patience and love from Him."—Journal Réligieux.

Nice, Italy.—Pastor Muston, who is engaged in a work of evangelisation here, sends forth an interesting statement of the work, which includes free conferences, classes for Biblical instruction, Sunday and evening schools, &c. He has been compelled by circumstances to build a new place of meeting, and an earnest appeal is made to English Christians to help in defraying the cost. Help will be thankfully received by Miss Murray, 15, Grosvenor-crescent, Edinburgh. The work of M. Muston is warmly endorsed and commended by Professor Rainy and Dr. Alexander Whyte, of Edinburgh.

Alpes Maritimes, France.—A work, which is not well known in this country, has been carried on for a good many years amongst some of the mountain villages in the south of France. The evangelist lived at Vence, but by itinerating reached also the villages of La Gande, Cagnes, Lattières, Carros, Le Broe, and others along the Var or near it. Monsieur Lavandry, the evangelist, has been obliged, through lack of funds, to adopt other means of making a livelihood. Should any friends be led to undertake work in this part of the country, such as that referred to in a recent issue in the article, "How a lady works in France," they could not choose a more hopeful field; they would find themselves in a most lovely country, amongst a simple-minded, kindly set of people.

Barcelona, Spain.—A lady missionary in Barcelona writes to a friend in this country: "The advance of God's work here is not rapid. The people are so ignorant, and it seems as though every possible power were employed to keep them in the world. The very priests encourage their entering into all kinds of evil rather than that they should have anything to do with the 'Protestants,' which they say is far worse; nevertheless there have been some real conversions. I want you to pray for my Sunday afternoon Bible-class. The members attend regularly, but I am anxious to get hold of others, especially young women. One young married woman has lately decided for Christ. Last Sunday week her husband, who is bitterly against the truth, told her that if she went to our meeting he should not let her into the house when she returned. She came, and prayed earnestly that God would protect her. When she returned, he never said one word to her. Our Children's Bible Union is making steady progress. Barcelona is in a very unsettled state just now, both politically and in religious matters. The usual holy week processions are forbidden, as last week over 2000 people collected round one church armed with bricks, stakes, &c., to prevent a procession of men and women (who go from one church to another on their knees) coming out."

Evangelical Schools in Italy.—Last year the Girls' School in Pisa suffered a good deal from the opening of a school by the "Nuns of the Sacred Heart," who gave soup at noon, and presents to the children. Now, however, the parents are finding out that the nuns teach literally nothing, and about a dozen little girls have been, in consequence, taken away from them, and are now attending my school. Their teacher tells me the children take much pleasure in the daily Scripture readings. All the teachers this year are themselves old pupils of the schools. The number of pupils in attendance is about 170. Since 1869 up to the present time more than 3000 admissions of pupils have been entered on the rolls of the four schools. A small book describing their origin was published last year by Nisbet and Co. (2d.), entitled, "A Sketch of the Life and Work in Italy of Cav. Professore Paolo de Michelis." S. H. Carruthers.

Notices of Books, &c.

Mr. F. N. Charrington continues bravely to fight The Battle of the Music Halls in a revised pamphlet bearing this title. (1d. Dyer Bros.) The facts it contains ought to rouse every latent effort that the Christian Church can bring into play for the suppression, or at least, if it be possible, the purification of these places of so-called entertainment.

Heart Yearnings. By Francis Markland. 1s. 6d. Chennell & Francis, Camden Town. This is a selection of poems which are both choice and original in subject matter, and forcible and striking in their composition. Many a heart will respond to the expressions of yearning in some, and be strengthened by the comforting assurances contained in others.

The Great Cloud of Witnesses. By Dr. William Landels. Religious Tract Society. 4s. This second series presents a descriptive biography of the worthies mentioned in Hebrews xi. 30—32, i.e., Joshua to David. The main subject considered is "Faith and its Victories," and the practical spiritual lessons which are deduced from the narration cannot fail to be valuable, edifying and instructive.

Romance of Missions in Bithynia. By Maria A. West. Nisbet. 1s. 6d. Here is a book for our missionary daughters, written in a style at once direct, fascinating, full and free—so direct, so faithful, that the reader becomes one with those of whom he reads, and learns more of Bithynia and its people from this simply-written story of a noble work for God than he would from a dozen travellers' stories.

Robert Boyle, Inventor and Philanthropist: A Biographical Sketch. By Lawrence Saunders. Wood & Co., 175, Strand. A bright story of true Christian heroism. As we read through these pages of the almost insurmountable difficulties overcome by the Boyles, father and son; of the good done; the sanitation achieved; the inventions perfected, we see men whose sole aim was to serve God, benefit mankind, and whose example should be held up to all our boys beginning life.

Usury and the English Bishops. This singular pamphlet is simply a collection of extracts from various old and modern divines, &c., on Usury, with a quotation from Carlyle, a preface by Ruskin, and a few woodcut illustrations of by no means a high order. Notwithstanding the fact that the paper is hand-made, and the printing is excellent, were it not for Mr. Ruskin's preface, we should consider the price of the pamphlet (two shillings) as itself a very striking illustration of usury.

Communion Memories. J. R. Macduff, D.D. Nisbet. A new book, by the author of "Morning and Night Watches," needs little introduction. Elevated thoughts of God in Christ, a rich and sanctified imagination, together with deep sympathy for the sorrowful, the suffering and the young, have long distinguished Dr. Macduff, and these gifts pervade the present volume. The address to young communicants, and an address to mourners are worthy of special attention.

Child Life in Chinese Homes. By Mrs. Bryson. 5s. Religious Tract Society. The appearance of this book at a time when so deep an interest exists on behalf of the land of the "Celestials," should secure for it a ready acceptance. But apart from this it is well able to stand upon its own merits. The authoress has had ten years' experience in China, and her narrative is interspersed with interesting and racy anecdotes, whilst the large number of illustrations and the tastefully designed binding fit it for a prominent place on the drawing-room table.

A City Violet. By M. E. Winchester. Seeley. A pathetically-told life-story of a "City Violet," whose odour gives sweetness to many other lives. A book to stimulate its readers to nobler thoughts and deeds.

Story Books.—The following are full of healthy sentiment, and well-suited for presents to boys and girls: The Fisher Village, by Anne Beale (1s. 6d.), is a sensible, practical story, affording an illustration of God's faithfulness in directing the paths of those who acknowledge Him. The Cottage and the Grange, by Evelyn Green (1s.), is a well-written, enjoyable tale, proving that real happiness does not depend upon earthly position and rank. One Good Turn Deserves Another (1s.), contains a series of simple but useful sketches, by Rev. Charles Courtenay, founded principally upon his own parochial experience. Effie Patterson's Story, by Lydia L. Rouse (1s.), sets forth the trials endured by one family during the time of the Covenanters. The narrative form adopted sustains the reader's interest well throughout. The Cottage Door: What I Saw and Heard There (1s.), is a narration of events and characters brought casually under the notice of a convalescent young woman, as she slowly gained strength in the flowery porch. It teaches many valuable lessons. All the foregoing are published by the Religious Tract Society. Jim Bentley's Resolve, by Lydia Rouse (2s., Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier), will be a welcome addition to a juvenile Temperance library. Father's Benjamin, by P. A. Blyth (1s. Jarrold & Sons), shows how subtiley and imperceptibly views of an infidel nature encroach upon the mind of a young man if he gives heed to them. But the "power of the name of Jesus" can overcome them. It is a well-written book, and extremely cheap.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. will shortly commence the issue in monthly parts of "Picturesque Canada," a new fine-art work, uniform with "Picturesque Europe" and "Picturesque America."

Mr. J. Ewing Ritchie ("Christopher Crayon"), who recently paid a visit to Canada, is about to publish through Mr. T. Fisher Unwin, "To Canada with the Emigrants." Among its more useful and important contents are chapters dealing with the present conditions and prospects of emigration in that country.

A series of National Tracts is being published by Mr. W. Wileman, 34, Bouverie-street, E.C., dealing with current topics in their relation to our national duty and shortcomings. Without necessarily endorsing all the views that are advanced in the tracts, we commend them to an attentive perusal and consideration. (1s. 4d. per 100.)

MR. W. G. MARSH, General Secretary of the Melbourne Association, has had to quit all active work for a season by advice of his physicians. It is hoped a few months' rest may produce a change for the better.

THE SALVATION ARMY.—The building to be known as "The Great Western Hall," which immediately adjoins the Edgeware-road Metropolitan Railway Station, will be opened on Saturday, May 2. There are two halls; the upper, with gallery, is seated to contain 3200 people, and the lower will accommodate about 1000 persons. There are fronting in Lisson-street comfortable and commodious rooms, to be used as offices, &c., and in Burne-street, as well as the private entrances to both buildings, are two convenient cottages, which will be used as dwelling-houses. The whole has been secured on lease for sixty-two years.

THE FAR WEST.—Mrs. Richard Davidson, of Bandon, Manitoba, writes:—"The response to my appeal for aid for our Women's Christian Temperance Union has been so hearty and so generous as to enable us to thank God and take courage. The papers received are in eager demand through the vast country lying around and beyond us, settled chiefly by solitary families and 'farm hands,' who welcome anything in the form of reading matter. The attractive Gospel messages sent to us have delighted and astonished us; they have doubtless been accompanied with earnest prayer, and must accomplish the promised mission of God's word, that will not return unto Him void."

YOUNG MEN IN BOW.—The first annual public meeting of the Church of England Young Men's Association was held on Thursday evening last, at St. Stephen's Hall, Saxon-road, Bow, the president, Rev. T. R. Lawrence, presiding. There was a good attendance. Mr. Birks, hon. secretary, read the report, which stated that 114 members and associates had been enrolled. Bible-classes and evangelistic services are held, and other methods adopted for benefitting those who attend. The adoption of the report was moved by Rev. W. P. Insley, and seconded by Rev. C. B. Beard, after which earnest and stirring addresses were delivered by Rev. E. A. Stuart, of St. James's, Holloway, and G. E. Ford, of Stepney. A concluding address was given by the Chairman.

Notes on Daily Readings.

APRIL 23.—JOHN XVII.

Luther bids us consider here, "Who the Man is that thus prays, and who is prayed unto, and how great a thing is prayed for." It is well also to remember when He thus prayed, and why. On the eve of his sacrificial death, and as an intercession for his people; truly a High-priestly prayer.

v. 15.—"I pray not that Thou shouldest take them out of the world."—The Gospel, then, does not withdraw men from the world with any affectation of refinement or superhuman purity. It belongs to man, and reckons nothing that is man's alien to it. Whatever is open to men, that is just and right in business, is open to Christians. . . To be kept from the evil is not to be preserved from misfortune, or sickness, or reproach, or bereavement, but from sin. While others may fix their view on the streams, and seek to filter a portion of the current here and there, we must begin at the fountain-head, and press the prayer: "Create in me a clean heart, O God!"—John Ker.

v. 24.—"I will that they also, whom Thou hast given . . ."—The glory of Christ seems not to be complete until the glorification of his members. The departed saints are happy, yet they have their desires as well as their fruitions. They long for the full perfection of that part of the family still on earth. And Christ, though He fills all in all, and hath Himself a fulness of the beatific glory, yet there is the fulness of the body mystical which He still wants and still desires. His glory will reach its meridian height only when "He comes to be glorified in his saints."—Charnock.

v. 26.—"I have declared, and I will declare."—He is never weary of well-doing. A ground of special comfort to weak and timid Christians, that their beginnings are pledges of further degree. For Christ, where He is Alpha will be Omega; and where He is the Author He will be the Finisher of our faith; where He hath laid the first stone, He will set up the roof at length.—Sibbes.

APRIL 24.—JOHN XVIII.

v. 6.—"They went backward, and fell to the ground."—What a contrast St. John's account of the scene in the garden presents to that of the other Evangelists. Not one word of his prayer, or agony, or of an angel strengthening Him, not a word of his sweat, as it were great drops of blood, or of his apparent longing for sympathy and companionship in that dark hour. Here, instead of weakness and agony, his power appalling his adversaries; and instead of seeking sympathy from his disciples, exercising power to protect them. Surely here is both the peace and the power of heaven even in the bitter cross. He stands as One from whom no one can take his life, unless He please to lay it down. —Jukes.

v. 16.—"Then went out that other disciple, and spake unto."—Lord, I read when our Saviour was examined in the high-priest's hall, that Peter stood without, till John (being his spokesman to the maid that kept the door) procured his admission in. John meant to let him out of the cold, and not let him into temptation; but his courtesy in intention proved a mischief in event, and the occasion of his denying his Master. Oh, let never my kindness concur in the remotest degree to the damage of my friend. May the chain which I sent him for an ornament never prove his fetters. But if I should be unhappy herein, I am sure Thou wilt not punish my good will, but pity my ill-success.—Thomas Fuller.

v. 36.—"My kingdom is not of this world."—Not brought about by carnal methods, nor established upon carnal principles. Given to Him by the Father as the reward of his sufferings, it would be revealed in the Father's own time, and by heavenly power. As a spiritual experience now in the hearts of his people, it separates from the world (ch. xvii. 16); in its coming manifest power it will reduce the whole world to subjection (Rev. xi. 15).

APRIL 25.—JOHN XIX.

v. 11.—"Jesus answered, Thou couldest have no power."—He concedes to Pilate, first—power. He acknowledged the authority of the human court; because his kingdom was not of this earth, destroying human magistracy. Nor did He dispute the power of Pilate and the Romans over the Jews. Secondly, He exalts that power as given from above. This is the Christian doctrine that all power is of God. Thirdly, He acknowledges that that power extended over Himself, since all things touching Him were done by a Divine decree.—Lampe.

v. 41.—"In the place where He was crucified there was a garden."—"Is it not true," asks a living divine, "that in whatever country the cross is planted, there straightway grows a garden? Follow the progress of real and successful missionary work, and you are sure to find this result. Wheresoever Christ crucified is set forth among men—set forth, it may be, with suffering and toil, and with the pains of martyrdom—there in due time the wilderness begins 'to blossom as the rose.' And if we suppose this sacred place, close to the crucifixion at Jerusalem, to have been rather an orchard than a garden, as indeed may well have been the case—a place of fruits still more than a place of flowers—the resemblance here traced becomes more exact. St. Paul, in one of his letters, speaks of Jesus Christ as 'evidently set forth crucified,' among his converts; and in another part of the same epistle he says, that 'the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, gentleness, goodness, faith.' Wheresoever missionary zeal does faithful work, there in the presence of that crucifixion are the fruits of the Lord's garden."

APRIL 26.—JOHN XX.

v. 13.—"Woman, why weepest thou?"—It is a good question after Christ's resurrection. What cause of weeping when Christ is risen? Our sins are forgiven, because He, our Head and Surety, hath suffered death for us; and if Christ be risen again, why weep we? If we be broken-hearted, humbled sinners, that have interest in his death and resurrection, we have no cause to grieve.—Sibbes.

v. 16.—"Jesus turned and said unto her, Mary."—Till Christ begins, no voice in the world can do any good. The angels they spake to her, but till Christ spake nothing could comfort her. Christ used but one word, yet it was enough, there was such fulness of Spirit and power in that word. And she answereth with one word; Christ was so full, and she so full, that a word discovers. She might well call Him "Rabboni," for He was Master of masters, the Angel of the Covenant, the Great Doctor of the Church, at whose feet all must sit and be taught.—Sibbes.

v. 27.—"Then saith He to Thomas, Reach hither. . . ."—The Church has been angry with him ever since, and, in numberless sermons, he has been scolded for his scepticism. Still the scolding continues, and the people rather love to hear it. It requires no grace from God to enable us to rejoice in witnessing the surgical operation of taking motes and beams out of other folks' eyes. If our religion consist largely in hearing other people proved to be heretics, it is a religion which can live and flourish without either "the washing of regeneration, or the renewing of the Holy Ghost." A blessed thing it was for all that the Apostle did not fall into our hands! Who can tell out of what churches he would have been cast, or into what Arches' Courts he would have been cited. Surely the bruised reed would have been broken, and the smoking flax would have been quenched! Happily for him, and for the Church at large, he fell into the hands of his Lord, by whom he was tenderly treated and fully established.—Charles Vince.

APRIL 27.—JOHN XXI.

v. 7.—"That disciple whom Jesus loved, saith, It is the Lord."—Now, and always, as in that morning twilight on the Galilean lake, Christ comes to men. Everywhere He is present, everywhere revealing Himself. Now, as then, our eyes are holden by our own fault, so that we recognise not the merciful presence which is all around us. Now, as then, it is they who are nearest to Christ by love who see Him first. Love to Him strips from our eyes the film that self and sin, sense and custom, have drawn over them. It is these which hide Him from us. Now, as then, they who are nearest to Him by love, are so because He loves them, and they know and believe the love which He has to them.—Dr. A. Maclaren.

v. 15.—"He saith unto him, Feed my lambs."—What may be the reason why so many nowadays are carried about with every wind of doctrine, even to scour every point in the compass round about? Surely it is because they were never well catechised in the principles of religion. Oh for the ancient and primitive ordinance of catechising! Every youth can preach, but he must be a man, indeed, who can profitably catechise. Indeed, sermons are like whole joints for men to manage, but catechising is mince-meat, shred into answers and questions (fit for children to eat and easy for them to digest), whilst the minister may also, for the edification of those of riper years, enlarge and dilate himself on both as he seeth just occasion.—Thos. Fuller.

vv. 15—17.—"Jesus saith unto Simon Peter. . . ." These verses well repay minute attention to details. Jesus twice asks, "Lovest (agapas) thou Me?" and twice Peter replies, "Thou knowest that I love (philō) Thee." The former is the love founded on knowledge and appreciation of the loved one. But Peter only claims the feeling of natural love, as that of a child to its parent. But the third time Jesus uses Peter's own word, as if to question whether he rightly claimed even this modified love which he had professed. And it grieved Peter, not only that the question was again repeated, but that this third time the phrase was changed. His reply is= "Lord, Thou knowest all things, and at this moment Thou seest that I love Thee." In 15, the word used means individual sheep; in 16, flocks; in 17, pasturages, various flocks in various pastures. Personal, pastoral, and universal duty to Christ's sheep is thus set forth. In 15, the verb means to feed, i.e., to give pasture, as also in 17. In 16, shepherd, rule, guide, is the word used. The tense of these verbs is imp. pres.=Be doing, or try to do; the effort ours, success God's.

APRIL 28.—ACTS I.

v. 2.—"The day in which He was taken up." The visible Ascension, as the last historical circumstance that the eyes of men witnessed in connection with Him, is, to speak briefly, (1) The most befitting and naturally to be expected attestation of his heavenly origin (Jno. iii. 13, vi. 62, xvi. 28), for what could more clearly, sensibly, and decisively testify that this man, who thus miraculously ascended to God, was also miraculously born into the world? (2) It was the final and most evident—for the first witnesses indispensable—exhibition of the truth, that the kingdom of Jesus should be established by the Spirit from heaven, and yet through this same Jesus; (3) and, finally, it is even to us the most assuring guarantee and pledge of his heavenly power, of his heavenly being, and of the certainty of his return to consummate ourselves, and establish his kingdom upon earth. For He who ascended above all heavens in the highest power, can, when it pleaseth Him, come down to this earth again.—Stier.

v. 7—"It is not for you to know the times and seasons."—Our Lord here admits the fact of the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, but leaves the time for its accomplishment indefinite. He also distinguishes that event, and the spiritual æon to be at once initiated by the descent of the Holy Ghost; this latter, He says, shall be "not many days hence." As to the times and seasons, and the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, see Dan. ii. 21; vii. 12; Hos. iii. 4—5; Zech. xiv. 4—9; with Acts i. 11—12.

v. 11.—"This same Jesus shall so come . . ."—The fact of the personal return of Christ is here plainly asserted, but the time again left indefinite. As one says: "Christ will thus live in our faith and hope; remote, yet near; pledged to no moment, possible at any; worshipped, not with the consternation of a near, or the indifference of a distant certainty, but with the anxious vigilance that awaits a contingency ever at hand."

APRIL 29.—ACTS II.

v. 1.—"All with one accord in one place."—The spirit of "oneness," as it gives power to prayer, so is ever essential to receiving blessing from God, and inseparable from spiritual power.

v. 3.—"Cloven tongues, like as of fire."—The Spirit is to come as a thoroughly cleansing fire (Matt. iii. 11), and therefore the tongue as the inmost and principal organ of speech appears glowing with fire, as cleansed from all impurity. The tongue is, in truth, the first and most immediate revealer of the thoughts and intents of the heart; it is the threshold of the door between the inner and the outer world.—Baumgarten.

v. 4.—"They were all filled with the Holy Ghost."—Sanctified tongues and sanctified hearts became their inheritance. Outward manifestations and inward experiences went hand in hand; "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." Note that the testimony borne was not by official hands only, but all became burning, shining witnesses for Christ.

v. 41.—"There were added to them about three thousand souls."—We are struck with the suddenness of their conviction, then with the sharpness of it, and then with the permanence of its result. Three thousand men permanently raised from death in sin to a life of holiness! Three thousand sinners converted into saints! Three thousand new-made saints enabled day by day to walk in the fear of God, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost! This of all the spectacles of Pentecost is the one that speaks in deepest tones to the heart.—Rev. W. Arthur, M.A.

vv. 46, 47.—"And they continuing daily with one accord."—What a glow of family heartiness runs through the New Testament! Instead of stiff souls always either dressed for the public eye, or shut up in solitude, you have brothers, sisters, friends, lovers, who cling to each other by mutual attraction, and between whom the common talk often runs on their conversion, their conflicts, and their glorious foretaste of eternal joy.—Ibid.

SEAMEN IN RIO DE JANEIRO.—In accordance with the request of the Committee, the secretaries of the South American Missionary Society in London arranged with Mr. Thomas Hooper, formerly in the Royal Marines, to join the mission. Mr. Hooper arrived in Rio in November last, and and has been since then working for the mission Work both afloat and ashore has been carried on through the year. Most of the British and American ships in harbour were visited. The boarding houses and hospitals were frequently visited by the Missionary. A regular system of relief to deserving men has been set on foot.

CHRISTIAN CARTERS IN LIVERPOOL—The tenth annual meeting of the Liverpool Carters' Christian Association was held on Saturday week, the Mayor of the City presiding. This Association it may be remembered is one of the outcomes of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's first mission in Liverpool; since then it has continued to flourish, and has set an example to other classes of the working community which have associated themselves for their common good. Mr. T. Storey, President, stated at the meeting that it was in contemplation to engage a missionary for stated work among carters in the town. The Mayor, in his address, suggested that the 10,000 carters of Liverpool should subscribe a penny each per week as a hospital tax.

Notices.

Will Miss Buller, who wrote respecting the U.K. Beneficent Association for Poor Gentlefolks, kindly send us her address, which has been mislaid?

S. E. Jenkins.—Your report does not give the name of the village where the meetings were held.

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children"

Are now in Urgent and very special need of help to maintain the large Family sheltered therein, and to carry on their work of Emigration.

Within the last three months, from 1st January to 31st March, 1885, no less than 220 POOR BOYS AND GIRLS have actually been ADMITTED to the Homes.

153 Trained Boys also left Liverpool on Thursday, March 26th, for Canadian Homes.

We are now consequently in very great need of further help to continue this blessed work of rescue, and desire to bring the above striking facts prominently before the Lord's people everywhere.

Is it not a fact also that our overcrowded English Cities teem with young life needing to be transplanted if it is to be saved from ruin? And is it not also true that our Colonies require more than anything else to be replenished by the importation of Boys and Girls carefully trained in industrious and virtuous ways?

If sufficient funds are supplied we hope (D.V.) to send to Canada

80 GIRLS	on 23rd	May,
100 BOYS	,,	June,
100 GIRLS	,,	July,

and remember that

£8-10 will pay the entire cost of outfit, passage money, &c., for one Boy or Girl emigrated to Canada, and thereby in all probability saved from untold perils.

£51 will do the same for Six Children; or

£102 ,, ,, Twelve ,,

The loving gifts of the Lord's people will be gratefully acknowledged by the Treasurer WM. FOWLER, Esq., M.P., or by the Director, Dr. H. BARNARDO.

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

OR,

THE POWER AND PRESENCE OF THE LORD WITH HIS PEOPLE.

By ANNA SHIPTON,

AUTHOR OF

"Tell Jesus," "Whispers in the Palms," etc., etc.

"These pages give not a few of the results of a ripe Christian experience, which testifies by many a striking fact in daily life to the divine fidelity, by direct answers to the prayer of faith; and to providential leading of the perplexed but believing suppliant."—Evangelical Christendom.

"Thoughtful comments on passages of Holy Scripture, and interesting, often thrilling narrative—sometimes of incidents connected with Mrs. Shipton's own experience, and sometimes with that of others—are the main characteristics of all her little books."—The Record.

"Full of stimulus, cheering, and hope, for the pious, the struggling, and the suffering. The young could read it to great advantage; and the more matured would find it helpful and interesting."—Oldham Chronicle.

CASE of a CHRISTIAN WORKER.

In answer to a letter of inquiry relative to the case No. CXXVI. of my book, Captain J. Smith, writing recently to the Rev. J. W. Butcher, gives the following account of another case known to him :—

"A lady in the circuit in which I resided some years ago was considered to be dying from Consumption. We all thought she could not live many days or weeks. She was removed to a Southern watering-place, where she was visited by a minister who had seen the good result of Mr. Congreve's treatment, and he succeeded, after much persuasion, in inducing her to try. She soon obtained relief, and continuing, the result was that she ultimately returned to the circuit quite well, and strong enough to engage actively in good work. She is well to-day."

SPITALFIELDS GOSPEL MISSION.

Superintendent.—Mr. JAMES SHARPLESS, 14, Sidney-square, Commercial-road, E.
Secretary.—EDWARD GEO. HARVEY.

This Mission has been carried on for upwards of twenty years in one of the most degraded parts of the East End of London. To its foundation and management the well-known Mr. W. J. Lewis devoted many of the best years of his life. Ill-health has now compelled him to withdraw from active control, but the work is continued as vigorously as ever. By the operations of this Mission many an outcast has been gathered, from the streets and lanes of this great city, to the fold of Christ; and the work still goes on. By open-air Gospel preaching, house-to-house visitation, services for adults and children, ragged night schools, and lodging-house visitation, we seek, in obedience to the apostolic injunction, to "be instant in season and out of season." "That we might by all means save some" (1 Cor. ix. 22).

Help is sorely needed, and will be thankfully received at the above address; or at the office of The Christian.

FIRST SHEETS OF SCRIPTURAL PROOFS

That God gives us in our Lord Jesus Christ perfect deliverance from all sin, inward as well as outward, if we will but receive Him and believe on His name for all that God has made Him to be to us (John i. 12; 1 Cor. i. 30).

BY J. P. WILSON.

Copies may be obtained by writing to me at the undernoted address, sending Eightpence for price and postage, or without money. I hope that it is with a right motive that I introduce here the first letter received by me on the subject of the book, and that my doing so will not be misconstrued. But if it should be, I must bear with it, and cannot for fear of it withhold the letter. It is from a sister in the Lord unknown to me until I received it.—J. P. W., 88, North Side, Wandsworth Common, London, S.W.

"Dear Friend.—I have read your little book, lent me by a friend; and I do desire heartily to thank my God that it was put into my hands. Though for years I have known my Saviour's love, and experienced the incoming of the Holy Spirit in power in my soul, yet since reading the 'Scriptural Proofs' I have had a fresh revelation of what Jesus is to me in his capacity of Saviour: and I have been able to grasp Him in a fuller and more comprehensive faith as my deliverer from indwelling sin; and that on the Truth of the living God, as shown so clearly in your little book. My heart goes with every line of it. I do trust and believe it will be blessed wherever it is read: there is so little of man in it and so much of God. Yours in the fellowship of His Spirit, ——."

HOMES OF HOPE,

Nos. 4, 5 & 6, Regent-square, Gray's-inn-road, London, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.

The applications are most distressing, and the funds are quite exhausted. The Committee make an urgent appeal for help.

Henry Thompson, Treasurer.

THE EXPECTED RAPTURE OF THE CHURCH;

Or, The Analogy of Prophecy and Established Fact.

By G. WARRAND HOUGHTON.

"The parts to be played by England, Russia, and Turkey regarding Palestine, as clearly pointed out in Scripture, are explained, and a great war between the two former powers is shown must take place between 1885 and 1887 inclusive, when the Rapture of the Church is indicated by several converging lines hitherto concealed in Scripture."—Extract from advertisements in The Christian of December 11.

At the time of the insertion of this advertisement, there appeared no prospect of a question between England and Russia, and persons who have purchased the book on the strength of the above statement have been struck with the march of events at the precise time indicated by the scriptural exposition.

"A firm grasp of the whole subject of unfulfilled prophecy characterising the book."
The Christian.

"Most of his conclusions seem right."—Footsteps of Truth.
"A marvellous book."—The Silver Morn and Prophetic Voice.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

Instituted 1772.

Patron: THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.G.
President: G. WILLIAMS, ESQ.
Vice-Presidents: A. PEASE, ESQ., M.P., S. D. WADDY, ESQ., M.P., Q.C., and J. H. GLADSTONE, ESQ., Ph.D., F.R.S., &c.
Treasurer: F. A. BEVAN, ESQ. Honorary Secretary: THE REV. W. TYLER.

This, the oldest of all the evangelistic societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night, and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or the Editors of The Christian.

JAMES ATKINSON, Secretary.

BIBLE AND COLPORTAGE SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

An undenominational Society, with Agents in all parts of Ireland. Carefully selected and trained Colporteurs are spreading the knowledge of Jesus by the living voice and the printed page. They have access to the people everywhere, and are not interfered with in their work. A contribution of £40 will secure a Colporteur for a year in any part of Ireland. Several additional Colporteurs have been recently appointed. Funds greatly needed.—Rev. H. M. Williamson, Belfast, and Rev. John Elliott, Armagh, Secretaries, by whom contributions will be gratefully received; or they may be paid at the Office of this Paper.

Educational.

SEASIDE, Southport. — Superior School for Young Ladies. Conducted by a member of the Church of England (Evangelical), assisted by English and foreign governesses, and eminent visiting professors. Pupils prepared for Trinity College examinations. — Miss Poole, Eagley Bank, Southport. Referees, Rev. Canon Clarke, Southport, and Rev. John Burbidge, Everton-road, Liverpool.

LONDON.—First-class Education for the Daughters of Gentlemen in an establishment of long standing, conducted by members of the Church of England, occupying a spacious house in a most healthy locality in the West-end. The pupils have the advantage of loving care and safe training while pursuing their studies under first-rate Professors — their health, individual temper, and disposition carefully and tenderly watched over, and the whole system based on Christian principles. — Delta, Boddington's Library, Notting-hill-gate, W.

BELLE VUE, Ambleside.—Good School for Girls.—Having increased accommodation, Mrs. Fleming can now receive six additional Pupils. House well and healthily situated, with large rooms, garden, tennis ground. Careful, Christian training, and thorough teaching. Distinguished success in Cambridge Examinations which are optional. Resident foreign and Engligh governesses. Visiting masters. 50 to 60 guineas.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President*, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.
Established 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES:

27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN;
and 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. James Kearney White, or by the Proprietors of this paper.

Note.—Subscriptions or Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "The Christian."

Friends will please notice the exact title "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

REDUCED GENTLEWOMEN.

THE Christian Public is aware by this time of the lamented death of my beloved sister, Julia Corke, the originator of the effort to establish the LUTHER MEMORIAL HOME, to grant rent-free rooms to the above class.

It is earnestly hoped and believed that this needed work may still be accomplished, that Christian Workers will take it up, and by their prayers, sympathy, and exertions to raise funds, to add to the £200 already subscribed, strengthen the hands of the Treasurer (Miss Julia Fox, 54, Kensington Park-road, Ladbroke-square, Bayswater) and of myself, who, having worked in the cause from its commencement, will gladly take up this legacy of my beloved sister.

Funds continue to come in which bereavement has prevented my acknowledging as yet. Thanks for all. Cards for Collecting Shillings will be gratefully supplied, and Contributions thankfully received by the Treasurer, or by—

ANNETTE CORKE, Hon. Sec.,
120, Ledbury-road, Bayswater, W.

NOBLE COMMERCE.

A VERY lurid light has recently been thrown upon much of our modern trade by the statement of a public analyst that "the skill and ingenuity displayed by fraudulent inventors would suffice to make their fortunes a dozen times over in any honest capacity," and that in the manufacture of articles of spurious food, chemical knowledge of the highest obtainable order is employed, and liberally remunerated. These assertions are supported by the fact that the scientific officers of the Municipality of Paris examined thirty samples of flour, purchased wholesale lately in different parts of the country; of these seventeen were found to be vilely adulterated, in some cases with thirty per cent. of plaster, and in others with an equal amount of substances of a far more injurious kind.

Not content with fair and proper profits, merchant and trader alike seem, in their anxiety to be rich, to be stooping to dishonest practices, which are winked at and condoned, simply because, with morality at a low ebb, they have come to be looked upon as pardonable tricks of trade, a little "sharp," perhaps, but excusable in days of fierce pressure. In widening circles the authority of the teaching of God's Word is pushed aside during the working hours of the week to make room for the false teachings of the authority of the market, and in only too many cases men of business have for probity and righteousness substituted, to use John Ruskin's words, "occult and polite methods of thieving, and of all occult methods chiefly the making and selling of bad goods."

However it may be glossed over on the exchange and in the mart, this deceitful dishonesty cannot be correctly designated by any other term than that which Ruskin has applied to it, for ultimately it affects the working classes more than any other section of the community, and is, therefore, equivalent to the direct theft of a portion of the labouring man's hardly-earned food, and to the infliction of physical evil upon him and his children.

But mean and contemptible as all this may be (and strange to say there are people who attempt to defend it and its contemptible offshoots on the score of the necessities of competition), it is as nothing when compared with the more extended form of deceitful and false commerce—that of dishonest speculation, a vice spreading so rapidly that there would appear to be ground to fear that a modern satirist was not far wrong when he defined business to mean "other people's money."

Day by day we hear of cases of bankruptcy and ruin—ruin, unfortunately, not confined to the speculators themselves, but extending in all directions to their simple and trusting dupes, and widows and children are plunged into poverty because of the failure of someone who had been keeping up a great appearance upon paper and false pretence, and without any foundation of honest capital.

That these things are evident signs of decay, as marked and unmistakable in their way as are the symptoms of fever or mortification, surely no one will attempt to deny; but there is always the danger that we may be tempted to regard them as national rather than individual, and therefore, too extensive and deep-seated for the application of simple remedies.

All national life, however, is but the aggregation of the morality or immorality of the units of which the nation consists, and it is, therefore, to the individual we must look for the adoption of a higher standard of rectitude and honesty in trade transactions.

In too many cases there is an attempt made to sever business from religion, the counter from the pew—with a manifest failure, it is true; the result being that discredit is brought upon the profession of religion. The highest Christian life, certainly, is that in which the teaching of Jesus is permitted to influence the slightest and seemingly least important act, the power of the Master permeating the daily round of duties, ennobling every thought, and word, and deed; and it is hardly necessary to say that where there are dishonesty and falsity there is not room for the working of the Spirit of Christ.

Only few people in these days are called upon to make large sacrifices for Jesus, and perhaps, indeed, our national life would be much nobler if the contrary were the case, but there are many who imagine they would be ready to do great things; yet not a few of these are careless about the trifles which are none the less evidences of the depth and solidity of the Christian life. The trifling things, too often neglected, are as the straws which show the way the wind is blowing—how God's north wind and south wind are blowing upon the spiritual garden.

The command of God to the princes of Israel was not only to "remove violence and spoil, and execute judgment and justice," but, also, "Ye shall have just balances, and a just ephah;" in the small things as in the great ones they were to be honest.

And to-day it is imperative upon each Christian to be careful that his daily life is nobly consistent, and that in his business transactions, as in all others, men may take knowledge of him, that he has indeed been with Jesus. It is true that it may not be so easy to amass a fortune in a business conducted upon such simple and righteous principles, but even in this luxurious nineteenth century it is better to be rich towards God than to be the possessor of wealth amassed in ways and by means which are inconsistent with professions of piety and holiness. "Better is a little with righteousness, than great revenues without right," and wealth has been dearly purchased if it has been obtained at the cost of separation from Christ,

James Bowker.

A ROMISH PROTESTANT.

A MOST remarkable sign of the times is furnished by the Pastoral, addressed by a Roman Catholic Bishop in Ireland to his clergy and people, which was read at all the masses in the diocese of Meath on Sunday, 19th inst. Probably addressed originally to the Sovereign Pontiff himself, and either refused at Rome or kept back for wider circulation, the document is nothing less than a plain and unmistakable warning to the Pope not to venture to interfere in any way with the course of Irish politics. The Bishop confesses that for some time past he "could not help feeling uncomfortable misgivings for the future of our ancient National Church," and he adds that in the present excited and suspicious condition of public feeling, "grave and dangerous complications and misunderstandings might, at any moment, crop up between the Irish nation and the Holy See;" that no one could calculate or fix a limit to the deplorable consequences that might result from them, and that "in the excitement inseparable from the controversy it would be easy to persuade a jealous and credulous race like ours that the Pope had acted on erroneous, prejudiced, and one-sided information."

Reading this remarkable passage, one cannot help asking what has become of the doctrine of the infallibility of the Pope. But more remarkable utterances follow, as, for instance, the one in which the Bishop, after stating that the nation always seems bent upon securing all the social and political ameliorations within its grasp, urges that a mistake of the kind "would be quite enough to drive it into an attitude of dogged and sullen disobedience, and the consequences that then might follow only God knows."

After pointing out the "very melancholy and very awful fact" that great Catholic nations like France, England, and Scotland have "practically apostatised from the faith," the Bishop ventures to remind the Pope that "the fact is surrounded with very salutary, as well as with very unpleasant warnings," and adds that although he does not anticipate that the Irish will follow the fatal example, he believes "it would be nothing but criminal rashness to expose it to the danger or temptation of doing so," as he has "no solid grounds for believing in a special exceptional providence, which would save Irish multitudes, any more than Irish individuals, from renouncing their allegiance to the Church in a paroxysm of passion, either in retaliation for some imaginary interference with their political freedom, or an affront which they rashly assumed had been offered them by the Holy See."

Here the warning ends, and the Bishop concludes, by finding in the call to Rome a proof that the Pope is not bent upon cutting the Irish nation off from the Holy See, inasmuch as the Bishops are "substantially united on every question, even in the slippery and dangerous region of politics," a fact proved, he urges, by their having entrusted to the Irish Parliamentary Party the educational interests of the people. Then comes an appeal that the quinquennial collection, which was taken up after the reading of the pastoral, might be "a brilliant success," and the prayer, in which every reader of these words will reverently and heartily join, "The peace of Our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all."

THE PERILS OF POSITION.

John vii. 48.

By CHARLES GRAHAM,
Minister of Avenue-road Church, Shepherd's Bush.

THE miracles of our Lord had so told on the more unsophisticated of the people that many of them believed on Him, and asked, "When the Christ cometh will He do more miracles than these which this man doeth?"

The Pharisees and chief priests become alarmed at such questions, and send officers to apprehend the Lord. The officers, like the people, hear and think for themselves; and instead of bringing Him, return saying, "Never man spake like this man." The reply of the Pharisees is characteristic: "Are ye also deceived? Have any of the rulers, or of the Pharisees, believed on Him? But this people who know not the law are cursed."

We will first consider the question, and then notice exceptions to it.

THE QUESTION.

The question is, "Have any of the rulers, or of the Pharisees, believed on Him?" The rulers were members of the Sanhedrim, or Great Council of the nation, consisting of seventy members with a president, after the model of the seventy elders whom Moses was directed to associate with himself in the government of Israel (Numb. xi. 16, 17).

The Sanhedrim consisted of the chief priests, or heads of the twenty-four courses, appointed by King David, with scribes or doctors of the law, and aged men celebrated for their wisdom. To be a member of this Council was to be invested with the highest honour and authority of the nation.

The Pharisees were by far the largest and most influential religious body of the nation. They were, as their name implies, Separatists. They are believed, by some of our learned men, to have taken their rise at the time Antiochus Epiphanes endeavoured to abolish the Jewish ritual, in order to unite Jews and Greeks in one community, those who clung to their separate Jewish position being called Pharisees, or Separatists. This being so, their origin was an honourable one.

But the fly was in the pot of ointment: they had, in their system of doctrine, the root of boundless error and corruption. They believed that, when God gave the written law to Moses, He gave also an oral law of equal obligation, that is, the so-called traditions of the elders, afterwards embodied in the Talmud. By their traditions, as our Lord shows, they made void the Divine Law.

It is remarkable that into this sin of the Pharisees the Romanists have fallen, and teach that the traditions of the Church are not only of equal authority with the Word of God, but that the Word of God can only be interpreted by them. The Word of God is thus not only virtually but practically superseded by tradition.

The Pharisees were the Ritualists of their day. They occupied themselves with what, in religion, was external and ceremonial; they were scrupulous in tithing mint, anice, and cummin, in washing their hands before eating bread, observing fasts which the Word of God had not enjoined, saying long prayers, giving alms with much ostentation, and compassing sea and land to make proselytes.

But underneath their external religiousness lay concealed the vipers of pride and covetousness. All their works they did to be seen of men. Therefore, our Lord tells us they had from man the praise which they sought, but from God would receive no reward.

Their covetousness they concealed by hypocrisy; they devoured widows' houses, and for a pretence made long prayers. They made clean the outside of the cup and platter; but within they were full of ravening and excess—that is, just as the lion fills his den with prey, so had they filled their cup and platter with fraud and extortion.

At best, when they had any honest zeal for the externals of religion, it was while they rejected the righteousness of God to work out a righteousness for themselves.

Just as the Pharisees were the Ritualists, the Sadducees were the Rationalists of our Lord's day. The Sadducees denied the doctrine of the resurrection and the existence of angels and spirits; but the Pharisees confessed both (Acts xxiii. 8). It was for this reason Paul cried before the Council, "I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee; of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question."

It is contended for the Sadducees that while they rejected the inspiration of the other Scriptures, they believed in the books of Moses; but it is clear they could not have believed in books recording the appearance of angels while they denied their existence (Gen. xix. 1; xxviii. 12). For a man holding the doctrine of the Sadducees there is no salvation (1 Cor. xv.), and accordingly we never find a Sadducee believing on Christ. But to the question, "Have any of the rulers, or of the Pharisees believed on Him?"

WE NOTICE EXCEPTIONS.

There is a faith which is real, so far as it goes, but which does not go far enough, and so fails to bring salvation. It has its seat in the intellect, but does not touch the heart and bring the will to a decision. Thus, in the days of our Lord, John tells us, "Many of the chief rulers believed on Him. But because of the Pharisees they did not confess Him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue: for they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God" (John xii. 42, 43).

But in Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus, we have two genuine instances among the rulers and Pharisees of believers in the Lord. That Joseph and Nicodemus were true disciples there is no ground to question; for their faith flourished and bore fruit, when that of other disciples seemed withered and dead. When Jesus was apprehended his chosen witnesses forsook Him and fled. And when He died their hopes died with Him; it was then Joseph went to Pilate and begged the body of Jesus, and with Nicodemus took it down from the cross and wound it in clean linen with the hundred pound weight of myrrh and aloes which they had prepared for it, and laid it in Joseph's new tomb. Had they not both loved Jesus, and believed in Him, they would not thus have identified themselves with his cause when all its prospects seemed for ever blighted.

If a tree brings forth one good apple we know that it is a good tree. We may regret that all its branches are not laden with golden fruit, but one solitary golden pippin tells us the tree is good. But to do these two trees justice you get two good apples on each of them. For besides what we have noticed, Nicodemus indirectly confesses Christ in the Council, by asking, "Doth our law judge any man before it hear him, and know what he doeth?" and in the Sanhedrim Joseph "did not consent to the counsel and deed" of those who condemned Him.

But notwithstanding these facts it is painful to be obliged to conclude from the question, "Have any of the rulers, or of the Pharisees, believed on Him?" that neither Joseph nor Nicodemus was known to the Council as an adherent of the Lord. These good men were secret disciples, but they ought to have been public witnesses. So far as their fellow-rulers and the nation was concerned, their light was under a bushel.

THEIR ERROR AND ITS RESULT.

In the days of Elijah God reserved to Himself seven thousand men who had not bowed the knee to Baal, and whose lips had not kissed his accursed image. These were hidden ones, but their hiding was a necessity to preserve their lives from the fury of Ahab and Jezebel; but Joseph and Nicodemus were hidden disciples without any such necessity: protected by Roman power and Roman law, their lives were in no danger. Others of their nation, of humble position, believed on and followed Christ without any personal peril.

It was not even necessary for Joseph and Nicodemus to leave their comfortable homes, the one in Jerusalem and the other in Arimathea, to be identified with Christ and his cause; Martha, Mary, and Lazarus, did not need to leave Bethany, in order to be his disciples.

It was not, then, for their lives these hidden disciples were afraid, but for their honour and reputation with the world. Their faith was too weak to overcome the shame and reproach of being identified with one so humble as Jesus. Jesus had no palace or grand mansion to invite them to: "foxes have holes, and birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man had not where to lay his head." His reputed father, and his mother, Mary, were only peasants; his attendants, fishermen and taxgatherers, without wealth, without education, without influence. How out of character it would have appeared in the eyes of the world for Joseph and Nicodemus to have had such associates. Yet Moses, their great lawgiver, and the deliverer and leader of their nation, forsook the Court of Egypt and the prospect of a throne, to identify himself with them when they were oppressed slaves.

The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God. That humble one that they are ashamed of, is the God that made the universe, that made themselves, and gave them their position. For their redemption, and that of their nation, and a lost world, He left the glory which He had with the Father before the world was, left the praises of the Seraphim, and took the form of a servant. Joseph and Nicodemus would have been wiser had they identified themselves with Jesus.

THEIR LOSS.

Their shame was partial. Had it been so great as to cause them to deny Christ, or stand altogether aloof from Him, it would have shut them out of his kingdom. "He that denieth Me before men, him also will I deny," says Christ, "before my Father and his holy angels."

How great was the loss which this false shame entailed on these men. They lost the companionship and fellowship of Jesus. They lost one of the grandest opportunities ever put into the hands of man to glorify God.

When the Spirit descended at Pentecost, where were Joseph and Nicodemus? We hear nothing of them. As they stood at such a distance from the Master, how could they be in the midst of his obscure servants, waiting together in a ten days' prayer-meeting? We never hear of them being associated with the Apostles. Gamaliel arrests the rage of the Council against Peter and John; but when they are scourged and dishonoured by it we hear of no protest or utterance in their favour from either Joseph or Nicodemus.

What do these honourable rulers for the promotion of the Gospel or the establishment of the kingdom of God? Those apostles, with whom they seem to have never exchanged salutations, were the founders and extenders of that kingdom, have their names in the foundations of the New Jerusalem, and shall by and by sit on thrones judging the restored tribes of Israel. Joseph and Nicodemus found the world no friend to grace. These things are written for our learning. "All that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world."

Joseph and Nicodemus are types of thousands in the present day. The camel has passed through the eye of the needle: the rich men have entered into the kingdom of God. But would that such asked themselves what they are doing for the kingdom of grace into which they have entered, and what are their prospects of reward in the coming kingdom of glory!

AMONG THE RED INDIANS.

I WISH to return thanks to the saints of God in Great Britain for their liberal response in forwarding by mail so many nice tracts and papers for the poor Red Men of the Indian Territory. I wish no better adjunct in connection with my work than that of first-class Gospel tracts. How blessedly they supplement the work of the evangelist!

God wrought a mighty work of grace in Vinita, and a few days ago I closed (so far as my own individual labours are concerned) six weeks of labour in Muscogee, the principal town in the Creek nation. Wonderful blessings have followed the preaching of the word in the latter place. Some of the very worst characters were brought to the Saviour, as well as numbers of the best society people of town and country. Judge More, a prominent man in the Creek nation, was led to accept and confess Christ as his Lord and Master. I had heard much about the stolidity of the Indians before I went to the territory; but I can say to the glory of God that the Bible has broken down every barrier; that the heart of the red man is just as susceptible to the power of the Gospel as is that of the white man.

The truth has not been preached without great opposition. My life has been threatened, and just before I came away from Muscogee a plan to assassinate me was thwarted by the hand of God. To the credit of the Indians be it said, all this opposition comes from a low type of the white desperado, in which this new country unfortunately abounds. Gambling is the prevailing vice. When patrons of the gambling hells get saved, of course the ire of the proprietors is aroused, and they will resort to almost any wicked thing in order to have revenge. But this state of things is rapidly disappearing under the civilising influences of the Bible and the school.

May I make one more plea on behalf of Gospel work in the Indian Territory? It is laid on my heart to ask if there is not enough sympathy among the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to help me in securing a large Gospel tent, with which I shall be better able to reach the multitudes who will not enter a mission chapel or church? I am now at home resting for a few weeks, and expect to return to my field of labour about the 1st or middle of May. With a tent capable of seating 1200 people I could gather hundreds, where in any other way I can only reach the scores or tens. Any help can be sent me, care of Hon. W. L. Squier, U.S. Commissioner, Muscogee, Indian Territory, U.S.A.

NOTES ON THE SCRIPTURE UNION READINGS.

APRIL 30.—PSALM XXVII.

v. 14.—"Wait on the Lord: be of good courage, and He . . ."—John Milton the poet grew blind as he became old. His blindness troubled him very much. In his time Englishmen had been fighting against each other, and Milton wished to do what he could to serve God by gaining liberty and peace for England. But he said to himself, "I can do nothing, for God has made me blind," and he felt inclined to complain against God. Then God said to him, "I do not require work from you: that you cannot do. Be patient, and wait. If you do that, you will be serving Me." And while he waited God taught him wonderful things, which Milton has taught us, and which you must learn when you grow a little older. So it always is. If we are patient and wait for God, God will use us for his glory in the best way.—Dr. E. A. Abbott.

MAY 1.—GALATIANS I. 1–17.

v. 11.—"The Gospel which was preached of me is not after man."—Paul tells us in ver. 12, that he neither received nor learned the Gospel of Christ from men, but had it directly from God. This is what makes it so solemn a thing to hear the Gospel, it is God's voice to us; as Jesus said of his diciples when He sent them to preach his word, "He that receiveth you receiveth Me, and he that receiveth Me receiveth Him that sent Me" (Matt. x. 40). There is only one true Gospel, and that is the Gospel of God, the glad tidings of Jesus, who is the Son of his love, and the only Saviour of men. Look at verses 8, 9, with Acts iv. 12.

MAY 2.—GALATIANS II. 11–21.

v. 20.—"The Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me."

"Jesus from his throne on high,
Came into this world to die;
That I might from sin be free,
Bled and died upon the Tree.
Yes, Jesus loves me,
The Bible tells me so.

Jesus! take this heart of mine,
Make it pure, and wholly thine
Thou hast bled and died for me,
I will henceforth live for thee."

E. Payson Hammond.

MAY 3.—GALATIANS III. 1–14.

v. 13.—"Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law."—We have sinned, and the law saith, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." The "terror of the Lord" is upon us, at our heels, following us like our very shadow. The moments are hastening upon us, bearing the evils that must come. We must perish, unless we can find some way of escape. No skill, or cleverness, or courage of ours can save us. It is folly to go on hoping and desiring, unless we can find a place of refuge. See, here it is: "A Man shall be as an hiding-place." Our only safety is in Him; our only hope of escape is there. Boldly, fearlessly, let us cast ourselves upon Jesus. In Him are safety and blessedness. The avenger cannot touch us there, for Jesus hath satisfied the law; He hath redeemed us from its curse. Oh, look to Him, and now resolutely, boldly cast yourself upon Him.—Mark Guy Pearse.

MAY 4.—GALATIANS IV. 1–16.

v. 6.—"God hath sent forth the Spirit of His Son into . . ."—In ver. 26 of chap. iii. you are told that it is by faith in Christ Jesus we become the children of God, as we learn also from John i. 12. We can only know God as our Father by knowing Jesus, and trusting in Him. It is no use to say "Our Father" unless we feel it in the heart. How blessed it is to have the Holy Spirit in us, shedding abroad the Father's love, and witnessing that we are children of God! Read Psalm ciii. 13; Matt. vii. 7—11; and 1 John iii. 1—3.

MAY 5.—GALATIANS V. 1–13.

v. 7.—"Ye did run well; who did hinder you?"—The Christian life is often compared to a race: see also 1 Cor. ix. 24—26; Heb. xii. 1, 2. What is it to run well? It is to run, as David did, in God's way (Ps. cxix. 32), to run patiently, to run constantly, never tiring of the way, but pressing forward as Paul did (Phil. iii. 13, 14). To do this we must wait upon God (see Isa. xl. 31), and keep fast hold on Jesus as our guide and helper. As John Bunyan says: "If thou dost not know the way, inquire at the Word of God. If thou wantest company, cry for God's Spirit. If thou wantest encouragement, take the promises of God. But be sure thou begin by times, get into the way, run apace and hold out to the end; and the Lord give thee a prosperous journey."

MAY 6.—GALATIANS V. 14–26.

v. 26.—"Let us not be desirous of vain glory, provoking. . . ."—These are evils into which children as well as other people are apt to fall. The wish to be first and foremost, and to have our own way in everything, leads to much mischief and unhappiness. How often the enjoyment of boys and girls at play is spoiled by their wishing to have their own way, and by provoking one another. Those who love Jesus should specially watch against this tendency, as being so unlike Him, and so contrary to his Word. Let us remember the words of Jesus, "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls."

A FINE SCENE.

Two boys were in a schoolroom alone together, and exploded some fireworks, contrary to the master's express prohibition. The one boy denied it; the other, Ben Christie, would neither admit nor deny it, and was severely flogged for his obstinacy. When the boys got alone again—

"Why didn't you deny it?" asked the real offender.

"Because there were only we two, and one of us must have lied," said Ben.

"Then why not say I did it?"

"Because you said you didn't, and I would spare the liar."

The boy's heart melted. Ben's moral gallantry subdued him. When school reassembled, the young culprit marched up to the master's desk, and said—

"Please, sir, I can't bear to be a liar. I let off the squibs," and he burst into tears.

The master's eye glistened on the self-accuser, and the undeserved punishment he had inflicted on the other boy smote his conscience. Before the whole school, hand in hand with the culprit, as if he and the other boy were joined in the confession, the master walked down to where young Christie sat, and said aloud—

"Ben, Ben, lad, he and I beg your pardon; we are both to blame."

The school was hushed and still, as other schools are apt to be when something true and noble is being done; so still, they might almost have heard Ben's big boy-tears dropping on his book, as he sat enjoying the moral triumph which subdued himself as well as all the rest. And when, from want of something else to say, he gently cried "Master for ever!" the loud shout of the scholars filled the old man's eyes with something behind his spectacles, which made him wipe them before he sat down again. —*S. BIBLE ACROSTIC.

By God's command raised up to be
A sign of man's salvation,
It was by faithless man abused
For sinful adoration.
(1) A captain, mighty in his day.
(2) Where David once for safety lay.
(3) A woman of bloodthirsty fame.
(4) A land from whence a patriarch came.
(5) One who her Saviour saw expire.
(6) A king who felt God's anger dire.
(7) What, thrice, Elisha would not do.
(8) One who a mighty giant slew.
(9) What, in his glory, Jesus has,
Unknown to those on earth who live,
And what to those who overcome,
His promise stands that He will give.

GREAT BRITAIN AND RUSSIA.

THE Peace Society has issued the following further Appeal:—

"Countrymen,—We venture very respectfully to make an earnest appeal to you, in the present critical state of our relations with Russia, to use your influence in favour of peace. In these days popular opinion and temper are often reflected in national policy, and it will depend largely upon you whether the present differences shall be peaceably adjusted, or issue in a war which, as is said in an admirable Christian address just issued by a distinguished prelate of the Church of England, 'will probably be a war such as, for the sacrifices it will call for and the sufferings it will impose, the nation has not known for seventy years.' Surely we may learn something that may be of use to us at this crisis from the experience of the past. There are many now living who can recall the state of feeling which prevailed in this country before the last Russian war, and which largely contributed to render that war inevitable. How confident were the great majority of the nation that Russia was wholly in the wrong, and that our right of warlike intervention was clear beyond the shadow of a doubt! How violent were the attacks made upon that country, its people and its rulers! How passionate were the demands for prompt and violent measures! How confident were the expectations of easy and speedy success! How sanguine the predictions of great and beneficent results to flow from that policy!

"We also remember how the Governments on both sides, acting on the notion that the best way to preserve peace is to threaten war, were, unhappily, tempted to premature and menacing demonstrations of armed force, which defeated the most hopeful attempts at negotiation by peaceful means.

"But now, looking back over thirty years with the calm eye of reason, with better knowledge of facts, with a judgment undisturbed by passion, how many are there who will affirm that that was a just and necessary war, or one that might not have been avoided? And after counting the cost, after reckoning up the enormous expenditure of blood and money it occasioned, the incalculable amount of suffering of every kind it inflicted on the nations, and the appalling extent to which it envenomed the hearts of men with malignant and unchristian passion, can anyone tell what good came of it to England, or to Turkey, or to anybody?

"We know now a good deal which throws a different light on those events from that in which they were regarded at the time. We know that many of the charges which did most to exasperate public opinion against Russia were unfounded, or grossly exaggerated. We know that all the guarantees for the sake of which the war was undertaken and prolonged have been one by one abandoned. We know that three members of the Government which made the war, Lord Aberdeen, Lord Russell, and Sir James Graham, afterwards acknowledged that it was a mistake. We know that the leading paper, The Times, which most vehemently wrote up the war, only five years later made its recantation in the following emphatic language:—

> "'We must frankly own that we feel somewhat more free to act like men and Christians now than we could five years ago. That ill-starred war—those half million of British, French, and Russian men left in the Crimea; those two hundred millions of money wasted in the worst of all ways—have discharged to the last iota all the debt of Christian Europe to Turkey. Never was so great an effort made for so worthless an object. It is with no small reluctance we admit a gigantic effort and an infinite sacrifice to have been made in vain.'"

"After this experience, will it not be well to moderate our views on the question now in dispute? There cannot be a doubt that any violent expression of public opinion tending to war will aggravate tenfold the difficulty of the Government in securing, what we believe they earnestly desire, a pacific solution of the matters in dispute. Shall we not rather strengthen their hands by demanding that, if it cannot be otherwise disposed of, the difference between the two Governments shall be referred to some form of arbitration? It has already been acknowledged by distinguished authorities that the question at issue is one singularly adapted for such a mode of settlement.

"Questions of disputed boundary have often been submitted to adjudication with entire success. Surely there is no dishonour in referring what are acknowledged to be obscure and doubtful points of frontier to a neutral and impartial authority. While the alternative—that of a war with Russia, whatever may be the issue—opens before us a prospect which may well appal the stoutest heart.

PRAYER FOR PEACE.

A PRAYER-MEETING, which is held weekly on Thursdays from twelve to one o'clock, at the Y.M.C.A. in Leeds, was utilised on the 23rd instant, for the purpose of united prayer: "That in this grave crisis, when we appear to be on the verge of another serious war, God would so influence the hearts of men that a conflict may be avoided." There was a representative gathering of various religious denominations.

The meeting was led by Rev. Dr. Conder, who, after a few introductory remarks on the object of the meeting, the singing of a hymn, and reading a portion of Scripture, called on several persons, both ministers and laymen, to offer prayer. Seldom has there been a more solemn time within the walls of that Institution. All the petitions were in unison. No allusion was made to party or politics, but the prevailing features of the prayers were acknowledgment of national sin, necessity of repentance and humility, forbearance towards those whom we call our enemies, more dependence on God, and less upon an arm of flesh. There was a true note struck and maintained all through the meeting, and the central truth seemed to be an earnest desire to be enabled to carry out Christ's doctrine—"Do unto others as ye would that they should do to you."

It would be well if meetings of the same character were held in every town and village over the land. Nothing could have so great an influence in averting war, or be so powerful in the formation of a healthy and correct Christian public opinion on the grave questions at issue.

J. L.

MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

THE mission extending over the last three weeks, conducted by these evangelists in Southampton, has closed, and has been most richly blessed of God. From the very first until the closing meeting there has been a long list of inquirers every night, and about three hundred have professed to be savingly blessed.

Some most touching scenes have been witnessed, and interesting cases of conversion. In one girls' school in the town conducted by a godly woman, there were ten boarders who were brought to decision for Christ, and these have been the means of leading others to the same Saviour during the mission. In another case, a mother and son went into separate rooms after the service, each being unaware of the other's intentions. They met each other only as they were leaving, to mingle their unbounded praises at having both found Christ. A servant girl, who had formerly been worldly and frivolous, went home to the godly family whom she served, and declared her decision for Christ, and at once, without prompting, burned all the trashy novels she had been accustomed to read. On this becoming known to the master, was it any wonder that he chose for the reading at family worship the next morning Acts xix. 18, 19? The visit of the two evangelists to Southampton will be long remembered, and already desires have been expressed for a renewal of it before long. A meeting of the converts for praise and counsel is to be held at once.

CAUSE OF GEN. GRANT'S ILLNESS.

ONE of the questions answered by Joseph Cook, in the Interlude of his 176th Boston Lecture was: "What is to be said of the causes of General Grant's present illness?" And this was the reply:—

This question has been forced upon me. The nation has unmeasured attachment to that great hero, whose dangerous illness it now mourns. We know that he was an instrument of Providence in securing the overthrow of slavery. We believe that he was sent of God to save the Union.

We are told by his physicians that General Grant's present illness was largely caused by excessive smoking. I am not a fanatic, I hope, on the topic of tobacco, opium or chloral, any more than on that of intoxicating liquors; but as we are now in several commonwealths requiring compulsory scientific instruction of the youth of the land as to the mischiefs of both strong drink and narcotics, and as it is useless so to instruct youth while the leaders of society set an evil example, I excuse myself, and hope you will excuse me for directing public attention to the testimony of these physicians. I sit in the railway coaches and at hotel tables, and hear the example of some foremost preacher in London, or of a foremost preacher in one American city or another, quoted in defence of the abundant and habitual use of tobacco. I suppose that physicians will grant that there are a few, perhaps five out of one thousand, who can use tobacco with impunity for a long period of years. But they tell us, also, that the most serious dangers are connected with an excessive use of it, and I think we are all ready to admit that with the young the habit is extremely dangerous. Germany, in several of her provinces, is arresting on her streets the children who use cigars. We know what our own schools for military training and for the education of seamen have been doing in this matter. We know what strong resolutions have been passed in some of the great religious gatherings, especially in the vast and aggressive Methodist Church, which may Heaven bless for its crusade against the filthy weed!

There is a rising sentiment on the right side of this topic, and why should we not listen to the voice of Providence when it calls our attention pointedly to a great mischief! There was recently an examination for candidates for admission to a church in Japan, and a prominent preacher there, Mr. Isé, put to a candidate for admission the question whether he used tobacco. The reply being in the affirmative, the preacher said: "There is no definite command in the Bible against the use of it; but all purity becomes a Christian. I shall advise you not to unite with the Church until you give up tobacco." After a proper amount of reflection, that Japanese convert came into perfect harmony of opinion with his spiritual adviser. Now, perhaps preachers ought not to go as far as this Japanese convert, who was a mere pagan before he was converted. When a man in the pulpit, however, sets the example of the use of tobacco to the young in his congregation, must we not lament the fact? Is it not time to lament it in public? Is it not time to ask the revered men who set a bad example in this particular in high places in God's Church to look at what Providence is doing in this country? A great historic character is likely to be cut off twenty years before the time at which he might otherwise have gone from us, simply because of excess in a habit which, to all who have not learned to like it, is loathsome. One of his staff has had a cancer taken out of his lip, and it originated from a similar cause. The records of the medical profession detail scores of such cases. Emily Faithfull says that Americans are very courteous to ladies; but she hints delicately that an American who will take his hat off in an elevator, for fear of being discourteous to a lady, will often, in the same elevator, expectorate or smoke tobacco in her presence. We tolerate in men habits that we would not in dogs.

AMONG THE ROMAN POOR.

A SHORT but very interesting account of this work during another year has been published by Mrs. Wall. She says:—

"I am very grateful for the amount of blessing our heavenly Father has permitted us to see during the past year. It has been one of remarkable preservation for the inhabitants of Rome, and more especially for the very poor, who, had the cholera visited this city in the manner it did Naples, must have been carried off by hundreds. The attendance at the meetings during the year has been good, and in the general appearance and behaviour of those who come there is a very marked and visible improvement. Since the commencement of this work I think we have known more than fifty who have changed a life of idleness for one of honest industry. I cannot thank those friends sufficiently who have so generously provided me with so large a number of shirts and aprons for the poor at Christmas, and shall trust to their generosity for the same number, or even more, another year, if we are spared.

MEDICAL MISSION.

We have now two rooms used for this purpose in different parts of the city. That in Trastevere has been in operation for nearly five years. This year the numbers have very much increased. Every week we get patients who have never attended an evangelical meeting before, and know nothing whatever of the way of salvation through Christ. While waiting for the doctor we get them to unite with us in singing; the effect of this is often marvellous, from sad and sorrow stricken, they frequently become quite cheerful, and say the singing makes them forget their pains. The Mission in Consolazione varies somewhat from that in Trastevere. It was commenced fifteen months since, in a part of the city where no other evangelical meeting existed. It is the spot where the contadini from all the mountainous districts come to be hired during the winter months, returning to their families in the summer. The ground was at first very difficult, and great was the opposition we had to encounter. This Medical Mission is open two mornings in the week, and we find now the sick in that part of the city are most glad to avail themselves of the doctor's advice, whilst many others come to unite with us in the singing and prayer. The Gospel has brought peace to many hearts, and instead of the disorder we formerly had, they listen with pleasure, and I hope profit. If friends will kindly assist me, I shall be glad to open other rooms for this purpose in different parts of the city.

SHOP AND MOTHERS' MEETINGS.

While trying to assist the very poor, it has been a great pleasure to draw from their ranks those who with a little help could be taught to do something to earn their daily bread. For this purpose we formed our mothers' meeting, and opened a shop to sell the work made by our women. After a lengthened period, we are rejoiced in seeing many bringing their work every week, well made, and fit for sale. Many Italians come to us, and express their great satisfaction and pleasure in purchasing the work; we all thankful for this, and hope in time our shop will exert an influence over many of the Italian families. The very small profits we get for the work done, together with the rent of the shop, make it necessary to solicit the aid of friends in England. Very many have kindly responded sending us calico, print, &c., and also articles, both fancy and useful, for our annual sale, held, in December. Parcels sent to the Baptist Mission House, 19, Castle-street, Holborn, W.C., will be forwarded direct to us.

MOURNING REFORM.—A meeting was lately held at York in connection with the Church of England Funeral and Mourning Reform Association, when addresses were delivered on advocating simpler methods of interring and remembering the dead. The Lord Mayor of London has appointed Friday, June 12, at 3 p.m., for the seventh annual meeting of the Society, to be held in the Mansion House.

"GIVE ME TO DRINK."

"GIVE me to drink." A text flashes upon the consciousness at times. It asserts itself; it insists upon association, utterly declining to be pushed aside, and to take itself away. It happened so the other afternoon,—one of the last days of the last month, when there was a beautiful sky but a biting wind,—and when a poor asthmatic woman, with a feeble baby perched upright on her knee, sat panting for her breath on a bench in one of the stations of the Underground Railway. Her dress was very meagre; her face was plain, unattractive, and painfully anxious; her breath could only be fought for in short, hard gasps.

There came a porter to her, in all the modesty and that somewhat of brusqueness and incoherence that comes from being about to do a kindness unexpected and unusual. "Take this," he said; holding out a cup of cold water. "Perhaps it is better than nothing. We haven't anything else down here. Don't hurry about it," he went on, when she had taken a quick drink, and was gratefully giving him back the cup for fear he was obliged to hurry off. "Sit as long as you like. Take a sip at the time. All right. You can leave the cup on the seat."

It came so aptly. It was such a fitting pendant to a scene which had just been left. So this other shall be put down, that, with the two together, their blending may have proper understanding. It was the spacious and sightly waiting-hall of the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic—that part of the structure where out-patients sit till their turns come to be called in to the doctors' rooms. It had been seen to be well lighted, well ventilated, well warmed; it was furnished also with a carrying-chair, so that, should a patient be seized with a fit, there could be prompt and swift removal to where there would be the best help and the best appliances. In the same way, the seats were comfortable, with backs and foot-rails; for there are stated hours when the place answers as hospital-chapel, when it must present a very touching sight. In short, nothing had been omitted which would make it serve its benevolent and excellent purpose at the very best.

But then there had been seen such a number of patients! Bench after bench of them; full and full; ten on a bench, or a dozen on a bench, till the tens and dozens counted up to a hundred, and the hundred had run right over, and into two or three scores more! As many as that, stiff with paralysis, or distorted by it; or heavy with epilepsy, or overstrung by it into convulsive starts! And as many as that, at this one attendance, on this one day! Ah! yes. From which it comes, that let the doctors be ever so expeditious, many of these poor patients (and the anxious friends bringing them) must sit there hour after hour—three hours, four hours sometimes, getting weary, getting faint and fagged (for they come from all parts of London; they are not especially denizens of the small streets and courts near by), getting a little thrown back, perhaps, in their mysterious ailments by the suspense they are undergoing, and the agitation of it. What can come out of this but the repetition of those four words that Jesus uttered, "Give Me to drink."

So it has been done. The Ladies' Samaritan Society, which takes up the womanly and charitable work the hospital cases disclose only too plenteously, has made this one of the streams into which its benevolence flows; and it has put a steaming tea-waggon in one corner of the hall, with a neat hospital housemaid by the side of it to serve tea out, and to hand up slices of bread and butter from the dishes where they are ranged in high piles. This cannot be gratis quite; or the ladies would have no funds left for the rest of their work, besides the wide consideration that to give too much may rub off the fine delicacy that should remain with both giver and receiver. But there is the smallest possible charge made for it, a charge which involves a loss. It is only a penny for each helping; for all of which there are scores of patients who cannot afford it, and have to go without.

When the porter at Gower-street Station was seen to give a poor, suffering woman to drink of the best he had—out of a handle-less cup, out of the common porter's room, taken away from its common purpose for this Christian service, and when he was seen to do it readily, unobtrusively, vanishing down the dark platform out of the way of thanks, and yet full of trust that the cup would be safe, the thought came, too strongly to be overborne, that in his little work there was the same spirit as was in the other work just left, and there might be good if the two were shown. Are there not many who have more to give than the porter had? Are there not many who would like to give it, and to the same end, now it is brought to their memory that the end exists? Are there not many who would thirst not, after they had given, and who would neither have need to come hither afterwards, to draw? Let them yield to their good impulse, if it be so. Then will they be Samaritans, as the porter was a Samaritan; and the ladies of the Samaritan Society, in Powis-place, will be thankful to be aware of their good fellowship. J. H.

Miss S. Whitmore, clerk to the Committee of the Ladies' Samaritan Society, in connection with the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, Queen's-square, Bloomsbury, thus writes:—

"The serious falling off in the Samaritan Society during 1884 arose partly from the fact that the hospital is being rebuilt, and that the wards and Samaritan office were closed from July to December. The work of the Society will now be permanently carried on at the above address, and the Committee earnestly hope for a continuance of the generous support of the readers of The Christian. The hospital will be completed this summer, and the number of beds will be augmented to 150. The work of the Ladies' Samaritan Society must necessarily be largely increased, and the need of funds will be greater than ever. The Princess of Wales has consented to open the new hospital in June."

MORE MISSIONARIES FOR CHINA.

THE Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society, of 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., continues to render good service to the cause of missions. A farewell meeting was held on April 17, when three young men, Messrs. Gray, Gulston, and Miles, proceeding to China, in connection with the China Inland Mission, were commended to God. Mr. Farwell, of Chicago, presided, and spoke some words of encouragement to those who had heard and were obeying the command, "Go ye into all the world," &c. Mr. George Williams kindly sent a present of the Word of God in Chinese for each. These Mr. Farwell presented, accompanied with wise admonitions. Mr. Miles came in for a pile of other volumes.

Mr. Gray, with native Welsh fire, detailed how a little sister, by her life and death, had led him to devote himself to the Lord's service in China. Mr. Gulston, who hails from Enniskillen, had been led to devote himself to work in China through having a desire to fill up the gap in the ranks made by the death of his friend Mr. McCarthy. His own brother had given himself to Ireland, and so he felt free for another land. Mr. Miles said he had been working among the Chinese in London with Rev. George Piercy for some time past. He now felt the Lord would have him go to China itself, and would send some young man to take his place in the East-end.

Mr. R. Paton and Mr. Piercy added some words of counsel and encouragement, the former citing one or two of Henry Martyn's difficulties and victories. We are sure our readers will wish "God speed" to these three young men as they go forth to lift the banner of the Cross in a distant land.

LIFEBOAT WORK.—Already this year the boats of the Royal National Lifeboat Institution have been instrumental in saving 239 lives.

May Meetings.

CHRISTIAN COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION.

IN the regretted absence of Lord Shaftesbury, Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., presided at the eleventh annual meeting of this Society recently held at Exeter Hall. The report, read by the Secretary, Mr. H. D. Brown, showed that 96 Colporteurs are at work in and around London, in twenty English counties, and in the Principality of Wales. In addition to the work in towns, about one thousand villages are visited regularly every month; in many of these places there is no other systematic missionary visitation. The Colporteurs have also laboured at markets, fairs, and on the beach at seaside resorts. A good work continues to be done among domestic servants. One who recently asked for a novel bought a Testament instead. Housekeepers and mistresses have also been reached, and in one case a lady in high social position bought a large quantity of the books. Public-houses have been visited, also seamen, and workgirls in the city. The Ladies' Branch has been satisfactorily started, and gives promise of success.

Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, as treasurer, said that no year had been so prosperous as the past one; although there was a deficit of £138 the sales had amounted to no less than £10,000.

The Chairman said: I have two of the colporteurs working in my own neighbourhood in Kent, and I can say from personal knowledge that the agency is one which is greatly needed, and that the agents are men well fitted for the work. One of the sad features of the present day is the neglect of public worship by the working-classes and others. Something ought to be done to meet this condition of things. It is not more church accommodation that is needed, but more church inclination. This colportage work, more than any other, supplies the lack, by carrying the Gospel to the homes of the people. The rural populations are sparse, and in many places would remain unvisited altogether but for the colporteurs. Let Christian people support a colporteur wherever practicable. For my own part, I am so convinced of the importance and value of this agency that I will lose no opportunity of urging everybody I can influence to support it.

The claims of the Society were further advocated by Dr. Donald Fraser, who, while recognising the advantage of teaching by the human voice, reminded the audience that the sound of the voice dies away, and may be soon forgotten, while the book with its teaching remains. Rev. A. G. Brown's address bore upon the subject of personal dealing with souls. The colporteurs were no mere booksellers, but really consecrated men, and he ventured to say that this was the great want of the day. Mr. Brown instanced his own conversion through a faithful word spoken to him, as showing the efficacy of individual effort. He had on one occasion paused during his discourse, and requested every Christian present to speak personally to the hearer sitting next to him. As the result, sixty-five persons were, it is believed, led to decide for Christ. Rev. Dr. Thornton dwelt mainly on the need that exists for this agency, by reason of the great mass of evil and soul-destroying literature that constantly streams from the press. This evil we must counteract by fighting the devil with his own weapons.

Mr. George Williams bore testimony to the good being done in his native village in Somersetshire, by the colporteurs, and told of a young man he well knew who went to the bad in America, but was brought up from the lowest depths of misery through reading a book. He earnestly hoped the Society would speedily get the number of their Colporteurs up to three figures. Mr. T. A. Denny said that at least sixty persons had been saved in Sussex through the labours of the two men stationed there. It was amazing to think what ignorance exists among the rural population relative to spiritual matters. Mr. Denny offered to give £25 towards clearing off the deficit if Mr. Morley would give £50. Mr. Morley heartily accepted the challenge. Mr. Robt. Paton said the best houses in the land were being reached by this Society. It was announced that £100 had been subscribed on the platform.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.

THERE was a good attendance at the 25th annual meeting of this Society in the Council Room of Exeter Hall, on Wednesday afternoon last week, and the earnest and hopeful tone of the several speakers was quite in keeping with the occasion. Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard presided. The annual report was read by Mr. E. W. Thomas in the regretted absence through indisposition of Mr. Christien. It consisted to a great extent of a review of the last twenty-five years during which the Society has been at work, not only in London but in garrison towns, seaports, and large commercial centres, and the meeting could sympathise with the grateful spirit in which reference was made to the undoubted successes achieved.

The Chairman said the Society demanded the cordial co-operation and sympathy of true-hearted Christians. We cannot but believe, he said, that these efforts must be blessed, and that we shall reap if we faint not. The venerable Vicar of Islington, Prebendary Wilson, moved the adoption of the report in an address which touched all hearts. "At my time of life," he said, "public speaking is not quite so easy a matter as it was years ago, but I could not refrain from attending here to-day to express my very cordial sympathy with you in your good work. The subject before us is one of the most solemn, one of the most difficult, but one of the most important that can be brought under the notice of a Christian audience. If we have not gone behind the scenes we can form but a small idea of the enormous extent of what our Chairman has rightly called 'this enormous evil.'" In proceeding, the speaker referred to the great good which the Society was doing.

Addresses, full of hearty sympathy with the object which the workers have in view, were given by Rev. G. W. M'Cree, Rev. F. Hastings, Mr. Drysdale, Mr. Nixon, and Mr. E. W. Thomas, who remarked that if Mr. C. Wilson M'Cree, the financial secretary, were appealed to, he would tell them that the treasury was almost exhausted, and that the Society stood in urgent need of help.

REST AFTER WORK.

THE nineteenth anniversary of Miss Mason's Homes of Rest for Christian Workers, Cambridge-gardens, Kilburn, brought together a large company of friends, on Wednesday week. Miss Mason warmly welcomed her numerous visitors. In her report she stated that over 600 persons were admitted during the year into the two Homes, Kilburn and Eastbourne. The total receipts had been £2000. A debt of £500 remains on the Eastbourne Home. It has been a year of great blessing from God; many workers have been quickened afresh, and through them the people to whom they ministered. The Home and Foreign Mission Fund is low, having been nearly all expended on the workers who had need. The little "Home of Rest Monthly" has met with much favour, and can be sent post free for one year for 1s.

The Chairman (Dr. Monro Gibson) said he believed this House of Rest was a House of God, a Bethel indeed. It was a centre of work, of prayer, of missionary effort, and of blessing all round. Rev. E. A. Stuart, of Holloway, in a very brief address, dwelt on the rest of soul that comes to the meek and trusting believer. Rev. D. B. Hankin, Mildmay, said there was an urgent need for Christians to be filled with the Holy Ghost, and this unspeakable blessing could only be secured through whole-hearted surrender to God. Mr. T. A. Denny felt that the Kilburn Home was a blessed spot to come to, because of the invigorating spiritual atmophere that pervaded it. He thought the Institution was admirably conducted, and, with a characteristic touch of humour, added, "I thoroughly believe in a committee of one, with power to act." Mr. Haig Miller was eloquent in his pourtrayal of the present age as being one of unrest, and dwelt on the need for rest for busy workers. In glowing terms he dilated on the beauties of Eastbourne, and said he did not wonder that the jaded workers returned refreshed. This good work ought to be better supported. Colonel Sandwith and Rev. Mr. Towers also expressed their thorough sympathy with Miss Mason in her work.

A sale for the benefit of the House of Rest will be held at Kilburn on May 20 and 21. Suitable articles, such as clothing, provisions, stationary, birds, flowers, &c. will be thankfully received by Mrs. Mason, Cambridge Gardens, Kilburn-road, N.W.

WIDOWS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

THE annual meeting of the Widows' Friend Society was held last week at the Mansion House. Mr. Charles E. Cæsar read the report for 1884. The applications received during the year ending December 31 were 135. Grants were made for various purposes, the most common being for sewing-machines or mangles. In many cases in which the Society had been unable to make a grant, help had been given in various ways. The Society maintained ten pensions of £5 each voted to Christian women of more than sixty years of age upon the recommendation of a member of committee.

SOUTH AMERICAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

THE 34th annual meeting took place in Exeter Hall last week, under the chairmanship of the Archbishop of Canterbury. Rev. T. Simpson read the report, which reviewed the efforts of the Society during the past year. The Archbishop said the work of the Society was undoubtedly done in a very thorough, steady, earnest, and progressive way. They began modestly, and if they preserved the spirit of prayer and lived in faith God would do yet great things for them, and the work would be one of the greatest works hereafter that shall have been accomplished in the history of the promotion of Christianity. Mr. Torrens, M.P., Bishop Perry, and others spoke. It was decided to make an appeal for help in commencing a mission to the Paraguay Indians.

BAPTIST YOUNG MEN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

MR. H. M. BOMPAS, Q.C., presided at the members' meeting of this Society, held at the Baptist Mission House, Holborn, last week. The secretary reported that the work of the Society during the past year had been altogether of a satisfactory and cheering nature. Forty-five schools and young men's classes had been visited, with beneficial results. Addresses were given by the chairman, Mr. A. A. Baynes (the treasurer), and Mr. Holman Bently, from the Congo, the latter especially referring to the work among the children on the Congo. Dr. Carey, of Delhi, described the work under his care in that city, which included the training of 700 children, who were daily taught the truths of the Bible. He testified to the special value of medical knowledge in connection with missionary work.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

IMMEDIATELY after the anniversary of the Midnight Meeting Movement, it was interesting to go to 200, Euston-road, where a number of young girls attended to receive prizes for having satisfactorily filled the situations found for them, after leaving the Homes in connection with the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution.

After tea Mr. Barnes distributed some choicely bound books to young servants, who had kept their places over periods extending from months to years, and the little chapel at 200, Euston-road, was packed as closely as it well could be with those who came to receive the gifts. He spoke some kindly and solemn words upon the word "Service."

Mr. E. W. Thomas said he could not find words to express his thankfulness at seeing such a happy assembly. It clearly showed the yearning which the girls had for the old home which, by God's blessing, had been of such great use to them. A very happy evening was spent in singing, and in listening to the good words spoken.

SOLDIERS' HOME, DOVER.—Mrs. A. Field, 16, Westgate-terrace, Redcliffe-square, S.W., writes:—It has been my privilege to stay in this Home for a week. If the real good which is being done were known I am sure many would feel it a privilege to help. Letters come to Miss Wright from soldiers in China, India, and the Soudan, as well as from others in England, some of whom have received Christ in this Home, and have been the means of the conversion of others. As regards situation and size, the house is quite inadequate to the wants of those who attend. A new and larger Home in the centre of the town is much needed. Miss Wright regularly visits the wives married without leave, for whom she has a meeting weekly. I only wish there was such a meeting in every garrison town. Help will be thankfully received and acknowledged by Miss Wright, at the Home, 22, Castle-street, Dover.

REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES ON WAR.

ON Sunday week, this earnest and popular preacher addressed his congregation at Brixton-hill on the subject of war, taking for his text the prophecy of Isaiah, that "they shall beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." He said, as reported in The Pall Mall Gazette:—

From the very dawn of civilisation the race of Adam had been decimated by six great social evils—slavery, drunkenness, the social evil, ignorance, pauperism, and war. Christ was slowly persuading them that at any rate some of these were not necessary evils. It was a curious circumstance that the only one of these six social evils which the Bible, in direct and express terms declare should cease to be, was war; yet perhaps most Christians in their ignorance imagined this one evil to be more justifiable than any other, and some of them imagined it was even a blessing. The Quakers were undoubtedly right in arguing that war was never justifiable in the interest of the Christian Church. All the religious wars that had ever taken place had been a curse; but speaking as citizens of this world, and not of Christ's kingdom, they were justified, under certain circumstances, such as the defence of fatherland, in resorting to the shedding of blood. But let no man accept that statement with a light heart. It was greatly to be desired that they, as ministers of the Gospel, should dwell more than they had been accustomed to do upon this subject. He was quite ready to take the blame himself for superficial earnestness with respect to war. If they had neglected their duty, let the pulpit be condemned. Why were they silent? It was because their consciences had never been enlightened on the subject of war as the consciences of their forefathers were on the subject of slavery. How unspeakably careful Christians should be never to speak a word and never to give a vote that would promote or sanction any war that was not lawful in the light of Gospel morality. It was high time that they realised their direct and personal responsibility with respect to any war in which England took part.

Alluding to the dreadful possibility that war might yet break out between this country and Russia, Mr. Hughes did not take upon himself to say whether such a war would be lawful or not, but strongly emphasised individual responsibility for the attitude they assumed towards the dread possibility. They heard a great deal too much in these days about national rights; but there never was a right without a relative duty. They were in no danger of forgetting their national rights, but they were in very great danger of forgetting their national duties, and it was high time the people realized that the Sermon on the Mount and the 13th chapter of the First Book of Corinthians were as binding upon Parliaments and nations as upon individuals. While defending our own rights, it was equally our duty to do to other nations as we would they should do to us. In deciding the awful issues of peace or war, our motive must not be selfishness, but what would best promote the happiness of the human race. They were not to assume, however, that the extension of the British Empire necessarily meant the promotion of the happiness of mankind. There were too many misguided patriots who imagined that the British Empire was the ultimate and only object of the creation. For his own part he was ready to say, let the British Empire perish to-morrow if its existence hinders the progress of Christ's kingdom. They were too apt to be carried away by national pride and conceit, by fatal misconception, and prejudices inherited in their very blood; and the fact that all our great wars had been folly and calamity ought to fill them with deep humility in contemplating another. The Crimean war was a huge blunder, and the war with France, ending with the Battle of Waterloo, was absolutely unnecessary. War might be a dire necessity, but no good ever came of it; the innocent suffered for the guilty; beneficent social reforms were delayed indefinitely; and the recurrence of war was fatal to the highest happiness of the human race. But God in his great mercy had taught them in the text that, politicians and journalists notwithstanding, the day was coming when war shall cease to be.

MR. HENRY THORNE AT MARYPORT.

ON the invitation of the vicar of Maryport, in association with all the evangelical Nonconformist ministers and leading Christian laymen in the town, Mr. Henry Thorne held a nine days' united Gospel mission here. From the first, the people came in large numbers; the interest and power increased as the mission proceeded. This earnest servant of God has been made a channel of much blessing to many: believers have been quickened, and not a few brought into the light. There was no meeting without fruit. The Bible readings were much valued, and very helpful, and the Gospel meetings were attended with overwhelming power.

As a result of the Mission, an enthusiastic meeting was held in the Athenæum, on Tuesday evening, the 21st instant, largely consisting of young men, when a branch of the Young Men's Christian Association was unanimously formed. It would be difficult to convey in words an adequate idea of the affectionate appreciation in which the services of Mr. Henry Thorne are held by the people of Maryport.

YOUNG MEN IN BRIGHTON.

THE Brighton Y.M.C.A. had a double anniversary last week, when an afternoon meeting was held in Steine House, and an evening assembly in the Pavilion. Both were largely attended, many well-known friends of the Association being present to show their sympathy with the excellent work carried on by, and in the interest of, young men.

The report, read both afternoon and evening by Mr. A. Wiffen, secretary, was replete with interesting details of the work in its varied branches. It concluded as follows:—"In reviewing the past, and considering that it has been largely an experimental year, we can but congratulate all who have had any share in the development and maintenance of the Association, and we think all its friends will rejoice that over 800 young men are united in sharing its benefits. It has been the endeavour of the Committee to work the Association on sound common principles, and with the greatest economy, and they are glad to report as a result a balance in hand on the current account. The Committee are most anxious to secure the sympathy and co-operation of the Christian public, and to work in harmony with the other Associations working in the town for similar purposes."

Archdeacon Hannah, who presided in the afternoon, expressed the deep gratification he felt that a movement of that kind had taken such root, and seemed so likely to flourish in Brighton. Rev. Dr. Hamilton pointed out that to work the Institution successfully they need to put away and out of view all the little "isms" which some people prized so highly. If, too, they desired to make the young men of Brighton men in all respects, they must induce and enable them to respect the body the Creator had given them, to exercise their intellectual faculties to the highest, and teach them that their spiritual life was not something they could put off or on at will. They must not, however, wait until they got all the young men into churches, or be constantly preaching to them, but there must be a wide extension of the great principles which underlie such institutions as the Young Men's Christian Association.

Mr. Marriage Wallis presided in the evening, and among those who gave addresses on behalf of the work were Rev. C. Spurgeon, jun., Rev. J. J. Hannah, Rev. W. Fraser, Rev. R. P. Downes, and Mr. Campbell White, of Glasgow.

CHRIST'S ASCENSION.

Acts i. 9—11.

ON lovely, lonely Olivet
A little company have met
To see their much-loved Saviour Friend,
To his own heaven again ascend.

Lo! on the mountain-side He stands
With words of love and lifted hand,
And then, as evening veils the skies,
He re-ascends before their eyes.

O wondrous, soul-transporting sight!
They gaze with rapture and delight,
Till yon bright cloud of golden hue
Conceals Him from their wondering view.

And by their side two angels bright
Stand clothed in robes of dazzling white,
Who say, "Ye men of Gallilee,
Why gaze ye up so steadfastly?

"This Jesus, who for you was given,
And who is now gone up to heaven,
Shall so return to earth again
In glorious Majesty to reign."

Oh, make us ready, Lord, we pray!
Hasten that blessed, glorious day;
Come take us home, that we may be
For evermore, dear Lord, with Thee.

EVANGELISING IN BILLINGSGATE.

ALL around the far famed fish market an unusual sight presented itself on Tuesday morning last week. Large posters announced a religious meeting to be held in the rooms of the Fish Trade Association, to which all persons connected with the trade were invited. The success which has attended the Billingsgate Mission, under the superintendence of Mr. Vicary, of the London City Mission, encouraged Mr. Walters, a salesman in the market, to make this further effort to bring the men under the influence of Gospel teaching; hence this novel service in mid-day.

In a few introductory remarks Mr. Walters stated that having been converted four years ago through the preaching of Rev. Archibald G. Brown he was anxious to benefit others, and had obtained from the Market Committee the use of the rooms for a Gospel service. Although the room was not filled there was a sufficient number present to show the possibility of getting a mid-day audience, and it is to be hoped that this most laudable effort will be repeated. Mr. Finlay Gibson said he would at one time have thought a movement of this kind the greatest folly, but by the mercy of God he saw things in a very different light now.

In an address sparkling with illustration and lively incident, Rev. A. G. Brown bore testimony to the blessedness of true religion, even if there were no hereafter. He had been amazed to find among the inhabitants of the East-end slums how many there were who admitted that they once were professors of religion. One of the most miserable "convicts" he ever visited showed him a Bible in which was inscribed: "Presented to —— by the teachers of —— Sunday-school, as a mark of their love and esteem for faithful service rendered as superintendent."

It is clear that a good weekly, or even daily mid-day meeting might be held among these market men, provided there were a suitable and adequate building in connection with the mission which could be made available. We may add that Mr. J. Newman, of Crooked-lane, E.C., is treasurer.

NEWCASTLE CITY MISSION.—The annual meeting of the Newcastle City Mission was held at the Central Hall, Hood-street, on Tuesday, April 21. Mr. Thomas Hunter presided. The report presented by Mr. Leitch showed that nine missionaries were fully engaged, besides one evening missionary. The work had been carried on quietly and with satisfactory and substantial progress. The work of Temperance reform had been materially forwarded, and Bands of Hope formed. The religious classes had been well attended, and the preaching of the Gospel, the visitation of the sick and dying, tract distributing and mission work generally, had been prosecuted with faithfulness and zeal. Addresses were given by Rev. Canon Lintott, F. W. Boumphrey, J. B. Hastings, W. J. Townsend, R. Brown, and J. Mitchell.

Notes and Comments.

THE correct address of the lady willing to receive applications for the emigration of respectable young women, to localities in Canada where there are correspondents prepared to receive and watch over them, is the Hon. Mrs. Joyce, St. John's Croft, Winchester, not Manchester, as printed in our notice last week.

In the following "Occasional Note" The Pall Mall Gazette recently said what we have often said in other words:—

> "'An Outraged Mother,' whose voice has never been heard when her drawing-room has been filled with morning newspapers whose reports of sensational divorce cases uplift with shameless hand the veil which screens the indecencies of fashionable immorality from the 'innocence of young daughters,' protests in The Daily News against any reference to the subject of 'the Sacrifice of Women,' from the point of view of the philanthropist and the reformer. If 'outraged mothers' were less given to cant there would be fewer outraged daughters in the streets to-day."

The Fawcett Memorial Committee seems to have wasted much valuable time in discussing the meaning of "Higher Education for the Blind." Certainly Mr. Fawcett accepted the meaning to be—giving practical education that will enable the blind to lead independent and useful lives. We have before us a printed summary of evidence given by Mr. Fawcett, before the Court of Chancery, upon the settlement of a scheme for the Gardner Trust. Copies may be obtained by enclosing a stamped envelope to and F. J. Campbell, Royal Normal College Dr. Academy of Music for the Blind, Upper Norwood, S.E.

> "So far as possible," said Mr. Fawcett, "the blind should be trained to earn their own living. . . . It makes all the difference in the world whether you begin treating them with the idea that they are suffering from an affliction which cuts them off from active exertion, or whether you brace them up by telling them they have got a certain difficulty to contend with, which, however, can be sufficiently surmounted for them to earn their own living. . . . If a blind person earned only half his own living, he would be a much happier person than if he depended entirely upon charity. I would remove from him as far as possible the feeling of dependence, which, I believe, is by far the most severe trial the blind have to bear."

It seems to be becoming a medical fashion to prescribe whisky for patients. It is put forth as an aphorism that whisky is the old man's wine, and that it is the most wholesome of all spirits, and the inference is drawn that old men cannot do without it. While we admit there may be cases in which alcohol may be a useful medicine, the experience of the Temperance hospital sufficiently proves that it is not essential in any case.

The following prescription appears in The Evangelical Magazine:—"The best medicine for old age is a bright little grandchild in the house. Many people who are not blessed with one would live longer if they adopted some wee bairnie from the workhouse schools."

Mrs. Everett, The Rectory, Dorchester, proposes to raise in the town in which she lives a memorial to her late brother, Sir HERBERT STEWART, who lost his life in the Soudan. The memorial is to be "a public house without the drink." A public-house well situated is offered, and £600 required. We hope Mrs. Everett's laudable object will receive the help it deserves. Temperance workers are invited to make a house-to-house collection, however small the subscriptions might be.

The report recently issued of the Free Christian Church in Italy is one of great interest. Depression for the smallness of evangelistic results in the Peninsula has weighed on the hearts of good men. The priests of Rome have made much of Protestant disunion. The committees of the Waldensian and of the Free Italian Church met lately. The two bodies, in full strength are to meet this forthcoming autumn. The highest hopes are formed that there will be a union, and the two churches outside the Waldensian valleys will probably bear the name of the Evangelical Church of Italy. The Supreme Courts of the two Churches have, in principle, approved of Union.

One of the most gratifying facts in the history of the time is the progress made by the people of colour in the United States in the matter of education. A remarkable thirst for this has sprung up among the free Negroes and Indians. They have now several universities; and of the Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute in Virginia, a special correspondent of The Nonconformist and Independent writes, that it has sent out 500 graduates to carry forward education, has now under its care 496 Negroes, and 130 Indians, all of whom are eager to learn, and to prepare for work among their people. Surely there should be prayerful remembrance of these promising movements.

We read (Rev. xii.) that when that "old serpent called the Devil and Satan" was cast out, he was termed by the angels "the accuser of our brethren which accused them before our God day and night." May it not be held that now on earth he accuses the brethren to one another? What censorious judgments have been passed upon men of God! What unjust suspicions have been awakened! What wounds and alienations have been caused! How has many a promising work been nipped in the bud by false accusations! What untold injury have these things done in every age to the cause of Him against whom Satan fights!

When the efficacy of prayer, and of intercesssions for the sick, are topics of reviving interest, it will be useful to learn what was thought about prayer by the people of Constantinople at the end of the fourth century. The following is from Chrysostom's "Fifth Oration on the Incomprehensible":—

> "Prayer is a powerful weapon, the fountain of ten thousand blessings. When neither the skill of physicians, nor the abundance of remedies, has power to charm away the malady, a prayer with spirit-throes, even from a poor man, will put the malady to flight, provided it is accompanied with intense concentrated exercise."

The discourse shows that Chrysostom appealed to what the people knew and had proof of.

May we not all ask in relation to prayer—"Have we exhausted the promises of God?" No; not a tenth, not a thousandth part. In this respect there are trees full of fruit, yet untouched, and fountains flowing copiously, yet untasted. Faith should grow stronger as life goes on, and every day should make us richer from the all-sufficiency of the Forerunner.

Some people are fearfully exercised lest Britannia should lose her prestige. If she would take care of her own children, and devote her attention to raising up the fallen, providing for the fatherless, reproving with equity for the meek of the land—in a word, if her ambition were to fulfil the ideal of government sketched out by the Holy Ghost for the coming King, her prestige would take care of itself. The righteous God takes care that righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin (the opium traffic in China to wit) destroys the prestige of any people.

One of our law lords has found time and heart to write a pamphlet on "Drink," in which he says:—

> "Can nothing, then, be done by law to diminish the mischief caused by drink? I say 'No.' Whether it is desirable to limit the number of drink-shops is a matter as to which I have great doubt and difficulty. But grant that there is the right to forbid it wholly, or partially, in place or time, I say it is a right which should not be exercised."

The only remark we would make on this oracular deliverance is, that we trust the great majority of the nation will very soon, through their representatives, give a direct negative to such astounding propositions. It seems to us that if this thesis of the law lord were carried out to its logical issue, the occupation of the law lord would be gone. Every law interferes with the liberty of somebody. If drink shops cannot justly be closed by law, how can they justly be licensed at all?

At the recent annual meeting of the Associated Congregational Churches in Yorkshire, the subject of reform in the modes of conducting public worship was discussed. It was said, that while all else had been subject to change, in adaptation to modern thought, the devotional services of the sanctuary remained what they were long years ago. This is the more remarkable in Nonconformist bodies since they are not tied by traditional fetters, but have at least the freedom of flexibility in all their arrangements.

In this matter of public worship a change has been complained of as being for the worse. Formerly, time was allowed for practical appeal in the space allotted to the sermon. Now the sermon has been made short, and all else long. To fill up the traditional hour and a half there are often long lessons, long prayers, and long hymns. These may fail to sustain interest, and are likely to produce a sense of monotony. The essential features of profitable worship are the absence of the formal, the utter eschewing of officialism, the presence of reality, sympathy, naturalness, and fervour.

In the conduct of prayer-meetings there has in many places been a marked and profitable change. Instead of prayers, each one of which had to fill up a certain length of time, we have now the expression of the particular want or thanksgiving that has lain on the heart, or some special intercession on behalf of others. This change has brought freshness, variety, and the exercise of faith into meetings: it has been like a breath of new life to many of them. Why should not public worship equally get out of the conventional, and bear a recognised relation to the aptitudes and varying circumstances of a congregation? Life and obvious sincerity are everywhere craved, and soon come to be appreciated.

In reference to the notice in our issue of April 16, we are desired, by Messrs. Hutchison & Co., of 4, Guildhall Chambers, E.C., to state that owing to the generous response of the public, who have contributed no less than seven thousand parcels of newspapers, books, &c., they are unable to receive any more. The self-imposed task of this firm in undertaking to pack and forward these free of charge will be, doubtless, much appreciated by the sick and wounded in Egypt.

We trust that Messrs. Spiers & Pond, who are the refreshment contractors for the Inventions Exhibition, will set an example to the Drinks trade, and retail their mineral waters at such a price as will bring them within the reach of all classes. If the use of refreshing non-intoxicating drinks is to be encouraged and increased, the price must be such that no reason can be given for the purchase of intoxicants in preference. Why a bottle of soda-water should cost the consumer twice as much as a glass of Bass's ale, which costs considerably more in the first place, we are at a loss to know. Hotel proprietors, chemists, and others who have the retailing of these drinks, are not only acting against their own interests in handicapping the business as they do, but they are discouraging an important means of Temperance reform.

A Christian tricyclist desires, through our columns, to suggest to his many brother cyclists that they should zealously utilise the many opportunities they have of scattering tracts during their journeys in the rural districts.

The movement commenced some time since by Professor and Mrs. André, for imparting a free musical and elocutionary education to young people desirous of helping in Gospel Temperance work, has proved an undoubted success. The Professor has now opened extensive training schools, with a view of developing this effort and providing a counteractive to the influences of low-class and degrading forms of amusement and recreation. If it is continued to be carried on upon its original philanthropic basis, the project ought to secure general and hearty sympathy.

Some startling revelations have recently been made public as to overcrowding in Dublin. A Dublin correspondent states:—

"Dr. Cameron has issued a report of the state of the tenement houses in Dublin, which contains some startling disclosures. The statistics which Dr. Cameron gives are appalling. It has been ascertained that of the 34,211 inhabited houses in Dublin 7234 are occupied by two or more families; and of the 54,735 families in Dublin, no fewer than 32,202 live in 7234 houses, which contain 48,116 rooms, thus giving a room and a half on an average to each family, some of whom are twelve in number. The rents received for the rooms are almost incredible. The tables show that in four Dublin streets there are 1074 families occupying 1,482 rooms in 175 houses, for which they pay a yearly rental of £8311 11s. For one house, valued at £8, the eight families who occupy it pay £82 a year rent. In no city in the empire have so many unhealthy houses been closed under the Public Health Act. Four hundred and thirty cellar dwellings and hundreds of tenement rooms in damp houses have been closed up. Stables in lanes behind fashionable squares and streets have been converted into dwelling-houses, and the huddling together of persons of both sexes and all ages in a single apartment is attended by obvious evils. Dr. Cameron states that a large number of the tenement houses are owned by gentry living in England and abroad, whose houses are let on lease to middlemen, who sublet the rooms and make large profits."

If this may be regarded as a fair specimen of the way in which the interests of the humbler classes throughout Ireland are cared for, one can scarcely wonder at the prevalence of deep discontent with English rule.

Many of our readers will be glad to learn that Mr. Wiliam Noble has now by God's mercy been restored to a large measure of health, and is able this week to resume his public engagements. A lengthened voyage has been prescribed for the health of his esteemed wife and fellow-worker. Towards the end of July Mr. and Mrs. Noble expect to start for Australia, going by way of the United States and Canada.

Mrs. Jeffries has been committed for trial on the charge of keeping a house, or rather a series of houses, of infamy, in Chelsea. The Pall Mall Gazette thus commented on one aspect of the case:—

"Just think what it amounts to. Here is an ex-police inspector who swears that of his own knowledge a certain creature—we refuse to call her a woman—kept no fewer than eight houses of ill-fame, from which she was in the habit of exporting English girls to foreign voluptuaries, one of whom, according to the statement made in court, was none other than the present King of the Belgians. Yet because the creature was rich and patronised by 'persons in high life,' her violation of the law was systematically overlooked, and when a police inspector, who refused to be bribed into overlooking this crying scandal, reports the case to his superiors, he is laughed at and snubbed and ridiculed for refusing a bribe. The matter cannot be allowed to rest here. This alleged encouragement of vice and connivance in bribery on the part of highly-placed officers of the police must be probed to the bottom, no matter what reputations suffer in the process."

This is more easily said than done; and we may be sure that efforts will be made to prevent the probing here demanded. To carry the case forward will require funds, which those who wish to destroy these nefarious traps are asked liberally to supply, either through ourselves or Mr. Dyer, 31, Paternoster-square, E.C.

We rejoice to know that there are a large number of Christian men in the Police Force, and many a good deed is done by them by day and night, of which no note is taken on earth, but whose record is on high. But to men who have not the backbone of Christian principle, the temptation to accept bribes to silence is almost irresistible.

We ask the special attention of London readers to the announcement of a public meeting to be held at Prince's Hall, Piccadilly, on Thursday next, May 7, at 3 p.m., to consider the Bill for the Protection of Minors, and "to protest against the retrograde step of the Government in lowering the age of protection from sixteen to fifteen." Many earnest social reformers of both sexes have promised to be present. We trust that from this gathering, as representing the Christian public generally, there may go forth such a loud and certain voice as shall induce the Legislature to remove this blot from the Bill, and to make its provisions as effective as possible.

We have received several communications advocating the view of "the secret rapture" of the saints, in opposition to Mr. Linnell, in his article, "The Gathering Storm." We have inserted the letter of Mr. Warrand Houghton, but cannot afford space for what would prove an endless discussion—and a barren one. The question whether the Church is or is not to pass through the great tribulation has greatly exercised a few Christians for forty years, and is as unsettled now as when it was first raised. It is contended that the expectation of the coming of Christ, with nothing to intervene, tends more to holiness than the other view. But if the testimony of Christ and his Apostles as to his present power to keep us from falling, does not produce holiness, neither will any interpretation of unfulfilled prophecy. Neither "the secret rapture," nor any other theory, availeth anything, but the keeping of the commandments of God (see 1 Cor. vii. 19.)

Mr. Govett, of Norwich, sends us a pamphlet, the title of which describes his view; it is midway between the other two: "Unwatchful believers of the Church will be left in the Future Great Tribulation."

Holiness is a quantity ascertainable only by righteousness. Holiness is the inward condition, righteousness is the outward conduct. "He that doeth righteousness is righteous." Thank God, the doing of righteousness is not confined to either of the above schools, nor even to those who believe (as we believe) that only the marriage bells of the Lamb and his Bride can ring in the thousand years of peace. The saintly Fletchers, of Madeley, loved the appearing of their Lord far more experimentally than most of us; and they enjoyed his coming daily, or the walls of their house could not have testified, as they did, to the outpouring of their souls in praise and prayer.

"From whence come wars and fightings among you? come they not hence, even of your lusts which war in your members?"—lusts of covetousness, ambition, power, pride, revenge. If there were no war of lusts in the members there would be no wars of men in the world. If there were no bottomless pit, full of worldly and deceitful lusts, in the deceitful above all things and desperately wicked heart of man, there would be no other bottomless pit from whence the fallen angel could let loose infernal locusts to devastate the earth. "A fire devoureth before them, and behind them a flame burneth; the land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness; yea, and nothing shall escape them." This is the Divine portraiture of war, whether it be the lusts which war in the members, and destroy the promise of a useful and joyful life; or war between nations, which turns the fruitful field into a desolation. Passing strange if any Christian men or women should be found among the people that delight in war.

Dr. Allon (says Truth) has just given a very concise account of a fact that puzzles a good many people—namely, that most preaching is so completely inefficacious. "I have generally preached sermons," he says, "bearing on great public events, but I have always restricted myself to the exposition and enforcement of general principles, just as in inculcating commercial righteousness I have refrained from a personal indictment of the individual grocer or milkman concerning whose adulterations I may have formed a tolerably decisive judgment." This is not the method that commends itself to all, nor does it conform, I should have said, to Scriptural usage. Certainly it was not the general principle of Nathan's parable that brought David to repentance, but its personal indictment, "Thou art the man." Indeed, who ever heard of a sinner being brought to "newness of life" by "the exposition and enforcement of general principles"? (We commend this to preachers in general. The preaching which wins souls is a preaching which has teeth, and bites.)

Mr. J. R. Hall, who has for a number of years past laboured in Home Mission work at Stratford, E., with many tokens of God's blessing, has recently removed to Newport, Mon., for visitation and other work in connection with the Y.M.C.A. The prayers and good wishes of many friends in London will follow Mr. and Mrs. Hall to their western home, where they are already well known and much esteemed, for previous faithful service in the Gospel.

Gravesend.—An effort is being made to liquidate the debt on the Church-street Mission, Gravesend, as an offering in memory of the late Miss Broom. The Hon. Secretary, Mr. J. D. Driver, Gravesend, desires to make an appeal to our readers in aid of the fund.

FORTY YEARS IN THE MINISTRY.

By Rev. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

THIS month completes forty years spent in the happy work of the ministry of the Word. Although I did not leave the dear old Seminary of Princeton (in the early morning "hack" for New Brunswick and the New York boat) until May 1846, yet during the last year of my course I often tried my 'prentice hand at preaching in the neighbouring school-houses and rural churches. Princeton used to break her colts into harness among the farmer-folk that dwelt at Rocky Hill and Blawenburgh and other hamlets hard by. Never shall I forget that early ride in the hack to Brunswick, with a load of Seminarians, all bound for their respective fields. Dr. Henry A. Boardman had given us a good send-off on the previous evening, and we had said farewell to our venerated "Pope," as we playfully called him, Dr. Archibald Alexander, and to Dr. Miller, to the brilliant Dr. Addison Alexander, and to that beloved John, Dr. Hodge. What Seminary ever had a nobler faculty than that?

My own destination was to Kingston, in the beautiful valley of Wyoming, which Campbell has made famous by his poetic story of "Gertrude." Six months I spent there, supplying the pulpit of their absent pastor, and boarding with a typical Yankee farmer named Ezra Hoyt; the neighbours dubbed me "Ezra's boy." On one hot Sunday I held forth to a company of Welsh miners in the little hamlet of Harrison, which has since grown into the goodly city of Scranton. Eccentric and eloquent old Thomas P. Hunt was one of my neighbours, and gave me some homely counsels that stuck like a chestnut-burr. His hump-back and mellifluous voice will be remembered by thousands who ever heard him pay his respects to the rum-sellers.

It might savour of egotism to narrate here my subsequent experiences in Burlington, New Jersey (where that prince in Israel, Dr. Cortland Van Rensselaer, was one of my little flock), and in Trenton, in Old Market-street, New York, and for the last quarter of a century among my beloved flock in Lafayette Avenue. My only object in intruding these personalities at all is just to tell my younger brethren how good it feels to have preached the precious Gospel of Jesus Christ for forty years. And preached it, too, without any "ifs" or "buts" or mental reservations. No malaria of modern doubt has ever invaded this study, or set teeth to chattering in yonder sanctuary. It is a blessed thing to get the Gospel-grip with a solid "I know whom I have believed" under your very soul. Young brethren! never waste one moment in defending your Bible. God will take care of his Word if you only take care to preach it, and urge your people to practise it. Henry Drummond well says that the highest evidence of Christianity is a Christian.

Next to an unwavering faith in the everlasting Word, I ought to thank God for unbroken health. Too many ministers murder their health by bad hours, bad diet, and other violations of the laws written on the human frame. During forty years I have never been kept from the pulpit by sickness but two Sabbaths, and then the ailment was not serious. The only two bodily functions that a pastor really needs are lungs and legs, the functions to talk with on Sunday, and to walk with during the week from house to house. The talking and the walking will go on as long as you secure sound sleep and sound digestion. Take your mornings for studying books, and the rest of the day for studying door-plates and firesides, and pick up your recreations as you can catch them. Monday is a good day to unbend the bow, and "go a-fishing."

As I look back over these forty years in which my kind Father "has led me" through anything but a "wilderness," I rejoice and give thanks for the privilege of using tongue and pen in pointing sinners to a Saviour, and the sorrowful to a Comforter, and ripe old saints to their long home in heaven. These have been years in which God has been making wonderful chapters in history. The opening of the Pacific Coast, the cabling of the globe by electricity, the overthrow of American negro-slavery, the unlocking of the Dark Continent, the spread of Sunday-schools by thousands, the magnificent march of Foreign Missions, and scores of other great events, belong to these four decades. What is the brief life of one humble minister, and what the poor scratchings of one pen, and the utterance of a single voice, amid all these mighty movements of the kingdom of Christ towards its triumph? Nothing at all, except just to show that God has some use for the weak things as well as for the weighty and the mighty in his providential purpose. Atoms have their little sphere as well as planets, and old Orion. Let no Christian shirk his work because he carries only one small taper. Wendell Phillips once said that the pulse of a girl could beat down slavery if it were piled as high as the Rocky Mountains. It is the aggregate and united pulse-beat of Christendom that shall overthrow the kingdoms of darkness.

Nearly all the ministers of Christ who were famous when I graduated from Princeton are now silent in the tomb. The Alexanders, the elder Beecher, Barnes, Beman, Kirk, Bushnell, Thornwell, Hodge, McIlvaine, have struck their glorious strokes and left an echo in heaven. Not one of them, if he could come back to earth, would accept a monarch's throne in comparison with a pulpit. Not one of them has any joy amid the angels in glory that transcends the seraphic satisfaction of having led dying sinners to the Cross of Calvary.—New York Evangelist, April 9.

A NOVEL DRAWING-ROOM MEETING.

THE following announcement was stuck up on the gate-posts of one of the large villas in Clapham-park:—

SUNDAY AFTERNOON SINGING AND DRAWING-ROOM MEETING FOR MEN.

Willow Dene, King's-road, Clapham-park.

DEAR FRIEND,—It will give me great pleasure to see you at my house as above on Sunday afternoon at 3.15 o'clock. There will be an hour's singing, followed by a short address.

If you already attend any other place, come when not engaged there and give me a helping hand by bringing some companion or fellow-workman.

If you go nowhere, you are just the very person I shall welcome most heartily; and please understand, if your clothes are not as good as they were when new, the welcome is to the man, and not to the clothes.

Now I hope you will not be so unkind as to refuse this homely invitation, but will accept it as cordially as it is given by,

Yours very sincerely,
EDITH SPICER JAY.

On Lord's Day, April 19, I responded to the invitation. In a short time not only the large drawing-room, but the hall, and also the staircase were crowded. The audience represented all classes, from the blind lace-seller to the City merchant. As this was the first anniversary, a number of the Clapham Male Choir were present and sang some beautiful hymns: the first hour is always taken up by singing. The selection is left to the class, and we never heard more hearty singing.

At the end of the hour Miss Jay came in. She was just recovering from a severe illness, so that it was impossible for her to be present all the time. After thanking the choir, she said they trusted to have a choir of their own before the next anniversary. She gave a short history of the meeting. It was laid on her heart after Mr. Moody's visit to Clapham last year to try and do something for those about her. After much prayer, she started the meeting with fifteen men; last Lord's day they had ninety, and to-day even more. No free teas had been given. The work was quite unsectarian, and the real secret of their success could be summed up in two words—prayer and love. As she went on to declare the simple Gospel, illustrated by touching anecdotes, many a strong man was to be seen in tears. The address was spoken in such a loving manner that we came away stimulated and refreshed. J. B. G.

OBITUARY.—At Kelvedon, Essex, on April 22, Emily, beloved wife of George Foster, aged 52, deeply mourned.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON SERVICES.

THE Colston Hall services were commenced about seven years ago by Rev. E. G. Gange, Baptist Minister, of Broadmead Chapel, Bristol, one of the earliest of Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's students. He felt that there was need of a service that would attract the many who do not attend the usual places of worship. He announced that he would preach at Colston Hall each Sunday afternoon for a month. The hall will comfortably hold 3500 people, and on the first Sunday afternoon the doors had to be closed. Nearly a half-hour before this time (3 p.m.) it was estimated that the number shut out exceeded those who were able to get into the building, which could not have been less than 4000. During the four weeks the doors had to be closed long before the time to commence. Many cases of conversion have been proved to have been the direct fruit of those four weeks' services.

At the end of that time, Mr. Gange and his co-workers, with other ministers of various denominations, who had been interested in the success of the work, were unanimous in deciding that it would not be right to close the mission, but to continue it as "Evangelistic services for the people." A kind friend promised to be responsible for the expenses, and for inviting various ministers to co-operate in giving addresses in the future, with this result, that the funds collected at the meetings have for the most part paid for the necessary working expenses, and there has been no difficulty in obtaining willing help from Episcopal, Baptist, Congregational, Wesleyan, Presbyterian, and other ministers, as well as laymen. Amongst others, Messrs. Studd and Stanley Smith spoke to about 5000, both large and small halls being crowded, on the last Sunday before they started for China.

The noticeable feature of the congregation is the large proportion of working men who attend, the proportion being about three-quarters men. Season begins the first Sunday in October and closes the last Sunday in May.

As to the fruit resulting from the services during the last seven years, there have been many scores of cases that have come to the knowledge of the workers in which the altered lives of the individuals have proved the sincerity of their profession that they have been born again. On one occasion seven men went to hear the preacher of the afternoon at his own church in the evening, and informed him that they had found peace in the afternoon.

The following interesting case occurred early in the present year. A husband and wife went to the service unknown to each other, and also their son and daughter unknown to their parents. The wife was the first to return home, and on the arrival of her husband asked him where he had been. He replied, "Where you ought to have been—Colston Hall; and if what the preacher says is true, we have been all wrong." The wife commenced crying and told her husband that she had been at the service too, and that she had determined to lead a different life. At this juncture the son and daughter came in and informed their father and mother that they had just come from Colston Hall and had been deeply impressed. The family held a prayer-meeting, which had never been known to take place in the house before, and that night witnessed their united joy in accepting the Saviour.

In connection with the cases of conversion which have been dealt with by the workers, it is a pleasing feature of the unsectarian spirit in which the services are carried on that the converts are recommended to report themselves to the ministers with whom they or their families may have been associated in a greater or less degree previously.

ANTI-VIVISECTION.—A drawing-room meeting was held on Wednesday week in the house of Mrs. West Watson, Blythswood-square, Glasgow, in connection with the Scottish Anti-Vivisection Society, when a deputation from Edinburgh attended, consisting of Rev. Dr. Adamson, Rev. R. Henderson, and Rev. John Baird. At the close of the meeting an influential committee was formed, and there is every prospect of a powerful auxiliary being organised in the West of Scotland.

MR. HAMMOND IN GLASGOW.

THE daily reports of the work given in The North British Daily Mail continue to be full of the deepest interest. In its issue of Thursday, April 23, we read:—

"Mr. Hammond's second meeting at Augustine Free Church on Tuesday night was, in spite of the steady rain, more largely attended than even on the previous evening, and the interest decidedly deeper. Here, as elsewhere, the interest will probably prove cumulative through a series of services. Several letters from young people were read, giving evidence of a stirring impression having been made on the minds of many in other parts of the city. The address of Mr. Hammond was direct, earnest, loving, and level to the understanding of the little hearers. Letters and anecdotes were used to give it wing and point. To many the after-meeting will be regarded as the distinctive feature of the whole service, to which the previous hour is but preliminary. To this meeting nearly the whole congregation remained. Perfect order was maintained throughout. Many young people were personally conversed with by accredited Christian men and women. Not a few appeared to be intelligently impressed by what they had heard. The elders and Sabbath-school teachers of the congregation had a large part in this delicate and important work. Altogether, the service was fresh, striking, and impressive."

The Daily Mail of Friday says:—"At his yesterday's meeting Mr. Hammond spoke about the good accomplished by the printed page, and of the importance of Christians using every opportunity of circulating Christian truth.

"At the praise meeting yesterday, Mr. Hammond requested that those who had one thing for which to thank the Lord should express it in a sentence. All over the house, one after another rose, and with brevity stated the one especial object for which they were grateful. We enumerate a few: Mr. J. S. Napier expressed thanks for the meeting in Augustine Free Church last evening, and for the privilege of speaking to an adult earnestly seeking Christ; a lady expressed thanks for the conversion of her daughter; another for the work among the police; a Sunday-school teacher for the conversion of three of her scholars; another for the conversion of three children in the meeting last night; Rev. Mr. Colvin, for the work last evening in College Free Church Mission Hall, and for evident tokens of blessing there. Rev. Mr. Gullan, of Augustine Free Church, specially returned thanks for great blessing in the meeting on the night before in his church, and for his belief that many more there would be made happy this week if they entered the new life. The meeting in St. Augustine Church on Wednesday night was larger than ever. At the end of nearly every pew sat workers, ready to engage in conversation at the commencement of the second meeting. Nearly all remained for conversation."

AN OPHANAGE SUNDAY.—Miss Cole, of the Mount Hermon Girls' Orphan Homes, Kilburn, writes:—At the recent conference on social questions I did not say, as reported, "Ministers should preach a sermon once a year on behalf of orphanages," but I asked, Why cannot we have an Orphanage Sunday as well as a Hospital Sunday? and said that it would greatly aid those who are engaged in the work of "saving the children" if all the ministers of the Gospel would preach a sermon once a year for the benefit of Protestant Homes for orphans and destitute children. Doubtless many more would feel encouraged to take up such work if they could count upon a sum of money being gathered yearly for their support.

A HOLIDAY HOME FOR YOUNG WOMEN.—The honorary secretary of the Ryde Young Women's Christian Association and Sea-side Home, is anxious to enlist a deeper and increased interest in the work, so as to meet the needs of all young women, whether engaged in business in Ryde, or who may come for recreation or rest. At Garfield House all young women find a welcome, and have the advantages of Bible classes, library, reading-room, Christian companionship and sympathy. Terms for Board and lodging 14s. a week.

JANE A. JOHNSTON, Hon. Secretary.

Garfield House, Ryde, I.W.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

MR. AND MRS. HENRY WIGGAN have held a fortnight's mission in Pump-square Chapel, Boston, Lincolnshire. The meetings were crowded, and large numbers have professed a change of heart.

MR. JOHN HARRIS has held a series of evangelistic meetings at West Bergholt, assisted by Mr. Cowell, of Colchester. The meetings were crowded, and each evening a large number came forward for prayer. Many testified to finding peace.

KILBARCHAN, N.B.—Mr. F. E. Marsh has closed a three weeks' mission in the Memorial Hall here. Not a few have made profession to a change of heart, while others have been deeply impressed. The Bible readings were a source of much blessing to Christians.

Two sons of our friend Mr. F. Newth, 43, Percival-grove, Clerkenwell, who are at Qu'Appelle, N.W. Territory, Canada, are desirous of putting up a log preaching-room. We may be sure it is much needed. The sympathy and aid of any friends at home will be very pleasant to them as a token of brotherly fellowship. £50 will be needed.

KIRKPATRICK FLEMING, DUMFRIESHIRE.—Evangelistic meetings were conducted here in the Free Church and in the Mission Hall, Eaglesfield, by Mr. James Moodie, the soldier evangelist, in all for four weeks. The attendance was good; many were conversed with at the after-meetings, and several have professed conversion. Mr. Moodie is an earnest, useful, and devoted labourer.

GEORGE MILLS, Pastor.

DUKINFIELD.—Mr. George Hefford has concluded a three weeks' mission here. His services have excited a deep interest among those who rarely attend a religious service, as well as amongst others who are connected with various religious interests here. Many have been stirred up during the last three weeks in this dark village, and I trust that not a few have accepted the Saviour.

G. SHAW.

THE BIBLE AND GOSPEL VAN.—We have started on our summer campaign with our large two-horse van, and have already visited Ashton-under-Lyne annual fair. On April 4 we had the joy of circulating about 1300 Bibles and Testaments. Stalybridge and Oldham have also been visited, and we are now at Rochdale, en route through Yorkshire. We are nightly privileged to hold forth the word of life to a large and attentive crowd of working men and women. Tokens of blessing have been seen. We earnestly desire prayer. Communications may be addressed to 21, Crellin-street, Barrow-in-Furness.

WHARTON AND WEAVER.

LOUISVILLE, KY.—Mr. G. Needham has concluded his evangelistic mission in this city. The Courier Journal, which has given lengthened reports of the addresses from day to day, says in its issue of April 4: "At the close of Mr. Needham's meeting last evening the congregation gathered around to grasp his hand in farewell greeting. Good wishes and prayers were showered upon him. Mr. Needham left on the midnight train for Montgomery, Ala." In its "religious notes" the same paper announces a coming visit from Mr. Philip Phillips and a mission by Mr. Thomas Harrison, "the boy preacher." It also says: "The book stores have almost sold out their supply of Mr. Moody's books The sales have been very great."

DEPTFORD.—The friends of Mr. Trevor Francis will be glad to hear that the scene of his labours in Deptford Lower-road has sustained a most delightful transformation. The old iron building has disappeared, and in its place a substantial structure has arisen, which we hope will for many years be a source of blessing to the hard-working community among whom it is placed. Its opening was celebrated on Wednesday week, and it was the occasion of the meeting of a very large number of Christian workers. Mr. Francis wishes it to be known that the cost of the hall is £1100, of which he has received and paid £600. He would be pleased to receive aid to enable him to meet other instalments shortly falling due.

CHILDREN IN MANCHESTER.—A very successful Children's Mission has been held for a week at the Orphan Homes, Cheetham-hill, Manchester. The leading thought of the week, on which everything bore, says a correspondent, was the loving "Come" of Jesus. The Scripture reading, the prayer, the hymns, as well as the addresses, were all bearing on the great theme. Step by step the children were led from a sense of their need to praise God for the "joy of coming," and having come, to "follow Him whithersoever He goeth," and seek to be like Him. There were no after meetings, but all was earnest and loving, and watchful eyes were around; whenever impressions were seen, the cases were followed up quickly, each in their own homes.

MR. GEORGE SOLTAU writes:—I have concluded an interesting month of Gospel services in the two towns of Westfield and Montdair, New Jersey. Large numbers of the Church members have attended every afternoon for Bible-readings, and a very deep interest has been shown in the work. Addresses on the Tabernacle, with large diagrams, were found specially helpful; the result has been a deepening of the spiritual life in the hearts of very many, and a more thorough devotion to the Lord's work. The evangelistic meetings have been blessed to very many in all classes of society. I continue similar meetings in other towns in New Jersey during the month of April. The Children's Scripture Union has been started in several places at the close of the meetings, and there will soon be hundreds enrolled in it.

MR. HUDSON TAYLOR IN CHINA.

DEAR SIR,—The kind interest shown towards us by many of your readers, and the contributions sent through you in aid of our work week by week, led me to desire to write a few lines to you before leaving for China. Pressure of work before my departure rendered this impracticable. You will be glad to know that I and my companions had a safe and prosperous journey, and reached Shanghai on the 3rd of this month.

We were able to have Bible-readings morning and evening on the way, and had some private opportunities of conversation with those on board with us. We were cheered by good reason to believe that at least two of our fellow-passengers found Christ, or rather were found of Him, and that some of our fellow-believers were refreshed and strengthened.

On arrival in China, the first tidings which reached us was the blocking of the Ningpo river, and an attack on the force at the mouth of it by the French fleet. It has happened most inconveniently, as several of our friends had just reached Ningpo, and are unable to come on here. Mr. Williamson writes that he was bringing his two little girls to Shanghai, that they might proceed to the school at Chi-foo, when he found the river blocked. Mr. and Mrs. Rudland and child likewise had reached Ningpo, on their way to England, and are detained by the same difficulties.

The tidings from inland stations, however, is such as to give rise to much thankfulness. Mr. Easton reports fifteen persons baptized at Han-chung. Letters received here from Chentu mention the baptism of five persons by Mr. Riley. The meetings at Yun-nan Fu, conducted by Mr. George Clarke and Mr. Eason, are well attended, the numbers having increased from about eighty to four hundred daily; and there are three candidates for baptism. Two candidates are reported from Tr-li Fu, also in Yun-nan; and at Sha-sï, on the way down from Si-chuen, and near to the borders of Hu-nan, our brothers Dorward and Dick have been encouraged and cheered.

I am sure that your readers will feel with me that we have much cause to be thankful that our friends are in such peace, and are so far prospered in these troublous times. May I ask prayer that if it be God's will this trying war may speedily be terminated, and that out of the evil and present hindrances great and permanent good may result; and that those of our friends who for a time have been prevented from reaching their destinations may be able to do so before long?—Yours faithfully in Christ,

Shanghai, March 11. J. HUDSON TAYLOR.

A CONFERENCE OF LADIES was held in the Finsbury-park Y.M.C.A. Hall on Wednesday, April 15. Mrs. Auckland presided. A branch of the British Women's Association was agreed to be formed, to be called the Finsbury-park Branch. Miss Brewster, in supporting the motion, spoke of the enormity of the evils they had to face, and gave instances of women called of God to become the saviours of his people. In the evening the large hall was filled. Dr. Kirton presided. A cordial reception was given to the ladies who addressed the meeting. Miss Brewster took for her subject "Home, sweet Home," and Mrs. Auckland "Sunday Closing: its Advantages and Blessings."

Letters to the Editor.

INFORMATION ABOUT TASMANIA.

Sir,—Having quite recently visited Tasmania, I may be able to give "Evangelist" a little information as requested. In the town of Launceston there is active, aggressive Christian work being carried on by agencies external to the ordinary denominational churches. A Christian lady who is spending her time and treasure in the service of her Master, and who along with her late husband has given over £20,000 to the futherance of Gospel work, is providing a means of evangelisation which is attractive, and at the same time very successful.

From the short stay I made in Hobart, I think the case is different. There seems to be a deadness of Christian effort, at least outside of the usual methods, and a great need of open-air preaching and other supplemental agencies, which have taken root in Launceston. I may say the Salvation Army is really doing a good work also in this latter town. Having attended some of their meetings, I was well satisfied with the services, as exhibiting many trophies.

OUR GIPSY AND VAN CHILDREN.

Sir,—In elbowing my way through a crowd of racegoers upon Northampton racecourse a few days since I counted upon the "turf" between sixty and seventy vans and tents, in which, or connected with them, were between 150 and 200 English gipsy and van children, and, so far as I could learn, not a score of the poor, dirty, ignorant children could read and write a sentence. There were bright exceptions among them. One good-looking, clean, sharp little gipsy girl was pointed out to me as "the best scholard on the course," and soon began to read portions out of my picture books to the gipsy and van children round her, who were undergoing the process of "initiation" into gipsy "craft" with downhill tendencies.

With the van and gipsy children's training in the midst of racecourse morals their prospects for heavenly joy in this world, and the heaven of rest and happiness beyond, are as black and dark as sin and our neglect can make them.

In one van, between the bed and fireplace, there was a donkey that had "taken a little cold," and was being nursed by the mistress of the van. I was sorry for the donkey, but my heart ached to the core to see the five children growing up in the midst of worse than heathen ignorance and sin. The poor English gipsy children played with dirt round the ashes of a dying fire on the ground, surrounded by thousands of human beings with hearts dead and cold to the cries of the nearly 200 gipsy and van children on the "turf" for bread that will turn them into angels. The poor children may cry on, our Government will not listen to them.

In another van there was a child sick of scarlet fever, with death and angels close to the van door waiting to carry it to heaven. The parents of the three children are respectable travellers, but are tired of the "road," and are going to "settle down." They thoroughly agreed with my plans for bringing the 30,000 gipsy and van children under the influence of the sanitary officers and schoolmasters on the easy lines I proposed—viz., by the registration of the vans and a free education for the children living in them—and they gladly offered to sign any memorial to the Government that would help to bring these things about.

Policemen must have no part or lot in the matter. They must be sent on their holiday to make room for civilising influences and agencies.

I was also told on the "course" that smallpox has recently been making fearful havoc among the travelling van dwellers on the outskirts of London. In the present state of our national affairs a thousand petitions will be of no use, and to all appearances the gipsy, van, and acrobat children must go in their present course of ignorance and evil training for ever. Only a short Act on the lines of the Canal Boats Acts is needed, but gipsy and van children are out in the cold, and in the cold they must remain till doomsday. And it would appear, also, that, with a few exceptions, those who have the carrying out of the Canal Boats Acts have gone to dwell in the land of Nod.

It will bring more glory and profit to us as a nation to put pens in the hands of canal, gipsy, and van children, than to put swords in the hands of men, and we shall do well to open our eyes fully to the fact.—Very sincerely yours,

George Smith, of Coalville.

The Cabin, Crick, Rugby, April 21.

PURITY OF LIFE.

Sir,—Among the many things brought to the front, and pressed home to us in these wonderful times, is the necessity for purity of life,—the necessity, spiritually, morally, socially, and physiologically considered. And it is a grave, mighty subject in every one of its bearings. But while it is being delicately and effectually met in reference to the great social evil, it is almost untouched (as far as the press and public Christian effort are concerned) in regard to the young. It is confessedly a subject requiring wise, firm treatment, and who so fitted to grapple with it as the servants of Him who is "of purer eyes than to behold iniquity"?

Medical men avoid it; parents are often ignorant of it; and many guardians and instructors of the young affect to think lightly of it, or ignore it altogether. But in a free translation of a German work into French, "Voix d'Avertissement contre Les Péchés Secrets, d'après Le Prelat Kapff," published by Meyer, Lausanne, the translator supplicates pastors, governors and directors of schools and colleges to have their eyes open upon the children, and the youth, male and female, confided to their care; and not only this, but to warn them in time of the danger of sins of impurity. He says that he has been enabled to speak publicly on the matter very often, and that the result has been a special blessing.

The writer of the present paper has received a very earnest letter from a lady in the West of England, in which she says: "This question of education in all its bearings—spiritual, intellectual, and physical—has been pressing upon me more and more. Of course, we each do our little day's work, but it is (to me at least) at times with a feeling of almost hopelessness on one side. Thank God, on the other side, we can say we occupy till He come, and that we know we are bearing precious seed to bring in a harvest with rejoicing. But cannot more be done? As an amateur I am at a disadvantage, as well as at an advantage; yet the Lord lays this question on me, 'Has not the time come for Christian teachers and parents to take counsel together on some possible steps for the future? At any rate, to enlighten each other on points which surely the great enemy has too long hidden from our sight?'" After alluding to the apathy of many responsible principals, and to the usual English idea that girls ought to be left to their own honour, and not to be supervised, the writer says, "Supervision ought to be really as engrossing as teaching. To have eyes, and ears, and heart, and thoughts open without spying, and without letting the supervision be irksome to good girls, requires a concentration and an earnest prayerful attention that are as much a tax upon strength as any giving of lessons.

I have long thought that the sense of honour is rapidly declining in England, nationally and individually, and it is only an ideal, a pleasing fiction, to imagine that a number of boys or girls gathered together out of various homes can be trusted if they are only 'put upon their honour.'" After giving instances of terrible depravity in young children, of the evils of bad companionship, of the deceitfulness of the heart, in which "while men slept the enemy came and sowed tares," and of the incompleteness of intellectual education in too many cases, this earnest one continues: "I can only conclude by again asking you, Can nothing be done by the Christian women who have thoughts and hearts to bring to the subject? Early education is a woman's work."

Yes, it is, in every one of its many phases. Possibly this evil, which saps the very life-blood of our youth, which is filling our lunatic asylums, and which is sending so many to an early grave and perdition, is unknown in its hideousness to many of those who have the charge of the young. Let the call go forth, let them know of this moral leprosy, let nothing be hid of its damning power, but let those who are in the way seize the hydra, and begin to destroy it at once. And who are these who can do this? Our Christian sisters and mothers. As Miss Ellice Hopkins says, it rests with woman largely to combat this evil in (or before) its incipient stage. Mothers, watch your children, and guard them from the insidious destroyer—secret impurity. And watching, do not forget to warn. Guardians and governesses, look to your charges, and, detecting the presence of the vile thing, do not scruple to deal with it as with death. While this crusade of Purity is going on, do not let the home, the nursery, and the school-doors be closed to the eye of vigilance and the heart of prayer.

We want common-sense, earnest, wise, out-and-out women for teachers, who are not afraid; women, who by love and the light of God's Spirit in their hearts, can do this work for his sake.

Schools should be like families, not more than twelve girls or boys to be supervised by, not a multitude of teachers, but by one or two "wise-hearted," whose sensible, loving direction and guidance shall make purity and honour not only a possibility in their charges, but an emulative reality. The worm in the bud destroys the merest hope of a perfect flower. Here, in this subtle, secret sin, we have the germ of that hideous growth which goes by many names, but which is the curse of humanity, the enemy of Christianity, and the greatest blot upon our civilisation—the great social evil. Much is being done; but it will be but a slow process unless the friends and advisers of youth come to the rescue, recognising in solitary vice what the afore-named work describes as "Le plus grand ennemi des jeunes gens." Oh, may the voice of warning go forth, so that ministers, parents, guardians, instructors, and philanthropists may begin, in the Lord's name, to seek to avert the ruin that threatens the bodies and souls of so many of our children!

STORES v. SHOPS.

Dear Sir,—I have long been convinced of the growing evil of gigantic shops absorbing and ruining smaller ones. But I fail to see how the Co-operative Stores are sinners above other large shops. Nay, they have set an example of ready money—no clap-trap advertisements, no inferior articles—which must do good in the long-run. Stores employ workpeople as well as others; I have never heard that they under-pay them. Their goods pass through fewer hands, perhaps, but is that not an advantage?

The only person who can, with any show of justice, complain is the individual owner of the shop, who, in the case of an ordinary large shop, may be making his thousands without anyone else being profited. In the case of the Store, he is, of course, represented by the shareholders, many of whom, may I remind you, are widows and persons who really need the money they save. I should not like to lay on the consciences of such persons a heavy burden by speaking of the Stores as an "abomination," until I clearly understood whom they were robbing.

Is it not just possible that Stores are necessary evils to remedy greater evils? When other shops have begun to deal in their fair, common-sense way, and on the ready-money principle, I will admit that they are unnecessary evils; but this is not yet the case. I should be very glad to be corrected, but at present I am Unconvinced.

Sir,—I fear that some of your correspondents write under the influence of feeling rather than under that of reason. Yet in any question of supply and demand so many issues are involved that there is need for the calmest thought. There are two axioms of trade which of late years have been violated by many retail traders, and it is against this violation that the Stores are a standing protest.

(1) The producer is entitled to charge the consumer a price which will repay outlay and give a fair profit. This axiom has been altogether violated by the credit system, which has caused good customers to pay the debts of bad.

(2) The consumer is entitled to require that there shall not be an unnecessary number of middlemen between himself and the first producer. This axiom also has been violated of late years by the multiplication of small tradesmen. A mackerel which costs 1d. on the beach is made to cost 1s. in the fishmonger's shop. Each middleman charging his own profit, and each in a hurry to be rich, taxes the necessaries of life more than a European war.

Now if any class of the community violate axioms, there will certainly come upon them sooner or later a retribution. The wise ones from among that class will learn the lesson and will set their house in order. It is not too much to say that the Stores could not stand for six weeks if every tradesman would set himself to do business upon sound principles and in compliance with the axioms of common sense. Everyone is anxious to buy of his neighbours if his neighbours will let him, but he is not anxious to pay the debts of the rascal who lives for two years upon the shops of the neighbourhood, and then leaves without paying the bill.

The thing is proved by the experience of those who have consented to do business for cash only. A man in my neighbourhood has done this. He has multiplied his trade by ten. More important than all, he is a blessing to the poor, for he gives them what they need at a just price, and on Saturday night you might, as the saying goes, walk over the heads of the people in his shop.

I earnestly invite some of your correspondents to consider that the world is governed by principles, and that they who violate them must suffer.

Cler. Lond.

SIR,—Perhaps a few words from a tradesman on this question would not be inappropriate. Why do people go to the Stores? I suppose I should be told: Because there they are supplied with articles equally as good as those sold by the average tradesman, at a reduced price. Granted, but why at a reduced price? Simply because cash down is paid for the purchases, and consequently the gentlemen at the head of the Co-operative establishments can well afford to give a small discount for ready money. That, in my opinion, is the great secret of their success.

It is a strange fact that many people leave their local tradesmen because they are charged five or six per cent. for taking quarterly or half-yearly credit, and then these same people run to the Stores, pay cash for their goods, and boast about what they can save. I have had a considerable experience of business in London, and I assert, without fear of contradiction, that if the pernicious long-credit system could be done away with, shopkeepers would be able to supply the public on terms as advantageous as any stores in existence. I know that unfortunately there have been and are unprincipled tradesmen who charge ruinous prices, and are not above resorting to a "shady" piece of dealing occasionally; but there are also men who are in every respect Christian tradesmen, endeavouring to be "diligent in business," and in all things "serving the Lord," and who wish to earn a living by acting honestly to their customers and justly to themselves. I enclose my card, and remain, yours truly, F. C. S.

DEAR SIR,—I have read your correspondence in answer to "Dubitans," and I think they certainly do speak of the Stores in an unnecessarily severe manner. One correspondent states that in going to them we help on "the bitter cry." How we do that I fail to see; the stores give employment to numbers of people of all ages and both sexes who would otherwise be out of work. Though charging in proportion more cheaply than the shops for articles, this reduction in price is not achieved by grinding down the poor and lowering their wages, but by charging a merely fair profit on all the articles; whilst many shops charge exorbitantly, more especially in the small shops, who out of the few have to get the profits of the many.

I have found that the small retail shops are the loudest in their condemnation of the Stores. To the large London shops, though affected in a measure, the stores have done immense good by competition, making them reduce their profits, as in several large houses I know, personally, they have done.

I may state as my firm conviction, and dealing as often at the Stores as at shops I have taken an interest in the issues of both, that it was due to the shops in the first instance charging more than their fair profit and grinding down their workpeople that made a reform necessary, and that reform came by forming Stores.

To state one portion of trade that was greatly in need of reform: I now get my chemist's drugs many of them at one-third the cost I used to pay twenty years ago; and at many chemists' they are now half what they were ten years ago, owing to people refusing to pay 7s. 6d. for a bill that would come to 2s. 6d. at the Stores. I certainly think that the Bible teaching to be careful of the money we are entrusted with, indirectly shows that we are not to pay for more than a fair equivalent of the trouble in procuring that article. When, however, extortion is so often employed as it is in trade, both retail and wholesale, I hardly think such a verse as "what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world," &c., used by "Certus" can be applied in reference to Shops v. Stores.

Again, it was the Stores who were the means of introducing the threepence off the shilling discount for books, which has been an immense boon to readers and students both on Scriptural and secular subjects. It has greatly increased the trade in books, and been both useful and profitable to buyer and seller. Many shops who followed the example of the Stores in this respect have enlarged their premises since they adopted this plan.

I have heard many discussions on the subject, and no doubt Stores, like other things, when their usefulness is over, will cease to be; but tradespeople may be very sure that abuse and exaggeration without any effort at internal reform are worse than useless in a free country such as ours. I think we should look at all sides of a social question such as this. EMILIAS MURRAY.

"THE GATHERING STORM."

DEAR SIR,—I feel sure that the grief I have felt at a perusal of the article headed "The Gathering Storm," in your issue of the 16th inst. will be shared by hundreds, and perhaps thousands, of those who rest in the blessed hope, and I therefore plead for a short space in your columns to reply. The way the case for the Rapture has been put by the writer is quite unfair, however unintentionally so. The question is not whether a secret rapture is to be found in Scripture, but whether there is a rapture at all in the volume, and, if so, at what place down the prophetic scroll it is to be inserted.

The first point—that of the existence of the rapture prediction—is as clear as any other statement in Holy Writ. The writer himself will not deny that that is to be found in 1 Thess. iv. 15-18.

The second point, that of its position, is not to be airily dealt with, but involves the consideration of the whole scheme of unfulfilled prophecy. There have been the following views put forward regarding it:—

(1) That its position is synchronous with the judgment of Rev. xx.

(2) Placing that judgment 1000 years after the Lord's coming for his kingdom, that it precedes the millennium.

(3) That it not only precedes the millennium, but precedes a special period of three and a half years unequalled tribulation occurring just previously to the millennium.

(4) That it precedes not only that tribulation, but another period of three years and a half, when the anti-Christ is to make a special covenant with the Jews.

(5) That it not only precedes the period of the seven years' covenant, but precedes a great "hour of temptation which shall come upon all the world to try them that dwell upon the earth," which is thought to commence many years previously to the unequalled tribulation, although culminating in it.

That this glorification of the saints will be accompanied with "a shout, and the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God," is clear enough; but when we consider that spiritual things are foolishness to "the natural man," and that on a former solemn occasion, when "a voice from heaven" spoke, the bystanders "said that it thundered" (the very spirit of the nineteenth century), and that those who believed not Moses and the prophets, will not be persuaded "though one rose from the dead," it clearly rests with the writer of the article to bring some very tangible evidence in support of any belief he may have that the world will recognise these things to be what God's children will know them to be.

In order that your readers may be enabled to judge for themselves the proper position of the prediction contained in 1 Thess, iv. 15-18, may I ask you to commend to them the study of the "sure word of prophecy," concerning which the Holy Ghost tells them they will do well to give heed?

Yours in Christian regard,
G. WARRAND HOUGHTON.

CORRUPTION IN HIGH PLACES.

IN the course of an address at Luton on Sunday afternoon from the words, "They murder the fatherless; yet they say, The Lord shall not see it," Mr. James B. Wookey alluded to the action against the woman Jeffries, instituted by the London Committee for the suppression of foreign traffic in English girls. Amidst immense sensation he mentioned the names of a number of royal and aristocratic persons who have been seen to frequent the infamous houses referred to. He then submitted the following memorial to the congregation, which was unanimously adopted, and he was asked to forward copies to the Prime Minister and the Home and Foreign Secretaries of State:—

"Your memorialists consider it is an outrage upon the rights of the poor, that, five years and a half after the exposure of the foreign traffic in English girls, the English Government has taken no adequate steps to put a stop to the kidnapping of the girls of the working classes; your memorialists respectfully urge you to use your influence to secure the immediate adoption of some measure for that purpose."

PERISHING EAST LONDON.—SIR,—A friend has sent me £5, urging me to put on another missionary in East London. I will gladly do so at once if eleven of your readers will send a similar amount. I do not ask any pledge beyond the single contribution. If the Master wishes the work to go on, He will see to the means.—Faithfully yours, W. EVANS HURNDALL.

WHERE JESUS IS, IS REST.

"In Me ye have peace; in the world ye shall have tribulation." "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

O HEART, that daily longs for rest,
But seeks that rest in vain,
Cease from the sad and fruitless quest,
A calm from earth to gain.

Refrain.—Where Jesus is, is rest;
His love can make a calm;
His presence in the breast
Is hush, and bliss, and balm.

When, o'er my spirit's troubled way,
Shall disappointments cease?
Dissatisfactions, day by day,
Give place to calm and peace?

Nor earthly friend, nor varied scene,
Nor objects sought and won,
Can satisfy the longing heart,
But only Christ alone.

"Where Jesus is!" O Christ my Lord,
Dwell ever in this breast,
Until I hear the welcome word
That calls to heaven's own rest.

Where Jesus is, is rest;
His love can make a calm;
His presence in the breast
Is hush, and bliss, and balm.

GROOMS AND JOCKEYS IN CHANTILLY, FRANCE.

THE town of Chantilly is the French Epsom or Newmarket. In this place horses are trained for races which take place in all parts of France, but especially in Paris, and generally on Sundays. A number of English trainers reside in the town who employ a great many English boys, whose intention is to become grooms or jockeys. These boys are generally left to themselves as to religious instruction, and are exposed to the evil influences incidental to their calling, such as Sabbath desecration, betting, intemperance, and other vices.

Religious services have been conducted for more than twenty years in an English Episcopal Church, and also in a Wesleyan Chapel, but neither of these is well attended. The great want is a resident Christian gentleman and his wife, who would consecrate themselves to work amongst these lads by visiting them, and also by conducting evangelistic and Bible classes in an undenominational place of meeting or in the large harness rooms attached to the stables. Gospel services, followed by after-meetings have already been held at which from sixty to seventy jockeys and stable-lads have listened most attentively to the Gospel message. Hundreds of tracts have been distributed, and several lads have purchased Bibles.

Chantilly is about twenty-seven miles from Paris, and can be reached within an hour by rail. The Chateau of the Duc D'Aumale, and the extensive forest are great attractions to visitors. I appeal to those having time and means at their disposal to come to the help of the Lord in this place. There are outlying districts in which similar work is needed, and in two of which we have already arranged for Sunday meetings. I shall be glad to furnish further details.

EMIGRATION.—The Allan steamer Polynesian, leaving the Mersey for Quebec, this day (Thursday), will have on board a large number of emigrants to various parts of Canada. They will include nearly three hundred persons, who will go out under the care of Rev. John Bridger, of St. Nicholas' Church, Liverpool, to whom is entrusted the oversight, by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, of the spiritual work amongst emigrants. They include agricultural labourers and domestic servants, and also sons of gentlemen, who are going to Canada to enter upon agriculture as their future occupation. Mr. Bridger has charge, on this occasion, of a number of children who are proceeding to a new Home for girls, which he is about to open at Sherbrooke, in the province of Quebec. This branch of the movement is in connection with the Church of England Waifs and Strays' Society, of which Mr. E. D. M. Rudolf, 32, Charing-cross, London, is the hon. secretary.

THE McALL MISSION IN FRANCE.

At the Mildmay Conference Hall on Saturday week a very successful meeting was held on behalf of the McAll Mission in the cities and towns of France.

Claiming indulgence upon the ground of its being the first English audience he had ever addressed, Monsieur Reveillaud said: When Mr. McAll came to Paris he commenced his work in the most abandoned part of the city, and proclaimed the Gospel in the only French words he knew, viz., "God loves you and I love you." People thought him mad, and said it would soon come to an end. They did not then know that the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation, and this was just what France needed to learn. It seemed unlikely that God would cast off the land of the Huguenots, whose martyr-blood had stained the earth. God sent Mr. McAll at the right time. Two encouraging facts are these—religious liberty and willingness to listen to the Gospel. In our meetings I have never been interrupted but twice. The whole land is now open to the Gospel, which, indeed, has a freshness there that perhaps in some measure it has not here. Mr. McAll has taught French Protestants successful methods of reaching the ear of the people—something suited to the peasantry, and something they can understand. They feel perfectly at home. The people sometimes say, "We want a McAll Mission." Indeed, it has become quite a generic term for evangelistic and aggressive work. All the French missions have received an impulse through it, and many of the churches contribute toward its support. An unlimited extension might be seen, if only we had more funds. Please give us your continued and increased aid.

Dr. Beard, in giving a further description of the work, said: When the mission commenced there were ten million persons in France who had never seen the inside of a New Testament. No sooner was the Gospel preached than the people began to say, "This is good; this is just what I need." Their ignorance until that time was deplorable. Some asked if Jesus Christ were a Frenchman, others thought He was one of the great Napoleon's generals, and others asked if He were living now. The deep hold on the people was recently seen at a meeting, when one of the workers was leaving Paris; the people came in large numbers to bid him farewell and present him with a tribute of their love. They were mostly poor people, but they loved him for his work's sake. Recently we opened a hall in a locality where the population are almost entirely atheists. Even Mr. McAll doubted its success; but the place is now crowded, and the work is being blessed. One of the hearers said, on leaving the service last Sunday evening, "This is beautiful; I never heard anything like it before, but I'm sure it must be a true religion." In conclusion, Dr. Beard eloquently contrasted the life and work of Napoleon with that of Mr. McAll—the one having spent a life in destroying men, and the other in saving them. "I know you will stand by him in his arduous work, and one day we shall all rejoice together."

Dr. Edmond, who presided, heartily commended the work, and Baron Hart offered prayer.

At a subsequent meeting held at 120, Queen's Gate, S.W., Monsieur Reveillaud said: To-day France is a tabula rasa, a nation without a religion. In that fallow ground, it is true, weeds grow. Frivolity and licentiousness abound, especially in Paris and in some other districts. But foreigners who have themselves contributed to make Paris what it is, must not judge of all France by Paris. And the day of grace for France has not passed yet. She has given more martyrs than any country in Europe. The sowing time in France has been a time of weeping. It often is so as the sower thinks of the risks that intervene between sowing and reaping. But in this case the harvest is certain, for God is faithful.

The dawn of a new era of reformation has come. The churches after the Revolution were allowed to worship, not to evangelise; and they were chilled by a rationalism which wrought more havoc amongst them than the sabres of the dragonnodes. Gradually they have been waking up. About the time of the Franco-German war they began to feel what a great work they had to do. Then God, who prepared the time, prepared the man. Mr. McAll came to teach us how to reach the people; how to preach not only from a high pulpit, but within the reach of the people. His success shows that the readiness to listen earnestly is not only found in particular districts. It is everywhere! I may say with confidence that if in every canton (a group of about ten village communes in France is so called) you could place an evangelist with the spirit of his Master. He would have a little church in a year; in two years he would have two, and a third the year after. The fields are white, as Dr. Bonar has correctly said. Pray ye the Lord of the harvest to send forth more labourers into his harvest.

MILDMAY PARK CONFERENCE.

JUNE 24, 25, 26.

Beloved Christian Friends,

Another Mildmay Conference is at hand. What hallowed memories cluster round the words; what happy, helpful, holy seasons do they recall! Early days of smaller Barnet Conferences come to our recollection, too, when the beloved originator of our yearly feast went in and out among us, and when the counsel of other valued servants of the Lord, now, like him, in their Master's presence above, cheered and strengthened us.

And what thoughts of gratitude do they also awaken to Him who has so graciously shielded, guided, sustained and blessed us, during the later years in which we have sought, in dependence on Him, to carry on the work committed to us, in the gathering together of all who love the Lord Jesus Christ, who could come to meet with us, for mutual edification and encouragement.

Truly we can say, "The Lord hath been mindful of us," and, as we now venture to invite you once again to the place where we have so often met with Him and with each other, we can confidently add, "He will bless us." There we have already set up many an "Ebenezer;" there by faith we see inscribed "Jehovah-Jireh." In this expectation we ask you to unite with us at Mildmay on June 24, 25, and 26.

The subject selected for consideration this year is one which, we believe, you will regard as suitably following that of our last Conference. Then we were led to meditate on the theme which rouses the highest aspirations of the heart of every child of God, and which will occupy our thoughts throughout a glorious Eternity: "The knowledge of God." It cannot be but that many have given praise for the wonderfully helpful teaching on that subject—the simplest and yet the deepest which could possibly engage our minds—which was brought home to us by the ministry of our brethren in the power of the Holy Ghost.

We now propose for meditation and conference a subject of hardly less importance, since it describes one main purpose for which our Lord Jesus died, for which we have been saved, for which the Holy Ghost dwells in us, and in the execution of which we are trained for the occupations of Eternity.

The Service of God is the blessed employment to which, as his accepted children, we are now called, and which will be our glorious privilege hereafter.

Who can truly estimate its privileges, its dignity, its responsibilities?

Yet, beloved brethren, what poor service do we render; how imperfect; how defiled; how unworthy! Do we not need instruction, guidance, warning, encouragement? Where shall we find it but in our Master's Word, where shall we seek it but at his feet? Surely if we come together in the spirit of true humility, and with the desire to please Him who has called us into His blessed service, He will meet our needs, great and varied as they may be, He will give us guidance, He will renew our strength.

The gracious operation of God the Holy Ghost has been manifest of late years in perhaps nothing more than in the way in which He has been pleased to arouse the desire to engage in his service, in the wide and effectual doors He has opened, and in the number of labourers whom He has been sending forth into the harvest field, both at home and abroad. It is a token of our Father's hand being upon his people for good that, at the present moment, so many are eagerly asking, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" It may probably be said with truth that at no other period in the history of the Church has there been so numerous an army of Christian workers; certainly in none since apostolic times has missionary zeal been awakened to such an extent. Of what infinite importance is it, then, that we should rightly understand what the principles of true and acceptable service are, that we should consider Him, who, as the only faultless Servant, has left us "an example that we should follow his steps." And is it not also true that vast numbers remain, who have not yet perceived the privilege of service, and therefore have not responded to the appeal our blessed Lord makes to all whom He has redeemed?

The subject is then, surely, one upon the right apprehension of which results of infinite importance depend; results which cannot but affect the glory of God, so far as its maintenance is entrusted to his people—the highest interests of the Church of Christ—and the eternal welfare of those whom that Church is commissioned by Him to bring to the knowledge of the truth.

We therefore confidently hope, and ask you to join us in earnest prayer, that our gracious God and Father may be pleased to use this Mildmay Conference to the stirring up the zeal of all his children to "work while it is called to-day," and that He will fulfil His own promise to "direct their work in truth."

May He bring us together in believing expectation of rich blessing from His own felt presence! May He abundantly vouchsafe to us the Holy Ghost!

We remain,

APRIL 30.—ACTS III.

v. 1.—"The hour of prayer."

"No words can tell what sweet relief
There for my every want I find,
What strength for warfare, balm for grief—
What peace of mind!

Hushed is each doubt, gone every fear;
My spirit seems in heaven to stay;
And e'en the penitential tear
Is wiped away.

Lord! till I reach yon blissful shore,
No privilege so dear shall be,
As thus my inmost soul to pour
In prayer to Thee!"—C. Elliott.

v. 12.—"Why look ye so earnestly on us?"—The instruments of God's favour to us, though they must be respected, must not be idolised; we must take heed of reckoning that to be done by the instrument which God is the author of. . . . Useful men must see to it that they be very humble. "Not unto us, O Lord; not unto us, but to thy name be glory." Every crown must be cast at the feet of Christ: "Not I, but the grace of God with me."—Matthew Henry.

vv. 19-21.—"Repent ye therefore, and be converted . . ."—As a general truth, we are here taught that apart from repentance we cannot have the blessing of God; but we should especially note the distinct dispensational truth conveyed by these words. They were spoken to the Jews; upon their national repentance and conversion depends the coming of those "times of refreshing," and that "restitution" or "restoration of all things," which all the prophets declare shall be brought about at the coming of Christ, and by his personal presence on the earth. The risen Saviour is in the heavens until the appointed era arrives, and that era will be introduced by the conversion of Israel.

MAY 1.—ACTS IV.

As the last chapter records the first miracle, so this tells of the first persecution of the apostolic band. They prove the truth of their Lord's words in John xv. 20, 21. Note ver. 4, and comp. 2 Tim. ii. 9.

v. 10.—"By the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth."—"Brought before the Sanhedrin as criminals, they bore themselves as ambassadors." Everywhere, and at any cost, we ought to confess and proclaim the Saviour of sinners. Augustine says: "It is the way of lovers to be unable to conceal their love." See ver. 20; also 1 Cor. ix. 16; 2 Cor. iv. 13, v. 13–15.

v. 13.—"When they saw the boldness of Peter and John."—We may learn here—(1) That if men wish to be successful in preaching, it must be based on deep and thorough conviction of the truth of that which they deliver. (2) They who preach should give evidence that they are acquainted with the Lord Jesus Christ; that they have imbibed his Spirit, pondered his instructions, studied the evidences of his divine mission, and are thoroughly convinced that He was from God. (3) Boldness and success in the ministry, as well as in everything else, will depend far more on honest, genuine, thorough conviction of the truth, than on all the endowments of talent and learning, and all the arts and skill of eloquence. No man should attempt to preach without such a thorough conviction of truth, and no man who has it will preach in vain.—A. Barnes.

v. 27.—"Thy holy child Jesus, whom Thou hast anointed."—You should always look upon the Lord Jesus as sealed and anointed to the office of a mediator, and accordingly plead with Him. Ah, Lord, it is thy office, as Thou art a sealed and an anointed Saviour and Redeemer, to subdue my sins, to change my nature, to sanctify my heart, to reform my life, and to save my soul; and, therefore, do it for thy name's sake, oh, do it for thy office' sake, do it for thy glory's sake! Thou art anointed with the oil of gladness above thy fellows (Psalm xlv. 8). Thou hast a larger effusion of the Spirit upon Thee than others; Thou art anointed with the Holy Ghost and with power after an extraordinary measure and manner; Thou art endued with all heroical gifts and excellencies, plentifully, abundantly, transcendently; Thou art sealed and predestinated; Thou art invested into this office of Mediatorship, under the Father's hand and seal; and, therefore, whither should I go for salvation, for remission, for redemption, for grace, for glory, but to Thee?—Brooks.

MAY 2.—ACTS V.

Here we have the first internal trouble of the early Church—sin and Satan making their inroads among the disciples. Baumgarten remarks: "Even as in the first period of their history, the holy and chosen people of Jehovah could not but remove the first transgressor, Achan, from their midst, so also in its early springtide must the first community of Christ's people separate from its bosom the first lie. But while Joshua and Israel had recourse to stoning, Peter and his associates employed no other means than the word with which they described the sin by its right name. The Church ought not (as many would have it do) to avail herself of any power for discipline but that which resides in the Word of God itself."

v. 3.—"Why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie?"—He doth not expostulate the matter with Satan; he doth not say, "Satan, why hast thou filled Ananias's heart to make him lie to the Holy Ghost?" but he expostulates the case with Ananias. Peter said, "Ananias, why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost?" Why hast thou given him an advantage to fill thy heart with infidelity, hypocrisy, and obstinate audacity, to lie to the Holy Ghost? As if he had said, Satan could never have done this in thee, which will now for ever undo thee, unless thou hadst given him leave.

v. 32.—"We are his witnesses of these things; and so are . . ."—Here is the double evidence, that of Apostles and that of the Spirit, in living converts. We of this day are also Christ's witnesses that He is "exalted a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance and forgiveness of sins;" but our witness must be corroborated by those who, having received the Holy Ghost, live in the Spirit and walk in the Spirit. The evidence of Christianity, the only real and effective evidence, is living men who have been regenerated, and whose good works plainly declare them to be of our Father who is in heaven.—Wm. Arthur.

MAY 3.—ACTS VI.

In this chapter we are shown the first dissension which entered into the Christian Church, human weakness, wrought upon by Satanic malice, leading to discord and strife where only peace and love should be found. Beautiful is the spirit, and gracious the method, in and by which the breach is healed. Would that all Church differences had been, and still were, dealt with in the same spirit of mutual submission, faith, and prayer!

v. 5.—"The saying pleased the whole multitude: and they chose . . ."—The dissension commenced with the Grecians murmuring against the Hebrews; note, to the honour of the Hebraic part of the community, that all the names chosen are Grecian names; it proves the spirit of confidence and love which after all prevailed. Verse 7 shows how the blessing of God rested upon their course of action, as it always does upon those who are peacemakers (Matt. v. 9).

v. 15.—"They saw his face as it had been the face of an angel."—There was a look passing beyond this world into another, so forgetful of all around, so absorbed in what he beheld, so full of reverence and love for the Saviour who met his gaze, of pity and forgiveness for his persecutors, that Christ Himself can be read in that look; the very Christ who suffered so meekly and magnanimously, and whose visible image is now reflected from the soul of his martyred servant.

"He heeded not reviling tones,
Nor sold his heart to idle moans,
Though scorned and mocked and bruised with stones.
But, looking upward, full of grace,
He prayed, and from a happy place
God's glory smote him on the face."
J. Ker.

MAY 4.—ACTS VII.

vv. 2-5.—"The God of glory appeared unto our father Abraham."—You will find in these words that there is a beautiful order in Christian life. Abraham, a simple idolater, dwelling in Mesopotamia, was without God in the world, as is the condition of every natural man. God it was who appeared to Abraham. He was found of one who sought him not. But the God who appeared to him was a God of glory; One whom the carnal mind could never have seen, but who is revealed by the Spirit as possessing a power to draw to Himself—a power stronger than all obstacles. Abraham's response to the Divine call was, at the first, hindered by nature; but nature dies, and the response is complete. God is the genesis—the beginning of everything that is good. God, it is said, appeared unto Abraham, God was at the beginning, the root of things in the salvation of Abraham.—J. Denham Smith.

v. 38.—"The Church in the wilderness."

v. 44.—"The tabernacle of witness in the wilderness."—Two typical facts suggestive of much spiritual instruction for the Church of to-day. Though in the wilderness, not there alone, the Angel of the Covenant says to-day, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the age." The tabernacle of witness, too, "the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man," with all its blessings of priest and offering, ark and altars, is with us. In the midst of the Church, yea, in each sanctified heart, Christ is found "with all his glorious train,

His Spirit, and his word.
All that the ark did once contain Could no such grace afford."

v. 55.—"He looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw . . ."—Two things are to be noticed:—(1) That it was a sight of Christ at the right hand of God. (2) That it was a sight of Christ standing there. Christ being at the right hand of God is mentioned sixteen times in the Bible; thirteen times He is described as seated there, twice as being there, but here only is He spoken of as standing. This appears to have made a deep and lively impression on the mind of Stephen, for he cries out, "Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of Man standing on the right hand of God;" and then, with a sweet assurance that Christ's hands were stretched out to receive him, he cried: "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." Since Christ is at the right hand of God, and since He rises up to receive the dying believer, believers should commend their spirit to the Lord Jesus.—McCheyne.

MAY 5.—ACTS VIII.

This chapter is of special importance as indicating the first extension of the Church beyond merely Jewish bounds, and as introducing to us Saul, "the blasphemer, persecutor, and injurious," who was destined to be God's mighty instrument in the spread of the Gospel through the Gentile world. His connection with the death of Stephen must be regarded as an important link in the chain of circumstances by which he was brought to Christ.

v. 5.—"Philip went down to the city of Samaria."—We do not know what city; probably it was Sychar, and if so, the harvest foreseen, and initiated, by our Lord there (John iv. 35, 36) was now to be reaped. Philip reaps what Christ had sown.

v. 18.—"When Simon saw that through laying on of . . ."—Simon's whole attitude is that of a professional wizard, convinced that strangers have at command magical powers of wonderful strength. He fancied that he could by money be instructed how to acquire, use, and impart, all in the way of trade, these powers. From this act of Simon's comes our word simony, the crime of buying, selling, or bargaining for spiritual functions. Philip was thus by special direction made the means of giving the Gospel to Africa, as Paul, later on, carried it into Europe. When a servant of Christ sells his spiritual gift for money, he commits this grievous sin.—Dr. Lindsay.

MAY 6.—ACTS IX.

v. 8.—"They led him by the hand, and brought him into Damascus."—It was said by Christ, "Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child shall in no wise enter therein;" and, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." And the prostrate Saul at the present moment was dead, indeed, to Judaism, in which he had grown to manhood, but alive in Christ, to whom he was now born again as a little child.—Lewin.

v. 15.—"He is a chosen vessel unto Me."—The Apostles, who were told to wait for the Spirit from on high, busied themselves in electing a colleague; but God had already chosen Saul of Tarsus from his mother's womb.

v. 26.—"They were all afraid of him."—But only until they became acquainted with the facts of his conversion. Churches do well to make sure that those whom they receive to fellowship are really Christ's.

DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES.—Our readers will be glad to learn that the Marquis of Lorne has consented to preside over the annual meeting of "Dr. Barnardo's Homes," at Exeter Hall, on Wednesday evening, May 20—an honourable post which has been filled for seven successive years by the first president of the "Homes," the late Earl Cairns.

Jottings.

Dr. J. H. Vincent is to edit a new Sunday-school paper, published by the Methodist Book House (U.S.)

In New Jersey men who beat their wives receive thirty lashes on the back at a public whipping-post.

Rev. J. P. Clark, M.A., of Leith, an esteemed contributor to this journal, has accepted a unanimous call from the church at Streatham, London.

The death of Rev. Donald Macmillan, labouring in connection with the Baptist Mission at Underhill, on the Congo, is announced.

Dr. George Smith believes that the Berlin Congo Conference has done more for Africa than all the political action of individual States.

The son of Merle D'Aubigné, the historian of the Reformation, and who bears his father's name, is engaged in missionary work in Savoy.

Rev. Dr. Phillips Brooks sails for England on May 9. He will deliver a course of lectures to the students of Cambridge University during the summer.

In his last occasional record, Mr. J. Pascoe reports that the list of candidates for Christian baptism has reached a total of 421, consisting of 313 Indians and 108 Mexicans.

The venerable and learned Professor Franz Delitzsch, of Leipzig, has just celebrated the jubilee of his doctorate. The King of Saxony conferred upon him a high order of knighthood.

A monument erected to the memory of Dr. R. Moffat, at Ormiston, his native place, was recently unveiled by Sir William Muir. In the neighbourhood the day was observed as a general holiday.

The Gospel Union services inaugurated at Washington, U.S., after the Moody meetings, are still doing a good work. Many churches have been blessed with revivals during the past season.

Among those who shared with Dr. Theo. Cuyler the congratulations of his recent celebration was his mother, who has attained the age of eighty-two, and is justly proud and happy in her only son.

Pastors' College.—The annual tea and supper will be held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on May 6, under the presidency of Mr. R. N. Barrow, of Croydon. The meeting is a little later this year than usual.

A Boston (U.S.) correspondent gives the following analysis of Easter Sunday: Music, sixty per cent.; flowers, thirty per cent.; worship, a spiritual pittance granted to sermon and prayer, ten per cent.

Mr. Thomas Spurgeon has received a very cordial welcome on returning to his church and congregation at Auckland, New Zealand. He said his health was greatly improved. The church now numbers 680 communicants.

Rev. Dr. William R. Williams, who died at New York on April 1, is described as "a man who was without a superior in the Christian world, whether we consider his original endowments, his acquired learning, his fidelity to duty, or his elevated Christian character."

The clergymen of Portland, Maine, U.S., have united in an appeal to the newspaper Press of the city to forbid, in their pages the details of gross crimes and reports in full of trials for disgraceful offences before the courts. With an American contemporary, we trust this excellent example will be widely imitated.

A correspondent of The Examiner, commenting on Mr. Moody's meetings in Louisville, says: "So great was the crush to hear him, that a drinking-saloon by the hall was unable to do business because the customers could not reach the door for the greater part of each day. That saloon-keeper does not like religion."

Mr. Maskelyne, the well-known conjurer, denounces spiritualism as a "miserable subterfuge and abomination." which would fall utterly to the ground were it not for the "dark séance," that it is often used as the occasion for what is mildly described as "flirtation." Fathers and husbands have complained to him of the insults put upon their wives and daughters during the hour of darkness; the spiritualists trade and fatten on this use of the dark séance.

THE LAFORCE ASYLUMS.—Pastor H. Lanza, President of the Consistory of Montcaret (Dordogne) and Secretary of the John Bost's Asylums Committee at Laforce, is now in England, pleading on behalf of these Institutions and holding meetings in order to make them better known. There are at present eight English inmates. Increased help is much needed.

TRACTS WANTED.—Dear Sir,—Permit me to ask your readers for grants of tracts for our work, or for means with which to purchase them. Last year our members visited 558 towns and villages, including 462 races, fairs, and other special gatherings, besides maintaining about 200 stations in London. About three millions of people thus heard the Gospel preached, and 1,016,187 tracts, Scripture cards, and other publications were distributed. Our tract-shelves are all but empty, while twenty-eight of our auxiliaries and members are waiting for grants. Hence any that your readers may send will be valued, or books for the Preachers' Library.

Gawin Kirkham, Secretary.

Mr. Fegan's Homes—M. M. 5s.; Farnham, 2s. 6d.; Barnstaple, 5s.

"Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children"

Are now in Urgent and very special need of help to maintain their large and growing Families, and to carry on their work of Emigration.

Within the last three months, from 1st January to 31st March, 1885, no less than 225 POOR BOYS AND GIRLS have actually been ADMITTED to the Homes.

153 Trained Boys also left Liverpool on Thursday, March 26th, for Canadian Homes.

This great activity in effort has emptied our purse, and caused a consequent urgent need of further help to continue this blessed work of child-rescue, and makes it necessary to bring the above striking facts prominently before the Lord's people everywhere.

Is it not a fact also that our overcrowded English Cities teem with young life needing to be transplanted if it is to be saved from ruin? And is it not also true that our Colonies require more than anything else to be replenished by the importation of Boys and Girls carefully trained in industrious and virtuous ways?

If sufficient funds are supplied we hope (D.V.) to send to Canada

80 GIRLS on 23rd May,
100 BOYS in June, and 100 GIRLS in July.

Please remember that

£8-10 will pay the entire cost of outfit, passage money, &c., for one Boy or Girl emigrated to Canada, and thereby in all probability saved from untold perils.

£51 will do the same for Six Children; or

£102 „ „ Twelve „

The loving gifts of the Lord's people for this purpose, or in support of the Homes, will be gratefully acknowledged by the Treasurer, WM. FOWLER, Esq., M.P., or by the Director, Dr. T. J. BARNARDO.

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

SPIRITUAL POWER FOR MISSIONARY WORK.

By REV. GRIFFITH JOHN, Missionary to China.

With Preface by Rev. HENRY SIMON, of Westminster Chapel.

"If anyone wants to have his soul stirred within him for his work at home, let him read 'Spiritual Power for Missionary Work.'"—Lay Preacher.

"This is an eloquent discourse upon the need of the Holy Spirit's influence in work for Christ; and is followed by a powerful plea for increased help to the missionary cause."—The Baptist.

"Let missionary students read this short essay; and let its reasoning be laid to heart by those also who have to work at home. If the Churches were baptized with the missionary spirit, how rapidly the Gospel would now spread in the world!"—Methodist.

FIRST SHEETS OF SCRIPTURAL PROOFS

That God gives us in our Lord Jesus Christ perfect deliverance from all sin, inward as well as outward, if we will but receive Him and believe on His name for all that God has made Him to be to us (John i. 12; 1 Cor. i. 30).

By J. P. WILSON.

Copies may be obtained by writing to me at the undernoted address, sending Eightpence for price and postage, or without money. I hope that it is with a right motive that I introduce here the first letter received by me on the subject of the book, and that my doing so will not be misconstrued. But if it should be, I must bear with it, and cannot for fear of it withhold the letter. It is from a sister in the Lord unknown to me until I received it.—J. P. W., 88, North Side, Wandsworth Common, London, S.W.

"Dear Friend.—I have read your little book, lent me by a friend; and I do desire heartily to thank my God that it was put into my hands. Though for years I have known my Saviour's love, and experienced the incoming of the Holy Spirit in power in my soul, yet since reading the 'Scriptural Proofs' I have had a fresh revelation of what Jesus is to me in his capacity of Saviour: and I have been able to grasp Him in a fuller and more comprehensive faith as my deliverer from indwelling sin; and that on the Truth of the living God, as shown so clearly in your little book. My heart goes with every line of it. I do trust and believe it will be blessed wherever it is read: there is so little of man in it and so much of God. Yours in the fellowship of His Spirit, ——."

ADOLPH SAPHIR, B.A., D.D.,

Author of "Christ and the Scriptures," &c., &c.

32 Pages. Demy 8vo. Price SIXPENCE.

"Dr. Saphir has already written many things, . . . but nothing from his pen has so deeply touched me, and many other readers, as this powerful appeal to Christendom from the lips of a Jewish Christian; for, like the Apostle, Saphir also is a son of Israel. Without Christian believers from Israel, there would be no Church in existence; the first Christian congregations in Apostolic days were Jewish."—Professor Delitzsch.

HOMES OF HOPE,

Nos. 4, 5 & 6, Regent-square, Gray's-inn-road, London, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.

The applications are most distressing, and the funds are quite exhausted. The Committee make an urgent appeal for help.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE REPORTED HOPELESS.—CASE of MR. SIMS of MIDDLESBOROUGH.

My correspondent in this case was not the patient himself, but Mr. John Bell, Grocer and Draper, of South Eston, Middlesborough—himself a patient, and who has recommended my treatment to many—and this is what he says concerning Sims, in a letter dated Nov. 18, 1884:—

"He came two miles to see me on Sunday, and says he is as good a man as ever, and has been at work two months. At the time I gave him a small bottle of your medicine he was in bed, and had lost all hope of recovery. He was told by five doctors that his lungs were going fast, so that he gave his working clothes away, thinking he should want them no more. But that small bottle did him good, and encouraged him, by the aid of friends and your liberal allowance, to persevere, with the happy result before named."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

"MANNA CAKE."

Children take it readily; they do not suspect its properties; they like its sweet, strong flavour. Truly termed by an Agent, "The Children's Friend." Manna Cake is the mildest and yet the most certain in action of all aperients; it does not gripe, and leaves no after constipation. A singularly mild, pleasant, and efficacious substitute for Castor Oil.

From W. H. Hayward, Chemist, Trowbridge:—"A Physician in the West of England says he gave Calomel and Jalap in repeated doses without effect, but a Manna Cake acted almost immediately."

Ask for Manna Cake, price 1½d. per cake, or 1s. 3d. per doz. of any chemist or medicine vendor. Wholesale of Barclay's; Edwards; Hovenden's; Newbery's; May Roberts; Sanger & Sons; Sutton & Co.; &c., &c.

THE INFLUENCE OF NATURE'S EQUALISING POWER.

Magnetic influence effects a general equalisation of the powers, functions, and forces of the system—that balance of the system which is in the highest sense worthy the name of health. It is obviously impossible to lay down a general law, or to define the exact proportions of the Magneto-Electric forces necessary to the preservation of health and harmony in every individual. They must needs vary in varying temperaments, and even in the same person at different periods of life. But we can scarcely over-estimate the equalising power of this agent. For, whether the disturbance of health be in this direction or in that, whether it arises from an obstinately torpid condition of the bowels, or from a weakness which becomes apparent upon a slight change of temperature or diet, or from excitement of any kind, it is the office of Odo-Magnetic influence to correct it by equalising or harmonising the various functions of the body.

Magnetism is one of nature's most energising and tonic restoratives, which strengthens the vital force of every organ, inducing buoyant and healthy action; and we contend that the sustaining influence of Odo-Magnetic force on the nervous system, although imperceptible, is nevertheless as much a matter of fact as the assimilation of food is in the physical economy. Magnetic influence directly touches the origin of our chronic ailments, and is therefore of all known means that best calculated to prevent the development of any organic disease.

From Mrs. CRADDOCK, 31, Ellington-street, Westbourne-road, Barnsbury.

"You will be pleased to hear that my general health has been much improved since wearing the appliances had from you in April last. Before using them I was hardly able to get about, and from giddiness in my head I could not look down upon the table to write. This is all gone, and I am now much stronger and better in health. Anything like this I have not enjoyed for many years, and in the hope that my experience may be encouraging to others, you can use it in any way you please."

March 27, 1885.

"Language is powerless to express the benefit I have received from your Magnetic Appliances. In winter I see others shivering with cold, while I am warm and comfortable. I find the Magnetic Appliances cause a better circulation of the blood, and bring a glow of warmth to the body. Before I wore them I was prostrated in the summer, but since my circulation has so improved I feel quite strong, and enjoy that season."

From Mrs. FRAMPTON, Bell Cottages, Milton End, Old-road, Gravesend.

July 9, 1883.

"I suffered from nervous debility, and after having medical attendance for some time, I was persuaded by a friend to apply to you for advice and treatment, and from the time when I first used it, I steadily and surely began to recover. I have derived great benefit from it, and recommend it to anyone suffering from the same complaint, believing that it will be as beneficial to them as it has been to me."

April 5, 1885.

"I am thankful to say my health is very good. It has been so since I received the appliance from you in 1878."

"If I can at any time by letter testify to the efficacy of Magnetism to any of your patients, I shall be pleased to do so."

On receipt of particulars of any case in which advice is sought, the fullest information will be forwarded, and the required treatment suggested by Mr. B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

"The Christian" will be sent by the Publishers post-free to any address in the United Kingdom, for 12 months, for 6s. 10d., including Double Numbers.
"The Christian" (weekly) and the HERALD OF MERCY (monthly) will be sent to the United States or Canada, for 12 months, for $3, which may be remitted by a Two-Dollar Bill.

LAMB AND FLAG
RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION,
10, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

The many calls daily made on Christian benevolence have for some years kept me silent, but the time has now come when I must ask for help.

Larger premises are absolutely required for the increased work of this School and Mission, and I cannot, without making the facts known, continue to turn away from our doors the many boys and girls who are eagerly seeking admission, at the dangerous age of 14 and upwards. Will some of those who are blessed with means help me to raise £1,500? This would provide the accommodation needed to gather in the wanderers.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged School has taken for the sixth year consecutively, the largest number of prizes for long service and good conduct at the hands of the Ragged School Union.

Contributions will be thankfully received by J. C. SHERRARD, Hon. Director and Treasurer, 7, Oxford-square, Hyde-park.

ZENANA AND MEDICAL MISSION, School and Home, 58, St. George's-road, S.W. Christian ladies trained for Foreign Medical Mission Work, by two years' curriculum. Ladies so desirous may attend midwifery alone. Dr. GRIFFITH, Hon. Sec. Treasurer, G. J. GREEN, Esq., L. and C. Bank, 3, Victoria-street, S.W.

Funds urgently needed.

HOMES FOR THE AGED POOR.—The Committee are in urgent need of funds to carry on the work of the Charity, also to free Seven Permanent Homes from mortgage. 117 Inmates, from 60 to 88 years of age, are cared for. Contributions thankfully received by the Honorary Secretary, Miss S. A. HARRISON, 5, Grandacre-terrace, Anerley, S.E.

CHURCH PAROCHIAL MISSION SOCIETY. Offices: 21, John-street, Adelphi, London, W.C. Patrons: The Archbishop of York, and the Bishops of London, Durham, Exeter, Lichfield, Rochester, Oxford, Ripon, Manchester, Truro, Sodor and Man, and Bedford.—The above Society is prepared to send experienced Missioners to any parish on sufficient notice.—Secretary: Rev. S. W. DARWIN FOX, 21, John-street, Adelphi, W.C.

LONDON FEMALE PENITENTIARY, 191, High-street, Stoke Newington, N. Founded at Pentonville, 1807.—This Institution has been carrying on its saving work for nearly 80 years, and about 6000 fallen young women have participated in its benefits, and many orphaned and homeless have been rescued. The help of all who sympathise with this Christian work is greatly needed. Donations, however small, will be thankfully received through the Society's Bankers, Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street; the Office of "The Christian;" and at the above Institution.—W. E. PAGE, Secretary.

TENT MISSIONS.—Mr. Swann Hurrell, of the Church Parochial Mission Society, is prepared to undertake Mission Services in tents or halls. He would also take Children's Missions in seaside places.—For particulars apply to the SECRETARY, 21, John-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.

CAPT. MUSGRAVE BROWN and Staff-Capt. Hodgson (the latter, late Curate of St. Mary's, Chatham), will (D.V.) conduct a Meeting for Holiness and Consecration at 5, College-terrace, Belsize-park, N.W., on Wednesday, 13th inst., at 3 o'clock.

THE CHURCH PAROCHIAL MISSION SOCIETY, 21, John-street, Adelphi, London, W.C.—The Annual Meeting will be held at Willis's Rooms, on Monday, May 18, at 3 p.m. Chairman, The Lord Bishop of TRURO. Speakers, Rev. W. Hay Aitken, M.A., Rev. Sir Emilius Bayley, Bart., B.D., Rev. S.A. Selwyn, M.A., and the Rev. H. Armstrong Hall, A.K.C.

RAMSGATE.—St. Luke's Invalid and Convalescent Home.—Friends are invited to send useful and fancy articles for the Sale of Work to be held (D.V.) in the last week of May. The Home is for gentlewomen and servants in distinct departments.—Miss ROSALIND HOSKING, Finsbury House, Ramsgate.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

INSTITUTED 1772.
Patron: THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.G.
President: G. WILLIAMS, ESQ.
Vice-Presidents: A. PEASE, ESQ., M.P., S. D. WADDY, ESQ., M.P., Q.C., and J. H. GLADSTONE, ESQ., Ph.D., F.R.S., &c.
Treasurer: F. A. BEVAN, ESQ. Honorary Secretary: THE REV. W. TYLER.

This, the oldest of all the evangelistic societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night, and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or the Editors of THE CHRISTIAN.

JAMES ATKINSON, Secretary.

ANXIETY OF SOUL.—Any to whom the way of salvation is not clear, are invited to communicate, either personally or by letter, to W. S., care of Evangelistic Secretary, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

THE BENEVOLENT OR STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Treasurer, Alderman R. N. Fowler, M.P. (Lord Mayor); J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman; Mr. Ex-Sheriff Clarence Smith, Hon. Secretary.

For ninety-nine years this Institution has visited and relieved the destitute sick, by an entirely unpaid agency, consisting of over 280 Christian men and women. Many sad cases have constantly to be passed over from want of funds.

The Committee will be thankful for the Society being remembered in the testamentary arrangements of the benevolent.—Office of the Society, 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

GREAT COLEMAN'S.—Gentlefolk of limited means needing change and rest, will find all advantages of a gentleman's country house. Drives given. Terms 21s. per week, inclusive. For particulars apply to

Mrs. GRIFFITH, 45, Finsbury-square, E.C.

RESCUE WORK IN POPLAR.—Manor Cottage, Kerbey-street, Poplar, E. Founded by Mrs. Wilkes, 1878. Treasurer, HENRY [illegible], Esq., Blackwall, E. Miss COOKE, 68, Mildmay-park, will also receive contributions for this work of mercy. Mrs. WILKES at home Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays, to see friends and give information respecting this effort to seek and save the lost.

SAILORS' REST AID SOCIETY.—Rests for Naples, Messina, Pozzuoli, &c. Mission ship for Mediterranean. Seamen's Gospel Temperance League. Treasurer, S. J. ALEXANDER, Esq., Weston-super-Mare; or office of THE CHRISTIAN.

THE COMMITTEE of the Ladies' Samaritan Society of the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, 25, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, earnestly plead for contributions in aid of the poorer patients and their families. The smallest gifts in money or clothing will be thankfully acknowledged by the Committee.

COMING UP FOR HONOURS.—Prizes will be given to over 800 Old Scholars for twelve months' faithful service in their situations, by the Right Hon. the Earl of SHAFTESBURY, at the Forty-first Anniversary of THE RAGGED SCHOOL UNION, which will be held in Exeter Hall, on Monday, May 11, 1885, at six o'clock. The prize-takers will form a choir, and sing a selection of pieces. Tickets of admission to be obtained of JOHN KIRK, Secretary, Ragged School Union Office, Exeter Hall, W.C.

HOMES OF HOPE.

Nos. 4, 5 & 6, Regent-square, Gray's-inn-road, London, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.

The applications are most distressing, and the funds are quite exhausted. The Committee make an urgent appeal for help. Henry Thompson, Treasurer.

MISAPPLIED WEALTH.

MEN require to be ever and anon reminded that they are frequently no better than slaves to the greed of gain—that, in their race for wealth, they pause not, as they ought, to consider the propriety of the means employed, assuming that the end will fully justify them. Their eagerness deadens their perception; and it is well that the latter should be occasionally quickened to a livelier sense of the wrongs which, in the schemes and struggles for their own aggrandisement, they wittingly or unwittingly inflict upon their less fortunate fellows.

Writers upon political economy are perhaps not altogether free from blame in the matter, the systems they inculcate being of a purely scientific character, and taking no account of human affections and motives. They may contend that it would be practically impossible to do so. However this may be, one of the leading principles deducible from their writings would seem to be, that each individual is to obtain the greatest possible value for his money or services, regardless apparently of the fact that in doing so there may be involved some suffering or loss to the other party to the bargain.

This leading principle is constantly found in active operation. It ignores the existence of any such commodity as the milk of human kindness. It ignores the circumstance that all men are descended from one common stock—that they are in reality members of one great family, and, therefore, brethren. Its harsh dictum is, "Let the fittest survive." What is to become of the weaker brethren it does not tell us; nor does it explain that the sense in which it uses the word "fittest" is by no means that universally accepted.

The result of successful practice of the doctrine above shadowed forth is, of course, the accumulation of riches, and this result is usually attained, if attained at all, to an extent far in excess of the actual or possible needs of the fortunate possessor. Where he is an employer of labour, it may not unnaturally be thought that his employés, being those with whose welfare he is, or should be, most immediately concerned, would benefit by his increased prosperity, and that an outlet for at least a portion of his surplus wealth would thus be so near at hand that it could not be overlooked. But what actually happens? In the great majority of such instances, the insufficient accommodation, bad lighting and ventilation, understaffing and underpaying, continue as before. Indeed, if any change at all be made, it is in the way of cutting down rather than increasing expenditure, and the older men are dismissed with or without a small proportion of their salary by way of pension, their places being filled by young men at a salary, which means a considerable saving when compared with that formerly paid for the same work.

For a mere pittance intelligent human beings are expected, and, to hold their positions, obliged, to devote their lives—for it amounts to that—to assist in the piling up of the already too great wealth of their employers. Brains they are expected to possess, but that they also possess minds and bodies which require cultivation and refreshment is a circumstance which appears to be entirely overlooked.

There are to-day in the City of London warehouses in which, at certain seasons of the year, the clerks and salesmen are engaged for so many hours daily that they are only able to return to their homes in time to go to bed. There is no hesitation in making them work for hours after the stated time of departure in the evening; but woe betide them if they are a few minutes late in putting in an appearance the next morning! The fact that they have in their utter weariness slept heavily and somewhat late, and have hardly had time to swallow, much less digest, their breakfast, is no availing excuse.

Once inside the warehouse in the morning the employé seldom quits it until his day's work is done, meals being provided there for him. The consequence is that during periods of pressure such as those referred to, lasting weeks and often months at a stretch, the exercise and fresh air he enjoys are totally inadequate for his bodily requirements. Many of the men sleep on the business-premises, and these have frequently been known to pass a whole week without having time for a stroll in the fresh air owing to the pressure of work. Look at the pale faces of these toilers and at the weariness and used-up expression they bear. Fortunate indeed are those of them who pass through the ordeal without permanent injury to the constitution. Some fail to do even this, and fall victims to consumption or brain diseases. They find in another world the rest denied to them in this!

Ugly facts these, but facts nevertheless, without a particle of exaggeration in them, and it is high time that the attention of some of our merchant princes should be directed with no uncertain finger to the damage to the community at large which results from their grinding oppression, if not to the just grievance of their employés. "Damage to the community at large" may seem a wide term, but will be appreciated as not so in fact when it is borne in mind that these young men, whose constitutions are being thus undermined, will become the parents of another generation, which can hardly be expected to possess that health and strength so much to be desired for it.

Mr. Ruskin in "Unto this Last" suggests that "the final outcome and consummation of all wealth is in producing as many as possible full-breathed, bright-eyed, and happy-hearted human creatures." And in another part of the same work he says: "It is open to serious question whether among national manufactures that of souls of a good quality may not at last turn out a quite leadingly lucrative one."

These views may be pooh-poohed for a time by some employers as absurdly sentimental and inconsistent with the recognised usages of everyday life. The latter they are no doubt, but everyday life has ere now been reformed in some of its details, and will be again in others. Mr. Ruskin's words are pregnant with truth, and the truth in question is one which is beginning to make itself felt. Humanity has still a consciousness of what is right left in her, poor, worn-out thing though she be, and, once roused to a clear sense of it, she will take care to give utterance to her conviction in a voice that may not be safely disregarded. AMERICAN CHRISTIANS AND MISSIONS.

A RECENT number of The Herald and Presbyter of Cincinnati has come under our notice, in which our good friend and brother Mr. Reginald Radcliffe is taken to task for some strictures said to have been passed, during recent meetings in Scotland, upon the lack of enterprise of American Missionary Societies. The remarks are based upon the report of "a Scotchman who attended the meetings in Edinburgh, and upon whose ears the charge—of the American churches doing next to nothing for missions—grated harshly."

The critic was evidently ignorant of Mr. Radcliffe's past record, or he would not thus have mis-reported the purport of his words. Nobody who has heard Mr. Radcliffe, in London and the Provinces, speak in glowing panegyric of American missions generally—and specially those in Burmah and India, in Turkey and Asia Minor, and on the Continent of Europe; and again, of Bishop Taylor's recent start for Central Africa—would for a moment believe that he would speak lightly of the zeal and forwardness of the American churches, in comparison with those of our own and other countries.

The nature of the statement, we are well assured, would be, that what has already been done is as nothing compared to the urgent need of the heathen world and the manifest resources of the Christian churches more adequately to meet it. Further, the statistics quoted by our transatlantic contemporary itself amply justify Mr. Radcliffe's plain speaking. It reports, for instance, that since 1813 the four leading Mission Boards of America have spent on the evangelisation of India one and a half million pounds. The figures are set forth as follows:—

Mission.	Com. Work.	Spent since.
American Board	1813	£408,000
Baptist ,, ...	1814	402,000
Presbyterian ,, ...	1834	336,000
Methodist Episcopal Board ..	1856	335,000

That is to say, that for this object the American Board has spent at the rate of £5667 per annum.
The Baptist Board ...... 5662 ,,
The Presbyterian Board .... 6588 ,,
And the Meth. Episcopal .. 11,565 ,, or a total of under £30,000 per annum, all told. This is less than the annual income of many of America's individual merchant princes! Surely Mr. Radcliffe's words are more than vindicated.

Our desire in adverting to this subject is first to assure our American brethren that no reference to their work by Mr. Radcliffe or any like-minded friend has been made in the spirit of unfriendly criticism or disparagement, but with the endeavour, by pointing out the disproportion of the supply to the demand—even in the case of those foremost in the work—still further to provoke them and their fellow-labourers in all lands to seek more adequately to fulfil our Lord's command.

DR. GREEN'S PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS.

THE presidential address of Dr. Green, of the Religious Tract Society, from the chair of the Baptist Union, on "Signs of Revival," is an exceedingly able one. It will be found at length in the Special May Meeting Number of The Christian World for April 28. It is encouraging to find a man of so large experience believing that he sees at the present time the conditions and signs of a true Christian revival. He seeks those signs first in the thoughts and acts of Christian believers themselves. He finds (1) the strength of an intelligent certainty; (2) a deeper insight into God's revealed truth; (3) a greater stress than ever upon goodness, as the index and result of a heart right with God.

We have only space for very brief quotation. The following is from the second section of the address:—

> "Without reverence all inquiry must fail. And when we say that reverence is a sign of the times, we do not affirm that it is invariable. Sometimes, indeed, it is our fate to mark the very reverse. Who does not know the type? There is the self-satisfied critic of the past, with a soul, he will tell you, above dogmas. In fact, he is a 'doubter,' and
>
> 'There lives more faith in honest doubt—> Believe him—than in half the creeds.'
>
> "He is free from the thraldom of old beliefs in proportion as he is without any serious or comprehensive thought. Fortified by a superficial acquaintance with speculative or sceptical literature, and with phrases at command from the latest metaphysical philosophy, oddly mixed up with the accepted terms of the current theology, he propounds the last new heterodoxy in fashion as a great discovery. Dr. Dale somewhere quotes a recommendation that he had seen with regard to religious belief: 'Whatever you believe, if you believe anything, you should at all events believe nothing that was ever believed by anybody else,' adding that 'even this advice hardly represents the temper which is sometimes manifested by very advanced thinkers;' and it is necessary to add 'as soon as anybody else believes the same thing as yourself, take care to believe something different.' And all this is sometimes associated with a glib self-sufficiency, that brings to mind the remark of the old professor, after listening to some very confident statements: 'We are none of us infallible, not even the youngest among us!'
>
> ". . . . On the other hand, there is sometimes a flippancy of orthodoxy almost as offensive. The professor of traditional belief, the grounds of which he has never tested, looks on with an easy disdain at the bewilderment of earnest minds amid difficulties which he has not the capacity to feel. His self-satisfaction in being right, and his wonder at all who are, in his estimate, wrong, may match with the arrogance of the shallow unbeliever. He will talk of Divine things with a familiarity which shows that he, at least, never fears to 'rush in where angels fear to tread,' and, with a confidence born of ignorance, will speak of the ways and counsels of the Eternal, as has been said, as of 'a man in the next street.'
> "But such types of character are becoming rarer as the vastness and mystery of the spiritual universe open up before the reverent mind. There is, it may be, no short and easy way to theological certainty, although the path of practical godliness is plain. The Bible itself is a book to task the highest thought and the most careful study. To be mighty in the Scriptures is now recognised as a very different thing from the power to quote aptly-sounding texts. A Scriptural theology requires as its first condition an accurate interpretation, and this is not always obvious. It seems an easy way of foreclosing all argument to declare, 'I take Scripture as meaning just what it says;' that is, 'just what I understand it to say,' which is often a very different matter. There has never been a heresy in Christendom which could not quote its texts of Scripture; and this proves, not that the Bible is a self-contradicting book, as its assailants allege, but that to trace its inner harmony needs much devout care and thought. The true helpers of this generation in things Divine are the men who, with patient care, make it their business to tell what the Bible really says—a knowledge which, even in Christian England and in our own congregations, is rarer than we sometimes think."

We cannot too emphatically express our appreciation of the sentence in which Dr. Green laid his finger on the great culminating truth of the Gospel, which is stated in its most condensed form by Luke, when summarising the preaching of the Apostle Paul —"JESUS AND THE RESURRECTION" (Acts xvii. 18). Dr. Green says: "The revival of the Church may be regarded in many aspects and sought by many applications of heavenly truth and teaching; but now and to the end of time the great vitalising force will be THE POWER OF CHRIST'S RESURRECTION."

NOTES ON SCRIPTURE.

"AND if Christ is in you the body is dead because of sin, but the Spirit (R.V. 'spirit') is life because of righteousness" (Rom. viii. 10). The difference between the two translations is very significant. The translators of the A.V. looked on the word pneuma here as referring to the Third Person in the Trinity—the Holy Spirit; the translators of the New Version view it as referring to the believer's own spirit.

A deeply-important truth is thus clearly presented—a truth liable to be overlooked by readers of the Old Version. Because in the text as it now runs a contrast is brought out between the present position of the believer's body and that of his spirit. "The body is dead," that is, the sentence of death has been passed upon it—"because of sin." Sin has so inwrought itself, as it were, into the framework of the body, that nothing but death, the dissolution of the tabernacle, can eradicate sin "root and branch."

But then notice the other members of the antithesis. "The spirit is life, because of righteousness." That is, the believer's spirit is possessed of eternal life because of the eternal righteousness of God's dear Son, imputed to it, and received in the exercise of simple faith. This idea has a leading place in Paul's theology. He lays emphasis on the organic connection which exists between righteousness and life—righteousness being the condition, and life being the result based upon that condition. SAMUEL McCOMB.

THE WHITE STONE.

"To him that overcometh will I give a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it" (Rev. ii. 17). Reference is here made to a stone divided into two parts, as a sign of hospitality, upon each of which one of the parties wrote his name and interchanged it with the other. This gave a mutual claim to contracting parties and to descendants for reception and kind treatment when travelling. It was carefully and privately kept, so that no one might claim the privilege besides the person for whom intended. Or, according to Matthew Henry, this "white stone" means absolution from the guilt of sin, alluding to the ancient custom of giving a white stone to those acquitted on trial, and a black stone to those condemned. "The New Name" is the name of adoption. Adopted persons took the name of the family into which they were adopted. None can read the evidence of a man's adoption but himself.—N. Y. Observer.

CANADIAN EMIGRATION.—Mr. W. H. Newett, Secretary of the Manchester Y.M.C.A., 56, Peter-street, writes:—I have letters this week from a correspondent at Winnipeg, stating that he has vacancies for fifty-four young men with farmers, and I shall be glad to give introductory letters to suitable young men.

YOUNG WOMEN IN BIRMINGHAM.—After a united mission to young women in 1882 a branch of the Y.W.C.A. was formed in the parish of St. Silas. The numbers have so rapidly increased that the Bible-classes, which at present are held in a private house, are seriously cramped for want of room. Many other important branches of the work cannot be developed for the same reason. We propose to build an Institute as soon as we have collected the funds. We are making great efforts ourselves, and should be truly thankful for some help from your readers.

WITHIN THE VEIL.

"WITHIN the veil." Oh, glorious place,
Where Jesus shows his lovely face;
His blood's the covering all around,
And every spot is holy ground.
No sin can ever enter here,
No troubles dark, no doubt, no fear;
Though Satan may my soul assail,
He cannot come "within the veil."

Though troubles may like billows rise,
And thunderstorms o'ercloud the skies;
Though every earthly joy be fled,
And every earthly hope be dead;
Though fierce temptations round us roll,
And threaten to engulf our soul;
Though every human help may fail,
Yet all is peace "within the veil."

"Within the veil." Here may we dwell:
Oh! joy too deep for words to tell.
Safe hidden in his "secret place,"
Warm in the sunshine of his face.
Our life is hid with Him above,
His blood doth all our sins remove;
His arm hath won the victory,
And perfect rest in Him have we.

And He doth bend a listening ear,
Our faintest word and wish to hear;
He hideth us within his will,
And then doth each desire fulfil.
And we in Him are ever one,
All earthly differences have gone;
The love in Him can never fail,
No shadows come "within the veil."

O Thou, our Saviour, Husband, Lord,
Fulfil to us thy faithful word;
Oh! "manifest Thyself," that we May all thine unveiled glory see;
May know the treasures of thy love,
And all thy full salvation prove;
"Within the veil" abide e'en now,
And find our heaven begun below.

THE SPEZIA MISSION.

WHEN the cholera, last summer and autumn, visited La Spezia, and speedily bore away some 800 of its inhabitants, the Christ-like conduct of members of the native church of which I am pastor made a deep impression on many. The calm confidence of believers in their Heavenly Father was a strong rebuke to the terror of the multitudes, some 15,000 of whom, in a few hours, rushed from the city. Of the few children of our Bible-schools who fell victims to the cholera (as far as our knowledge extends), all died invoking the blessing of the Son of God as their Saviour. One dear child of tender age was so filled with joy and gladness, a short time before her death, that the mother could only look on with wonder and admiration. The care shown for the sick and dying has produced a most favourable influence on many, not only in La Spezia, but in the country, and has brought its legitimate result in an increased desire of parents to place their children in our Bible-schools.

The number of orphans made by the disease powerfully affected me, and I ventured to ask the city authorities to be allowed legally to take a number under my care for a term of years—until able to provide for themselves. After some delay I was, by a deed of gift, entrusted with the number I had asked for, with a public announcement of the same. This was too much for certain parties to look on without stern opposition; hence the document was reduced to a dead letter, and one child I had begun to pay for was taken from under my care. Meantime, I have ventured to take five bereaved ones of tender age, and as God shall raise up the funds, so will the work be carefully regarded. Just before leaving for England a letter arrived with £200 towards the Orphan Home, leaving thus only £1300 of the sum considered most desirable to be raised before the Home be opened.

The annual income needed for the varied operations of the mission is £2500, and one friend of the mission who desires that the year 1885 shall be the most prosperous of all its financial years, promises £150, in the hope that other Christian friends may volunteer the same. EDWARD CLARKE, Supt.

NOTES ON THE SCRIPTURE UNION READINGS.

MAY 7.—GALATIANS VI. 1–18.

v. 14.—"God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross."—By the "cross" here we must not understand the wood, but the death of our Lord Jesus Christ, which it represents. Some people make much of crosses and crucifixes, as though there was a virtue in them, but that is only superstition, and in many cases idolatry. The death of Jesus is a fact in which we may glory if we are by faith able to say, "He died for me." Bunyan tells us that when "Christian" came to the cross, he gave three leaps for joy, and went on, singing :—

"Thus far did I come laden with my sin ;
Nor aught could ease the grief that I was in,
Till I came hither ; what a place is this !
Must here be the beginning of my bliss ?
Must here the burden fall from off my back ?
Must here the strings that bound it to me crack ?
Blest Cross ! blest Sepulchre ! Blest rather be
The MAN that here was put to shame for me !"

MAY 8.—EPHESIANS I. 1–14.

v. 13.—"In whom ye also trusted, after that ye heard . . ."—A minister of the Gospel had gone by a trap-door into his cellar, which in winter was quite dark. A little daughter only three years old was trying to find him, and came to the trap-door ; but on looking down all was dark, and she called, "Are you down cellar, father ?" "Yes ; would you like to come, Mary ?" "It is dark ; I cannot come down, father." "Well, my daughter, I am right below you, and I can see you, though you cannot see me ; and if you will drop yourself, I will catch you." "Oh, I shall fall ! I cannot see you, father." "I know it," he answered ; "but I am really here, and you shall not fall or hurt yourself. If you will jump, I will catch you safely." Little Mary hesitated, and then advanced a little further, then, summoning all her resolution, she threw herself forward, and was received safely in her father's arms. So Jesus is now saying unto you, "Come unto Me." Will you not come ? will you not give him your hearts, and trust Him for life and for death ?—Selected.

MAY 9.—EPHESIANS I. 15–23.

v. 17.—"That God . . . may give unto you the spirit of wisdom."—Wisdom is of different kinds. God will give us any wisdom needful for us, or useful to us, if we ask Him. A teacher asked a little girl one day if she thought Jesus would help her do every-day work. "Yes," she said, "I know He does help me." "How do you know it, my dear ?" "Because one day when I had a hard lesson I tried to get it, and couldn't until I asked Jesus to help me, and then I got it in five minutes." But the best wisdom is that the Apostle prays for—the knowledge of Christ, and of all the blessings that come to us through Him. This, too, dear children, may be yours if you seek it of God (see Prov. ii. 1—6).

MAY 10.—EPHESIANS II. 1–10.

v. 4.—"God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love . . ."—Some children, and grown-up people also, have an idea that God is very hard and stern, and feel afraid to go to Him, as though He was very terrible, and unwilling to receive them graciously. This is a great mistake, God is only terrible in relation to sin ; this He hates, and must punish ; but "God is love," He is "rich in mercy," and delights to show his lovingkindness to all who come to Him. This is why He sent Jesus into the the world to die for us. A little girl was once reading those beautiful words in John iii. 16, to her mother, who asked her if she did not think they were very wonderful. Her reply showed she had learned to know God aright. She said, "Why no, mamma, it would be if it was anyone else ; but it's just like God."

MAY 11.—EPHESIANS II. 11–22.

v. 14.—"For He is our peace."—

I stood outside the gate, a poor wayfaring child, [wild.
And round my spirit there did beat a tempest loud and "O Jesus !" then I cried, "give me sweet rest from sin !"
"I will," a loving voice replied, and Jesus took me in.

He bound up all my wounds, He eased my load of sin,
He comforted my aching heart, and kindly took me in.
Oh, happy, blest exchange, for all my guilt and sin:
I stood forlorn before the gate, and Jesus took me in !

MAY 12.—EPHESIANS III. 1–12.

v. 8.—"The unsearchable riches of Christ."—It is said that in the "Green Room" at Dresden, where for centuries the Saxon princes have gathered their gems and treasures, until they have become worth millions of dollars, may be seen a silver egg, a present to one of the Saxon queens, which, when you touch a spring, opens and reveals a golden yolk. Within the yolk is a chicken. Press the wing, and the chicken flies open, disclosing a splendid gold crown studded with jewels. Nor is this all. Touch another secret spring, and you find hid in the centre a magnificent diamond ring ! It is even so with those who know Jesus ; they are always finding new wonders, fresh delights, and further glories in Him. And it will be so for ever, for Jesus is infinitely full of all bliss.

MAY 13.—EPHESIANS III. 13–21.

"That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith."—A touching incident is related of a wounded soldier boy who was dying in a hospital. A lady who watched by his bedside said to him : "My dear boy, if this should be death that is coming upon you, are you ready to meet your God ?" He answered, "I am ready, dear lady, for this has long been His kingdom," and as he spoke he placed his hand upon his heart. "Do you mean," questioned the lady, gently, "that God rules and reigns in your heart ?" "Yes," he answered ; but his voice sounded far off, sweet and low, as if it came from a soul already well on its way through the "valley of the shadow of death." For Christ to dwell in the heart is for Him to rule in heart.

ONLY A LITTLE HEATHEN.

She was a very wretched little heathen, too, far up in Alaska. Her parents were dead, and no one loved her ; all regarded her as a burden and wished she were out of the way. Her long soft hair was a tangled mat, her big dark eyes were generally full of tears, her dark smooth skin was dirty, and on her half-starved little body hung her sole garment, a ragged cotton frock. In this guise she strayed into the mission-school and heard wonderful singing and wonderful things. She heard that most of the things she knew were bad and better unknown, that most of the things she did were bad and better not done, that there were many good things to do which she had no chance to do, that there was a heaven where she was never likely to go and a Saviour of whom she knew nothing.

Among all the pupils the teacher's heart fixed on this poor waif and longed to rescue her. One Sunday some Indian who claimed power over this little girl, set her to cleaning fish while teaching was going on, and just out of reach of the teacher's voice she cleaned salmon, and plenteous tears ran down and helped wash her fish as she stood barefooted in the slush, the raw wind blowing her ragged gown. Suddenly the teacher stood beside her. "None of you love this child, no one wants her ; I claim her for mine. I will feed and clothe her, and she shall go into my home, and not come to your homes to live any more."

So the Indians gave the child to the teacher. The teacher took her home, put her in a tub of warm water and scrubbed her clean with carbolic soap ; then she cleaned and combed and braided her long hair, put on her a clean night-gown, taught her a prayer, put her in a clean little bed and gave her a kiss. Next day the little heathen was clothed in tidy garments, and began to learn sewing and housework, and her letters, and how to be good. She was a very happy little Indian now ; but by and by there grew up in her child heart a great wish for an "American doll ;" only a little doll such as sells here for ten or fifteen cents, but it costs more in Alaska. She began saving her pennies to buy a doll.

One hot summer day she picked seven or eight quarts of berries, for which someone gave her ten cents. That afternoon at school the lesson was about Christ, who though He was rich yet for our sakes became poor. This made the little girl think. Before she went to bed she came to her teacher with her beautiful ten cents. "Teacher, divide ; Jesus half, me half." She would wait a little longer for her "American doll," and give something to Jesus, "who loved us and gave Himself for us." I am glad that when Christmas came, this rescued child-heathen got two little dolls on the Christmas tree. In six months this little girl learned to speak English, to read her English Testament, to write her name, to sew pretty well, to do many kinds of housework, to be tidy and pleasant mannered. Now her face is bright with smiles, she is clean, plump, and well clothed. Whose pennies went to help this wonderful change, to send the missionary and give her means to rescue this one little heathen ? For this is a true tale, every word of it.—The Youth's World.

CHILDREN IN JERUSALEM.—Dr. Sandreczky, the director of the Children's Hospital in Jerusalem, sends us a report of the institution. Last year more than 200 children were relieved or cured of lameness, disease of the eye, &c. More than half were attacked by small-pox and measles, which epidemics were somewhat severely felt in Jerusalem and its neighbourhood. In consequence of this and other extra expenses, there is unfortunately a deficit of nearly £400, which would have been much larger but for a generous gift of £265 from the German Emperor. The whole work is carried on in an evangelical spirit.

CLIFTON HOME FOR CRIPPLED CHILDREN.—There is a Home at Clifton for the benefit of those crippled children who are either orphans or whose parents are unable to provide them with the care required by their condition. It was started in 1877 by two ladies, and originally accommodated twelve children. The committee have now a larger house and can receive as many as twenty-five. Some of the older children having left, the present number is fifteen, and the committee desire to fill up the vacancies. A lady resides in the house as superintendent, a hospital trained nurse takes charge of the children, and there are three medical officers connected with the institution. The children receive a good school education from a governess who comes daily, and the committee hope before long to teach them strawplaiting and basketwork. Children can be received between the ages of two and seven, girls may enter under ten. Rules and all particulars can be obtained from the Hon. Secretary, Mrs. Bridger, 13, Lansdowne, Clifton Bristol.

DR. SOMERVILLE IN THE EAST.

After more than seven weeks' stay, Dr. Somerville has concluded his mission work in Constantinople. This vast city, which occupies a position unrivalled for beauty, presents peculiar difficulties in the way of such a mission as that of Dr. Somerville's. Not only are the distances very great, the streets steep, tortuous, narrow, rough, dirty, crowded, and encumbered with dogs, but the city itself is divided into three great sections by the waters of the Golden Horn and Bosphorus, the sides of both of which are lined with towns and villages. Besides this, the population is broken up into fragments, separated from one another by race, nationality, nguage, religion, internal jealousies, and fanacal hatred. No city in the world presents such mass of disconnected elements.

The various sections which compose the population pursue each its own object, as indeed does every single individual, without the slightest interest in, or concern for, any other. Such a thing as union or public spirit is entirely unknown. These circumstances, together with the absence of any one centre, the want of suitable places of meeting, objections to advertising in the streets, presented a variety of difficulties. All, however, were, in the providence of God overcome, and a variety of work overtaken which is surprising.

Our countrymen were addressed in the various towns where they reside, up and down the Bosphorus, such as Kadikeui (the ancient Chalcedon where the famous Œcumenical Council was held), Scutari, Candilli, Bebek, Hasskeŭi, and at the Robert College, Roumelie Hissar, where young men, drawn from the Armenian, Greek, and Bulgarian populations, receive a high-class English education.

Besides that, a daily English service was conducted for about a month in the Frances Memorial Hall, Galata; and, though the hour was early, 9.30 a.m., it was attended with surprising regularity by many, including eminent members of the mission staff, ladies and Christian laymen, as well as by Greeks and Armenians, and occasionally a Turkish officer. Not only was this meeting found to be a stimulus to Christian life, but it served another important end scarcely attained before. It brought together the many Christian workers in Constantinople—missionaries, Bible agents, professors, teachers, colporteurs, translators, and private persons from the widely-scattered parts of the district, each of whom is so busy with his own department of labour in the many corners of the vineyard, that he has not time to know what another is doing, or even to see his face. This morning service drew together these scattered forces, and made it to be felt how thoroughly one all Christ's true servants are.

All the great sections of the community were more or less reached. Addresses were delivered, with interpretation, to Germans, French, Spanish and German Jews, Greeks, Armenians, and Turks. The two large bodies of the house of Israel, the Spanish Jews of Hasskeŭi and the German Jews at Galata, were approached. Quite a stir of interest was created among them, specially among the latter. They accidentally got hold of an address delivered by Dr. Somerville to Jews in Berlin, in 1881, and printed there, and so much were they taken with it that they got it reprinted spontaneously in their own paper.

At the Bible-house, Stamboul, a most interesting series of services was held, ostensibly for Armenians, who form a large and important part of the community, but the interpretation was into Turkish. The large hall, seating about 450, was always full. The great majority of the audience was Armenian, but there came in Greeks, Bulgarians, together with Turkish, Syrian, Persian, and Arab Mohammedans and Dervishes. Among the red sea of fez caps, which are always kept on, it was most interesting to see every here and there a red, white, or green turban (the last indicating descent from the prophet), or a rough Persian cap, whose owners listened with eager attention. These inquirers from among the Moslem race (sometimes as many as fifty at a time), together with the fact that there has been of late a greater demand for Turkish Bibles than for any other sort, ought to call forth prayer for the poor, darkened Moslems, to whom our feeble Christianity has done so little to make known the truth.

The Christianity which is presented to the Turks in these lands is of a kind to justify their abhorrence of anything bearing the name. The debased and idolatrous Christianity which paved the way for the Mohammedan heresy and conquest of the East a thousand years ago has done everything to favour their continuance. But preaching to the conscience the need of repentance and atonement for sin, and the presentation of a divine Saviour who is a living and loving friend, awaken a response in the heart of the Moslem. One result of this mission has been to show that the door of access to those believed to be all but inaccessible to the Gospel, can be opened if only the matter is gone about prudently and in the spirit of Christ. One Moslem who had been present, while expressing his pleasure at the truths he had listened to, said, "We expected him to attack our religion, but he said nothing about it."

Perhaps the most striking feature of the mission in Constantinople has been the work among the Armenians. The Protestant Armenians, now a considerable body, are the result of the labours of the American missionaries during the past fifty years. These have testified an extraordinary interest in the Gospel addresses to which they have listened, and have begged and prayed to be spoken to in the various parts of the city and district, so that Dr. Somerville preached to them no less than twenty-eight times. The work of the missionaries has, besides, stimulated the old Gregorian Armenian Church to an interest in education and even to a measure of reformation. Although there are many things remaining which occasion sorrow and pity, still a number of the churches have been cleared of the pictures and other tawdries which in the Greek churches are so offensive, and whose servile adoration makes the worship practically pagan.

There was an intention to ask Dr. Somerville to preach in one of the Gregorian churches, but some difficulties arose, and the service was held instead in the Verdi Theatre, Pera, where a large audience assembled, composed chiefly of Gregorians of the upper class. The impression produced by that service has been very great. The lively singing of the hymns was made special subject of remark. But, further, a succession of editorials has appeared in different Armenian papers, calling attention to the preaching, its character, style, and aim. One paper boldly says they have in their Church no preachers, that the clergy don't know how to preach, and that here is a stranger who has come to show them how to do it. Another comments on the phenomenon by drawing a contrast between this religious service conducted by a foreigner, to which the public were gratuitously invited, and where they heard what was good for their moral and spiritual natures, and a ball for charitable purposes, held in the same place a few nights before, when all kinds of immoralities offended the moral sense. Such, they say, is all the Armenian leaders attempt in order to elevate their people. It is somewhat astonishing that the principal Armenian church in Pera has attached to it a large theatre, the drawings at which go to help the church funds!

Permission to hold the service in the theatre had to be sought from the civil authorities. But when application was made to the Minister of Public Instruction, his reply was, that he did not know if he was the right party to apply to, but that, unofficially, he did not see there was any more need to have a licence for a religious service in a theatre than for one in a church. This is the first time such a thing has occurred, and it may be taken as a sign of the times in Mohammedan Constantinople, where we were told it was not permitted to advertise the services by bills in the streets.

Through the generosity of Mrs. Robertson, secretary of the Society for the Free Distribution of the Scripture, Dr. Somerville was able to present to some of his audiences at the conclusion of a series of meetings copies of the New Testament. This was done with great care. His autograph and an inscription were put on the title-page of every copy, in order to prevent the volume being sold. Books were given away in the following languages—Armenian, Armeno-Turkish, Greco-Turkish, Osmanli-Turkish, Greek, Persian, Arabic, and Bulgarian. Such is the demand among the Turks for the Scriptures at present, that there is not a copy of the New Testament to be had in Constantinople, and will not be until the new edition is ready. The Armeno-Turkish and even the Greek shelves at the Bible-house were also cleared.

A few days were spent visiting some towns in Bithynia where the missionaries have stations and schools. The first was Bardezag, which lies on the southern shore of the Gulf of Ismid, an arm of the Marmora. The town stands high up on the northern slope of the mountain range at whose southern base lies the old Nicea, where the Council met in 325 A.D. Bardezag is a purely Armenian town, resembling a large Swiss village, and presents some features both pleasing and the reverse. Here a succession of services was held to which the people came in crowds, and in which they were so much impressed that it was resolved to continue them for a week longer. Nicomedia was next visited, famous as the spot where persecution raged so fiercely in the days of Diocletian; where Pliny wrote his famous letters, and where Eusebius penned his precious Church history. A similar interest was aroused here by the meetings held by Dr. Somerville. Continuing still further into the interior, through a most lovely country (but, oh! with such roads), past Sabanjah, where the mother of the great Constantine was born, the large town of Adabazaar was reached, lying near the classic river Sangarius. Here the excellent Pastor Djejizian ministers to a large congregation of Armenians.

The crowded assemblages in the church in Adabazaar included several Moslem students, and a number of women who came with white veils over their heads. The mixed state of the audience required interpretation, by means of two translators, into both Armenian and Turkish at once. The pastor and his people were greatly cheered by the visit, the first they had ever had from a Christian minister except the American missionaries, and they declared they had received an impulse that would carry them on for ten years.

A requisition, signed by thirty-four ministers, missionaries, and others at Constantinople, was presented to Dr. Somerville, asking him to close the series of Mission services by a celebration of the Lord's Supper. This was agreed to, and a most delightful gathering took place, upwards of one hundred joining in commemorating the Lord's death, and expressing their oneness in Christ. No less than fifteen took part in the service, which was conducted partly in English and partly in Armenian.

A farewell meeting, attended by all classes, also was held on the day before leaving, at which expression was given on the part of many to the excellent results of the mission. Among other things, attention was specially called to the fact that the masses of the people had in this difficult city been reached; that the method of setting forth the old truths by means of graphic illustration and the opening up of Scripture had been successful in rousing and fixing the people's attention and interest; that what appeared at first a cumbersome method of address —i.e., through interpretation, had proved an admirable channel of approach to different peoples and tongues, some of them most difficult of access, as well as a means of reaching great numbers of persons of all kinds through the instrumentality of one voice; and that, as this had been accomplished by one well on in years, no one need imagine that long service necessarily unfitted him for further active usefulness, as Christ has work for his servants to their latest hour.

It may be mentioned that, as permanent results of the mission, a Young Men's Christian Association has been organised in Constantinople, and a Ladies' Christian Association set up. Arrangements are also being made for the erection of an Evangelical Hall, to form a centre of all kinds of Christian work, the necessity for which the mission made thoroughly apparent to all.

VAGRANTS IN GERMANY.

FOR several years a widespread field for effort has existed amongst German vagrants or wandering beggars. As the gains of their begging trade are very unequal they lead a reckless life, often in bitter want, sometimes in momentary abundance. Almost without exception they fall into the vice of drunkenness, and roam about, no one giving them shelter or work. They are excluded from all intercourse with respectable people, and entirely cut off from religious privileges.

The first man in Germany who attempted to meet this wretchedness with real help was Pastor von Bodelschwing, in Westphalia. Without means of his own he first cared for the great crowd of unfortunates who suffer from epileptic fits, and are everywhere despised. He alleviated their sufferings, which are considered incurable, at the same time caring for them spiritually. He built a church for these incurables, and furnished several small farms, where they now lead a happy life under his guidance. When he saw this work crowned with such success, he began a second, and founded a colony for the reception of vagrants. This colony was founded in 1882, and a few months after its opening contained 240 inmates. They are employed in their former callings, and so they are restored to their former walks in life. There are very few cases in which any of them have deceived their benefactors in Wilhelmsdorf, and not remained the required time. The irreclaimable and hardened amongst them do not ask for the helping hand which is held out to them, but for the many, who long for a return to a respectable life from the misery of vagrancy, the abode in the colony is the turning-point in their lives.

There are now, in almost every province, such colonies established. In Posen such a colony is to be founded, and the presidency of the Association to undertake this work has been entrusted to me. I have been endeavouring, for more than a year, to collect means for founding the colony, but in vain. In our poor Province money is so scarce, and from other Provinces I receive nothing, as each one has to support its own. An estate, in the province of Posen, near Filchue offers everything needful for the colony—excellent buildings, land capable of cultivation, the opportunity of employing the wanderers in their different callings, and a Protestant church close by. The price is 119,000 marks (£5950), and we scarcely have the tenth part of this sum at our disposal. Yet I have bought the land, because I could no longer shun my obligations towards my suffering fellow-creatures. I have bought it in the firm confidence that God will open the hearts of people for our great need. Besides the price of the estate there will still be money required for furnishing arrangements, as well as for the first maintenance of the inmates. I look across the sea, and address myself to the hearts of the English, who always have a heart and an open hand for the sufferings of mankind.

DISCHARGED PRISONERS.—An interesting occasion will be the opening of the New Brook-street Home, Holborn, in connection with the St. Giles' Mission to Discharged Prisoners on Friday, May 15, at 7 p.m. Mr. F. A. Bevan is expected to preside, and several judges, magistrates, and police officials intend to be present to show their sympathy with the movement. Tickets for the meeting may be had on application to Mr. G. Hatton, 12, Ampton-place, Regent-square, W.C.

A NEW IDEA FOR FLOWER MISSION HELPERS.—It is not perhaps generally realised how valuable a light fan is to the sick in hospitals or crowded rooms, to brush off the flies as well as to cool the air. Japanese fans, from their lightness and artistic colouring, are exactly suited to the purpose. One side is usually plain, and it is suggested to utilise this by fastening upon it one of Mrs. Grimkè's text-cards. A specimen fan will be sent on receipt of two stamps by Mrs. Gordon, 7, Vicarage-gate, London, W., who will also gladly furnish all particulars. Fans can be procured at the rate of sixteen or seventeen for a shilling, so that the entire cost of fan and pretty picture-card hardly amounts to one penny a-piece.

AN AMERICAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

PART of the interlude of one of Mr. Joseph Cook's recent Boston lectures was a brief address from Anthony Comstock, of New York, whom Mr. Cook introduced as one of the heroes of modern reform, the yet young but scarred and foremost veteran in the American conflict with the corrupters of youth.

Mr. COMSTOCK said: In 1872, like a huge octopus, there was reaching out in every direction the foe of moral purity among the children of this country. It was hydra-headed. Like the plagues of Egypt, it came up into our homes, surrounded our hearthstones, hunted out the pupils in the public school, college and seminary, sought the young far and wide, thrusting upon them a literature which would have put Sodom and Gomorrah to the blush. These facts first came out through my seeing young men, my associates, ruined and cursed by this evil. Then my eyes were opened by finding the business systematised, and then came the appalling fact that there was no legislation, no way of suppressing the evil.

In 1873 we besought Congress to shut the mails to this evil, and it was done. In 1873 the Legislature of the State of New York was asked to pass a law prohibiting the publication and sale of this matter, and it was done. The next thing was to enforce these laws. What has been done? In 1873, there were published 165 different books; thousands and thousands of photographs were scattered broadcast. By the providence of God we have been permitted to seize the plates for printing 163 of the 165 books. Since 1873, thirty-six other books have been published in this country, and we have been permitted by the same providence to seize the plates of all the thirty-six. There have been gathered up 230,955 pictures; 1,402,444 circulars and leaflets have been destroyed; and we have seized in the hands of the vendors of these iniquities 982,010 names which they used as a matter of merchandise, selling the lists among themselves in order to forward secretly to these names the advertisements and circulars of this accursed matter.

For five years we pursued this enemy alone. Then we found other and kindred enemies. We found 600 open gambling saloons in the city of New York; nine lotteries with headquarters in New York city. Through these 600 saloons, allowing them but 15 dollars a day each, and taking the records of the lotteries as published by themselves, there was 10,000,000 dollars a year going into the pockets of these criminals—blood money at the expense of the morals of the public. What has been done in this department? We have not to-day—and I am proud to say it—an open saloon or an open lottery in the city of New York, where the general public can go in and gamble, or can go in and buy a lottery ticket.

Then commenced in 1879 the warfare against the criminal papers—the boys' and girls' story papers and the illustrated criminal papers. We appealed to the Canadians at a meeting at the Thousand Islands Park to intercede with their Goverment to prohibit the transmission of this matter across the line into Canada. They went home; they appealed to their Government; their Government sent a protest to the post-office department of the United States, and from that day The Police Gazette and like papers have had to stop this side of Canada. Seven States have recently passed laws against the circulation of the boys' and girls' story papers, these papers of crime and bloodshed. And there are to-day, before the legislatures of California, Kansas, Minnesota, Michigan, Tennessee, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont, and other States, proposals for laws upon the same question. A law was passed last year by the State of New York; and I am proud to say that two of the four infamous papers that stared our children in the face from the news-stands, putting them to the blush, and corrupting them wherever they came in contact with them, have died a natural death.

These are only dry figures and statistics. Let me in conclusion, answer one question: How has this been done? In 1872, a poor clerk in the city of New York, without friends or money, set out to do this work. There was no avenue open except prayer to God. He prayed for money to work with, and it came. He prayed for friends for this cause, and they came. He prayed for laws, and they came. And throughout thirteen years of experiences such as few men are called upon to go through, in the face of attempted assassination, in the face of obloquy and reproach, in the face of the foulest misrepresentations and insinuations of the basest character, in the face of conspiracies black as night, to crush my reputation and to repeal these laws, I have gone forward, trusting alone to Divine help, and I am spared, by the mercy of God, to certify to these results. And to his name be all the glory.

CIVIL SERVICE PRAYER UNION.

A MEETING of much spiritual power was held in connection with this Society at 186, Aldersgate-street, Monday, April 27. Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe spoke upon "Power with men dependent on power with God." He showed that every Christian who is living in fellowship with Jesus is a proof of His power; that this power is manifested wherever there is true union with Him in His death, resurrection, and ascension.

Mr. L. Liesching, who came on behalf of the Evangelisation Society, dwelt upon the necessity for a revelation of Christ by the Holy Ghost, if there is to be true faith in Him. He mentioned a remarkable instance, where darkness and ignorance were removed as by a lightning flash, as soon as the mind was humbled to seek teaching from God.

Mr. Stevenson Blackwood, who, as President of the Prayer Union, had opened the meeting with a few words speaking of its development and progress, closed the evening's engagements with an address on "To the glory of God." He spoke of a lady who, after pondering a questionable practice, had said, "Well, if I thought that it would endanger my soul's salvation, I would give it up." He asked his hearers if this was Christian life—whether anything less than living in all things to the glory of God could be so.

An effective choir, composed of members and their friends, rendered much assistance in the meeting, and before its commencement gave an hour's sacred music. The Y.M.C.A. had kindly placed the greater part of its house at the disposal of the Prayer Union.

A MISSION IN BRIXTON.

A FIFTEEN days' evangelistic mission, organised by the Brixton and Clapham Christian Union, has been concluded. Our hearts are filled with praise and thanksgiving. Mr. A. C. P. Coote gave a preparatory address to the members of the Union from Luke v. 4, bidding them "launch out into the deep, and let down the nets for a draught." From that time the keynote of blessing was struck. A new hall, just erected by Mr. Keevil, of The Granaries, Stockwell-road, was lent for the mission.

The services were taken for the first week by Mr. Herbert Francis, and for the latter part by Mr. Spencer Walton. Night after night the Gospel was proclaimed by these servants of God with great power and loving entreaty. The after-meetings which followed were blessed times of decision for many sin-burdened ones. On the three Sunday evenings overflow-meetings were conducted by Dr. Eugene Cronin and Mr. R. Everett. Afternoon Bible-readings were much blessed both to believers and the young converts. At Gresham Hall children's services were held on the Sunday afternoons and were well attended. The thanksgiving meeting which closed the mission was crowded.

OBITUARY.—Among the deaths recently reported are those of Mr. E. S. Burns, son of Dr. Dawson Burns (in Africa), Mr. W. R. Spicer, a well-known London Congregationalist and business man, Mrs. Hall, author of "Andrew Marvell and his Friends"; Mrs. Inglis, a great friend of missionary work in India; and Rev. S. Knell, Birmingham, secretary to the Midland Temperance League.

GOSPEL ENTERPRISE IN FRANCE.

DEAR SIR,—"Why do French Protestants leave it to the English and the Americans to give the Gospel to their fellow-countrymen instead of setting themselves to the task?" This question has been repeatedly put to us. Many who desire to see this land overspread with Gospel teachings seem to have the impression that the evangelical churches of France are cold and inactive in the matter. I am anxious to claim a corner of your valuable space in order to correct this estimate, and to engage the prayerful sympathy of your readers in behalf of agencies which, though comparatively little known in England, are doing here a good and not inconsiderable work for Christ.

I refer to the several societies of home missions originated and sustained by the French evangelical community. It would be occasion for deep regret if the interest awakened in enterprises such as that with which I am associated should cause the others to be neglected. On the contrary, we have ever desired to be their allies and fellow-workers. Each of them, like our own, has its special and important line of operation; each may be regarded as the supplement of the others, and all combined are fitted to advance, through the Holy Spirit's power, the same Divine ends.

A word respecting the more prominent of these Institutions. The "Société Centrale d'Evangélisation," sustained by the Evangelical Reformed Church, is engaged in planting throughout France what may truly be termed missionary congregations in places where, without such aid, the commencing movement towards the Gospel could scarcely take shape. It is an extensive organisation, numbering between 300 and 400 stations, not a few of which become, in due time, self-supporting churches. The "Sociétié Evangélique de France," with which the name and career of the late well-known Dr. George Fisch were inseparably indentified, fulfils a similar function in other districts, including many of the remotest and, spiritually, most destitute corners of the land. The Lutherans and the Eglise libre" (free churches) have also their special funds for aiding newly-formed and struggling congregations. The "Mission Intérieure" has a two-fold vocation: first, the promotion of spiritual religion and Christian activity within the churches; secondly, to pioneer the way for permanent Gospel work by sending out its lecturers and preachers, M. Réveillaud at their head, to proclaim the truth far and wide, and thus to break new ground. All the Societies I have noted are in the hands of devout and earnest Christians, whose labours are attended with evident marks of the Divine approval,—precious souls brought to Christ. There are, in addition, several lesser and local movements of kindred character.

In this enumeration I have said nothing of the special effort conducted by one well-known and deservedly loved, the veteran Pastor Armand-Delille; the main feature of which, at present, consists in preaching the Gospel to tens of thousands, as they enter or leave the vast cemeteries of Paris. Nor have I referred to the French Protestant Missionary Society for Basutoland, Senegal, &c., an institution supported by the several evangelical denominations conjointly, and second to none in the single-hearted devotion of its agents. These, though essentially French works, and conducted by French workers, together with the admirable mission of Miss de Broen, which has its centre at Belleville, that of our Wesleyan friends, directed by Rev. W. Gibson, and others, likewise worked and sustained from England, lie beyond the scope of this brief notice, the one aim of which is to call attention to what may be strictly styled the Home Mission efforts of the French Churches.

I am moved to write thus because each of the societies in question is, at present, urgently in need of pecuniary help. It should be borne in mind that the Protestants form only a small minority of the nation, say one in forty, and from these must be deducted those who are such only by birth and in name, and also the section whose views are not evangelical. On the remaining portion—the vitally Christian elements, only a few wealthy persons are found; so that the almost entire sustentation of the missionary enterprises rests with a small number—so small, I believe, that your readers would be astonished if it could be given with exactness. Recent educational and governmental changes have caused a large amount of extra outlay for the maintenance of schools, &c., to fall upon this limited constituency, and, as the consequence, the managers of the societies for which I plead are menaced with the sad alternative of narrowing their sphere and withdrawing their agents just in this crisis, when the open door for proclaiming the Gospel throughout France so loudly demands that their number should be increased tenfold.

Permit me, then, through the medium of your columns, earnestly to commend to the generosity of British Christians these faithful and self-denying labours. As a fellow-worker in the same vast field, I appeal in behalf of those who are seeking to save the sister-country from that moral and spiritual ruin which the diffusion of the Gospel through all its borders can alone avert.

Should friends, willing to contribute to any of the above-named evangelistic societies desire a medium through which to convey their offerings, nothing could afford me greater joy than to receive them and forward them to those for whom they may be destined.

All of us who, amidst surrounding superstition and atheism, are seeking to be Christ's witnesses in this land, have need of continual remembrance in the prayers of those who desire the extension of our Lord's kingdom upon earth.

Yours faithfully,
Auteuil, Paris. R. W. McAll.

PROGRESS IN BERLIN.

ON Easter Monday we celebrated the fourth anniversary of our mission work in Moabit, the N.W. suburb of Berlin. By the help of the Lord, our work has increased from year to year, and especially the last year has been one of blessing. The public services have throughout been well attended, and the Word of Truth has proved to many the word of life and peace. We are thankful and encouraged to see those who were converted about two or three years ago remain faithful to the Lord. The work in our Sunday-school, which is attended by about 200 children, has prospered greatly. The Bible classes and the mothers' meetings have been the means of much blessing, whilst the work of tract distribution, carried on chiefly by our young men, has scattered the truth among many who do not attend the house of God.

To the praise of the Lord we must add, that the means necessary to carry on the work have been supplied, often, if not always, in a manner we least expected. We commenced the work in simple dependence on the Lord, being confident that as long as He desired us to labour for Him here, He would provide all things necessary for the sustenance of our family and the support of the work. And our God has proved faithful to his word. We much need a larger mission hall, to accommodate about 400 to 500, that many more might be brought under the influence of the Gospel here, where the need is so great. Christian friends visiting Berlin will be heartily welcomed by us.

Yours very truly, Julius Rohrbach.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.—The Quarterly Conference of the workers and friends of this mission was held on Monday, April 27, at the Seamen's Chapel. London Docks, under the presidency of Capt. W. Dalrymple. From brief reports presented by Mr. and Mrs. Hill and about twenty of the missionaries and workers, it appeared that at the Society's various stations in London and on the coasts, about 110 meetings had been held weekly. A large number of seamen had signed the pledge. and many had accepted Christ as their Saviour, and in varied ways were now earnestly seeking to serve Him. Some very encouraging cases were given by the workers to show how greatly the Lord had blessed the past quarter's work. In the unavoidable absence of Mr. Robert Paton, the address to the workers was given by Mr. George Wade. Funds are earnestly needed to sustain the recent extension of this Society's labours.

YOUNG MEN AT BLACKHEATH.

THE Blackheath branch of the Young Men's Christian Association held their first annual meeting on the evening of Tuesday week. We have pleasure in reporting that during its first year a degree of enterprise has been developed by the committee which gives rich promise of a vigorous youth. A year ago there were twenty-five members on the roll; now there are ninety-seven. Most suitable premises have been opened, which give accommodation for a well-furnished reading-room, educational classes, as well as the more direct means employed for the spiritual benefit of young men. The most promising feature of the work, perhaps, is a fortnightly social meeting for young men who are not members of the association, at which gentlemen of known experience give a Gospel address. Mr. Robert Burn and Mr. N. R. Hughman, from the City branches, have assisted at these meetings. A Blackheath association could not be considered complete without a cricket club, and one of their friends has placed a private ground at their disposal. The library has been enriched by a present from the Queen of her latest work, "More Leaves."

At the annual meeting Scripture was read by Mr. C. B. Ker, and Rev. B. Baring-Gould led the meeting in prayer. Rev. Burman Cassin's estimate of Young Men's Associations, after twenty-five years' experience in the ministry, was that they were the most useful institutions he knew of, and God had honoured them in a most remarkable way. Rev. Charles Wilson gave an address on "Young Men's Work for Christ," and Pastor Charles Spurgeon's chosen theme was "Christian Companionship." The wise counsel and apt illustration which these addresses contained will not, we think, be soon forgotten.

Mr. John MacGregor ("Rob Roy") was prevented by indisposition from taking the chair, and his place was ably filled by Mr. W. H. Matthews. We greatly rejoice at the hearty, healthy spirit which exists in this late addition to the circle of the London Young Men's Christian Associations. The collection that was made added £10 to the funds of the society.

BIRTHDAY OF THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY.

WEDNESDAY, April 28, being the eighty-sixth birthday of the venerable Earl of Shaftesbury, an interview took place between him and a committee of ladies who have been collecting a "Shaftesbury Birthday Memorial Fund," to be placed in his hands as president of the Society for the Relief of Persecuted Jews (Syrian Colonisation Fund), and to be devoted as he may think best for the employment of Jews in Cyprus and in the Holy Land.

His lordship's recent severe illness has left but too evident traces, and the delicate condition of his health obliges him to defer for some weeks the public presentation to him of this fund. This testimonial of good-will, however, gave him the liveliest satisfaction, and he expressed, in emphatic terms, the great pleasure he felt in the fact that his birthday had been marked by this memorial, which would enable him to carry forward a work so dear to his heart as the relief of the Jews, whom persecution has driven back to their own land. With visible emotion he then said that among the many letters, &c., which he had received that morning, there was one gift in the little parcel he held in his hand which had given him greater pleasure than almost anything. The parcel contained a subscription in farthings and halfpence from nearly 200 children of the "One Tun Ragged School," given by them for the poor Jews.

The Birthday Memorial Fund has now reached the amount of £730, and Lord Shaftesbury has acceded to the request of the committee to establish therewith a permanent fund for the aid of Jews who settle in the Land of Promise, and who may find shelter in homes thereby provided as a "Shaftesbury Memorial."

Medical Mission in Florence.—Rev. J. McDougall states that unless contributions are at once sent in, the good work carried on by Miss Roberts in her Medical Mission here must be given up for the season. I trust some of your readers may come to the rescue. Miss Roberts' address is 4, Via Agnole, Poligiano-Viale, Principessa Margherita, Florence.—John P. Coldstream, Florence.

ESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

MR. MOODY AT OMAHA.

A FRIEND in America sends us the following notes :—I reached Omaha the night before Mr. Moody's arrival, and attended the preliminary meeting in the Baptist Church, which could hold about 700 persons only. I found that all the meetings were to be held there, the committee being afraid, I suppose, to incur expense in taking the Opera House, holding 2200 persons or more. When the evangelist arrived on the platform in the Baptist Church he found the church only three parts full, and it was never full all that morning. On his own responsibility he took the Opera House. For weeks all the advertisements had said "First Baptist Church," and all tickets were for that church, and it was not till noon that it was known that the Opera House was taken, and all meetings were to be held there. By 3 p.m. it was crowded and remained so till all the meetings were over. From 10 a.m. to 12, from 3 to 5 p.m., from 7.30 p.m., or three times a day, every available seat was taken. The second and third evenings were for men only, up to 7.15, after which all empty places might be filled by anyone without tickets; when, however, 7.15 came there was no room left. The evangelist dealt out the truth of God from Gal. vi. 7, and a more solemn and searching address few ever listened to, good for saint and sinner. The after-meeting for men was held in the Lutheran Church, some little distance off, and thither many men went, with whom we had much intercourse, and blessing following the word.

The next day was one not to be forgotten, especially the address on the "Work of the Holy Ghost." Many ministers went away greatly helped. One said to me "it was worth coming 100 miles to hear that address," and so it was. I had come more than that. If no converts came from the meetings, the good done to ministers was very great, refreshing and helping them greatly. No one can understand the loneliness of a minister's position in the small western towns; small populations, and little intercourse with other ministers, and the hard battles they have to fight. The amount of worldliness in the churches is appalling—quartette choirs made up of Godless men and women, theatres patronised by the church members, skating rinks, &c., and above all, just now, the rage for "Progressive Euchre Parties." At all these the Christians are prominent. No wonder that many churches are dead. In many cases unconverted quartette choirs are destroying church life. The singing is a performance, and not part of the service of worship.

How differently does Mr. Moody look at, and use singing. Professor Towner, who was with him on the trip West, has a fine clear voice, and every word was distinctly heard. He and his wife are great helps, both in voice and spirit.

AT MR. SANKEY'S HOME.

The evangelists paid a brief visit early in April to New Castle, Pa., near which Mr. Sankey was born, and in which his family have resided for many years. As may well be supposed, the presence of the two men whose names have become household words all the world over, created much interest, and drew large gatherings to the services of the two days. There were visitors, we read, from all the neighbouring towns, and ministers from all parts of Western Pennsylvania and North Eastern Ohio.

At the Convention meetings various practical subjects were discussed by Mr. Moody and others. The preaching evangelist delivered some of his most telling addresses, and his singing companion greatly impressed the eager throngs with his thrilling Gospel solos. The evenings were devoted to purely evangelistic work, and there were present, says the local City News, those who for years had not set foot in a religious assembly. The after-meetings were seasons of genuine interest in dealing with anxious inquirers. The closing service, when Mr. Moody preached on "Sowing and Reaping," is described as "the grandest meeting ever held in New Castle."

A handsome public library is about to be erected in New Castle, "from money set aside at the request of Mr. Sankey by the Board having in charge the publication of his song book."

PITTSBURG.

After leaving Mr. Sankey's family home the evangelists visited the city of Pittsburg, where a Christian Convention was also held and the Gospel preached by speech and song to the great crowds of people who were drawn to the meetings in the Music Hall. The reporter of the Pittsburg Commercial Gazette, in which the meetings are vividly reported in detail, says :—"No other movement of any kind ever drew an assembly to match it in Western Pennsylvania. Nor has anything ever been brought before the people here which had the power to hold that this movement developed." The meetings were marked by all the distinguishing features of interest with which we became familiar during last year's London campaign; though the stay of the evangelists was a brief one, it will no doubt leave an enduring impression on the churches of the city and neighbourhood.

Mr. Moody spent the first Sunday of April in Chicago, speaking at his old church on the North side. After Pittsburg he visited Princeton College, N.J., and intervening points. He has planned to spend part of the months of May and June in the provinces of Canada.

ENGLISH GIRLS IN BRUSSELS.

MRS. VIVIAN, of the British Legation, Brussels, writes to The Times craving support for the institute for the assistance and protection of young Englishwomen. Had it been earlier in existence, she says, it would probably have been the means of saving many English girls from ruin and misery. The danger and temptation surrounding a young girl unemployed in that city are obvious, while even those who have employment sometimes need advice, a home to which they can go on Sundays and holidays, and a friend they know will visit them and take care of them in sickness. Provision has now been made, as far as local means can effect it, to provide such a home at the English Institute, No. 80, Chaussée de Wavre, founded by the widow of the late British chaplain in Brussels. Here all applicants can receive advice and assistance, and spend their Sundays and holidays; two neat, clean sitting rooms, provided with newspapers, books, writing materials, &c., and a fire in winter are at their disposal, and here they can meet their friends. Respectable lodgings in the neighbourhood of the institute are found for those in search of employment, without any fee or charge beyond the rent of their lodgings, which they are allowed to repay by instalments. The institute thus offers a home and assistance and advice in case of need to every homeless or friendless Englishwoman in Brussels.

The committee are now in urgent want of funds to enable them to carry on and extend their work. Subscriptions may be sent to the Hon. Mrs. Tremayne, 18, New Cavendish-street, London, or to Miss Young, hon. secretary of the English Institute, 80, Chaussée de Wavre, Brussels.

SAILORS' REST AID SOCIETY.—Mr. Stephen Burrowes writes from 93, Via Piedigrotta, Naples :—This Society purposes to establish Sailors' Rests in every port where there are no such helps for seamen, and foreign ports need such institutions more than home ports. Next week I hope to go to Messina to open a rest there. The rest at Naples is prospering, and has become a beneficial help to seamen ashore. Capt. Darby, the secretary, 68, Shaftesbury-terrace, Stoke-road, Gosport, will give any information about the Society. I trust your readers will kindly remember the rest about to be established at Messina. A Christian sailor of good ability has expressed a desire to go to that port, where help is needed very urgently. The grog-shops are doing a terrible work in that port. Mrs. Josephine Butler, of Winchester, has become hon. president of the ladies' associated branch of the Society. Commodore More Molyneux, C.B., of the Red Sea Squadron, is hon. president of the ordinary branch.

MISS WESTON AND THE BLUEJACKETS.

DEAR SIR,—The other day a handsome cheque for £31 from the readers of THE CHRISTIAN came to hand at a time of great need, and I looked upon it as a clear and unmistakable answer to prayer. Our Navy is rapidly increasing, and our work with it, and in these days of warlike rumours if our men go forth they need to go with the Word of God in their hands. Through the kindness of the Admiralty I am forwarding parcels every fortnight to Suakim, to the Naval Brigade in the front, and to our hospital ships. Will your readers furnish me with Christmas cards and illustrated papers, Herald of Mercy, British Workman, &c., to send out? The Naval Brigade News, edited by Miss Wintz, is greatly valued by them; 100 copies can be sent for 5s., 50 for 2s. 6d. Will any kind friends who will forward postal orders for this purpose, kindly mark them "Brigade News for our sailors in the Soudan"? I wish your readers could see a working party of our Bluejackets at the Sailors' Rest, Portsmouth, covering magazines, making scrapbooks, &c., for their sick and wounded comrades.

We have also great and increased facilities for work among the sailor boys. These boys are marched up to the Sailors' Rest, before they leave for four or five years' service, to have a few parting words of counsel and advice. This is always accompanied by a tea, which the boys thoroughly enjoy. After tea I give a copy of Mr. Sankey's hymn-book, in cloth, to each boy, as a parting gift. We sing together the well-known hymns for the last time, and kneel together in prayer; a hearty shake of the hand, and "God bless you," and away march the boys to the boats, to sail the next day for foreign lands.

I have just opened a small house in Portsmouth as "married quarters," and accommodation for seamen's wives, friends, and others. A poor bluejacket from Haslar Hospital, hardly recovered from sunstroke and fever, was one of the first to take advantage of it. His wife came from one of the Midland counties to fetch him home, and they spent a few days at our branch house, that he might get strength to travel. Many a wife, mother, and sister have already taken advantage of the place. "I shall have my old mother and father down," said a seaman the other day, "now you can put them up, and give them a look round the ships; it has been the dream of their life to come." If any of your kind readers can spare an extra donation for the "Married Quarters" I shall be very glad to apply it to so good a purpose. I would ask constant prayer for myself and my fellow-workers, that we may be enabled to glorify God, and to lead these men to Him.

AGNES E. WESTON.

PREVENTIVE WORK IN BRIXTON.

IN December, 1883, a Cottage Home for Girls was opened in North Brixton, the object being to give shelter and careful training to a few girls, whose previous moral and religious education had been much neglected. Only seven girls could be received in the Cottage; the premises were very inconvenient even for this number. It was, therefore, thought desirable to take a larger house to accommodate twelve girls, who could be trained equally well by the same staff. Accordingly a very suitable house has been taken at 255, Brixton-road, which was opened by a meeting of friends of the work on Thursday, April 23.

Archdeacon Richardson, in the course of an interesting address, described some of the homes from which the children had been rescued, and the contrast these presented to the home in which they were now being trained. Miss Clements, lady superintendent, said few people who had not taken a personal share in such work could understand how much care and individual attention were required. She appealed for worn clothing for the use of the inmates. Rev. Thomas Turner, Canon Hussey, and Rev. Walter Horne spoke sympathetically of the work. The debt at present on the home through removal is £45 help towards the liquidation of which may be sent to Miss Clements, 255, Brixton-road, S.W.

May Meetings.

WOMEN OF INDIA.

HAVING a lively recollection of the earnest and stirring pleas that were wont to be put forth by Lord Shaftesbury at the annual meetings of the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society, we could not but share in the general disappointment that continued ill-health prevented him from presiding at last week's meeting in the hall of the Polytechnic. Mr. Joseph Hoare very kindly took his place in the sense of filling the chair, but nobody can really take the place of the venerable Earl. That very day, by the way, was his eighty-fifth birthday, and the meeting, before it closed, voted a resolution at once of condolence and congratulation.

An abstract of the year's report was read by Rev. A. Lash, Clerical Secretary. From the detailed nature of the statement it is scarcely possible for us to give any summary of it, but it indicated an encouraging progress all along the line of the Society's operations. Special reference was made to the opening of a mission at Patna, towards which Mr. Johnstone, of Edinburgh, besides giving a handsome initial subscription, contributes an annual subsidy of £150.

The financial statement submitted by Mr. W. T. Paton, though it showed a considerable increase of income, revealed a deficit of some £1400, caused by the growing exigencies of the work.

Rev. W. H. Webb-Peploe said he desired at the outset of the May meetings to remind all who attended them of the responsibility they incurred in listening to the reports and passing resolutions, pledging themselves to further the work of the various societies. There was ample scope for a constantly-growing expenditure in the work of educating and evangelising the millions of women in India. Referring to the possibility of an outbreak of war for the defence of India, Mr. Peploe said he believed that if it should unhappily come to pass, it would result in bringing home to us more vividly our deep responsibility towards India. We have been hearing much lately of the devotion of young Englishmen to foreign missionary work. Why should we not hear of a similar movement among our Christian young women, who shall go forth to India, and carry the Gospel to their benighted sisters in that far-off land. He thought that Christian women should hold meetings specially for their younger sisters, in order to stir them up in this matter. He had been greatly grieved to find that in connection with missionary work there was too often a distressing spirit of calculation on the part of the workers as to what money payments should be made to them. He thought there should be a more whole-hearted consecration in undertaking such work; the Lord would see to it that every proper need would be supplied. Through God's blessing the position of women in England had proved to be one of the greatest sources of her greatness; let Englishwomen learn their responsibility to carry to their Indian sisters the same blessings of Gospel light and liberty that had lifted them so high in their own land. The enemies of the Gospel are very busy in scattering a certain kind of civilisation throughout India; surely Christians must at least be equally zealous in spreading abroad the knowledge that maketh wise unto salvation. Mr. Peploe closed with an earnest appeal to Christian young women to devote their lives as well as their money to the evangelisation of India.

Rev. E. Lewis, of the London Missionary Society, Bellary, said the fact of the whole of India—every house and every heart almost—being now open to the message of the Gospel carried with it a tremendous responsibility for the Christians at home. There is no more inspiring and hopeful Christian work to-day than that among the women of India. He personally knew scores of young men in that country who were disciples of Christ, but were kept back from a public profession of their faith by the influence of their female relations. To win the women of India, therefore, was virtually to win the whole nation to Christ. Some striking instances of fidelity and devotion to Christ were given by Mr. Lewis, from his own experiences among the people. When the love of Christ enters into the hearts of Indian women, he said, it makes them noble indeed. If English women wished to engage in pleasurable and delightful work, let them go out and teach, and take the Gospel to, their sisters in India.

A resolution affirming the necessity of increasing the income of the Society to £12,000 was moved by Rev. H. C. Squires, of Bombay. Though it was perfectly right for individual missionaries to go forth in the spirit of humble dependence on God's care, which Mr. Peploe had so well urged, it was at the same time essential for the Committee to provide such resources as the work of the Society appeared to demand. He pleaded for a hearty support of its operations, not only because it is a bond of co-operation and union between all the Protestant missions, but because of the truly excellent work it is doing in teaching, in evangelising, and in providing medical benefits for the people of India. Rev. J. Fordyce spoke very warmly of the work, from the most intimate personal knowledge, and alluded to the remarkable progress it had made. Sir William Muir added some strong testimony to the like effect.

MISS MITTENDORFF and her ORPHANS.

IT was by no means a large company that gathered around this good sister last week, at the Y.W.C.A. rooms, in Old Cavendish-street, as she recounted the Lord's dealings with her and her orphan girls during the course of another year. One friend remarked that he had only heard of the meeting by accident, and suggested that means should be taken to make it better known to the friends of the work. In the unavoidable absence of Mr. Joseph Weatherley, a tried friend of the Epsom Home, the little assembly was presided over by Mr. Denham Smith, who spoke very feelingly of the blessedness of the work, and made altogether a very hearty, homely chairman.

Miss Mittendorff said she could only speak of the lovingkindness and faithfulness of the Lord. She had often known what it was to have an empty cupboard, but she had rested on the word of the Psalmist, "I shall not want," and it had been made good to her and her orphaned girls. In the course of the last year there had been seasons when faith had been greatly tried, but the children had never been without a meal. She did not see any Scriptural permission for going into debt, so she waited on God day by day. Some wonderful instances she told of how the Lord had supplied the needs of the work just as they arose. In answer to the Chairman, she said there were many needs just now. She was still in debt some few pounds for the expenses of the trust deed. She scarcely liked to mention the need of a playground, though it would be a great boon to the children. She had heavy rates and taxes to pay, and a touching account was given of how this burden, being cast definitely on the Lord, was also borne by Him, and the money was sent in. In the matter of the playground, Mr. Denham Smith said it would be very nice if some of those whose playing days were over were to provide it, for the sake of the children's health and comfort. One friend had promised £5 out of the £30 needed. Judging from the glee that we were told greeted the advent of two swings given to the children, we should think that at a very small outlay no end of a happy and healthful time might be secured to those dear orphans at Epsom.

When the company had sung "I left it all with Jesus," Miss Mittendorff referred to the brief remarks made by her at the recent Conference on social questions, as reported in our issue of April 23. She did not assert, as reported, that all the children who had been under her care had ultimately been led to Christ, but said that she had faith to believe they would.

Mr. Fegan said he wished very much that some kind friend would do for Miss Mittendorff what a friend had done for him for the last two years—enable her to send out fifty children to Canada, where they would be gladly received and placed in happy homes, thus making room for others in the Epsom Institution. In a very pleasant and humorous address Dr. Gilbart Smith protested against the good girls trained by Miss Mittendorff being sent out to Canada, or Australia, or anywhere else outside "poor London" that needed them so badly. The doctor spoke in the most eulogistic terms of Miss Mittendorff and her work, and said it was an unspeakable privilege to help it on in any way.

Dr. Picard thought that more ought to be done by the Christian public in providing for the needs of this work, and suggested that some West-end ladies should give Miss Mittendorff drawing-room meetings where she could tell of her experiences. In response to a request from Dr. Habershon, Miss Mittendorff related some interesting cases that had come under her especial notice of spiritual blessing that had come to those who had been in the Home, through the lessons learned there. Mr. Woodhouse added some words of warm sympathy for the work, as also did Mr. Field. In drawing the deeply interesting proceedings to a close, Mr. Denham Smith said he thought that in her seasons of straitened resources, Miss Mittendorff might very well tell her needs to the Lord's people, as well as to the Lord Himself.

As very few of our readers had the privilege of cheering our sister with their presence on this occasion, perhaps some of them may count it a happiness to help her in her unceasing labour of love among the children, either in the matter of the playground, or in respect to the daily recurring needs of the institution. Any friends who may be able to visit Clayton House, Epsom, in these fine early summer days, will, we are sure, receive a hearty and Christian welcome.

MR. GEORGE HOLLAND'S MISSION.

THE Christian evidences, as compiled by Mr. George Holland, are such as can be easily verified. They are not in tomes, bound in boards, titled and indexed; such productions would hardly be appreciated in Whitechapel. They are abundant labours in every conceivable direction in philanthropic and Christian work. More than that, they are men and women, lads and lasses, into whose heart God's grace has entered, and whose lives are the most blessed testimony of the character of the work in which Mr. Holland and his helpers are deeply engaged.

It must have greatly rejoiced the heart of our good and venerable brother that so many friends gathered round him at George-yard on the evening of Monday week for this anniversary; they, in their turn, were well rewarded for coming. But there was one disappointment. For the first time since the work began Lord Shaftesbury was not present. The kindly letter he sent to "dear George Holland" made it clear, however, that his coming was an impossibility. That the following day was his lordship's eighty-fifth birthday was not forgotten. The manner in which affectionate expressions were uttered regarding him showed how warm a place he has in the hearts of the people at George-yard.

Mr. Holland's report even lacked that note of discord which musicians think is sometimes necessary, and which usually makes itself heard in reports when finance is mentioned. This year Mr. Holland's accounts were closed with more than £20 to the good. That friends may not think this to be a matter of course, he said he thought it was the very first time he ever had that happy experience. To detail here the list of operations at the George-yard Mission is impossible, seeing they extend to nearly eighty in the course of a week—from the infant day nursery, which begins at 7.30 every morning, to meetings of all sorts, which do not close till ten o'clock. The estimated number of attendances last year was 374,000. How can such an army be attended to? In addition to a permanent staff of about fourteen, no fewer than from 150 to 160 voluntary workers come, chiefly ladies, and many of them from the West-end. Thus the work is overtaken. A Bible-class of about seventy lads, ranging from fourteen to eighteen years, is held on Sunday evenings, and a Bible-class for men on Friday evenings musters an average attendance of 110. These are special lines of work which some friends might wish to know more of by a personal visit. Mr. Holland will gladly send a copy of his report to any who may wish it.

Mr. J. K. Studd was the first speaker, and he was followed by the rector of Whitechapel, Rev. J. A. Robinson, whose address was a feast of fat things. Mr. Curtis, of the Ragged School Union, gave a speech which was a string of pearls, the centre of all being Love. Mr. J. E. Mathieson spoke of the moral and social influences of such agencies as the George-yard Mission, the Annie McPhersons, the Barnardos, and the Charingtons, who had dedicated their lives to the welfare of their fellow-men. To encourage such efforts was both a pleasure and a duty. Mr. Rowland Smith and Rev. D. Reakes followed, and the Chairman, Dr. Cory, brought the meeting to a close with such pleasant remarks as seemed to make everybody wish time would for a little stand still.

No request for help was preferred, but we are sure God's stewards will not forget "dear George Holland" and his great work in Whitechapel.

CITY OF LONDON TOTAL ABSTAINERS' UNION.

AT the seventh annual meeting of this Society last week at 186, Aldersgate-st., the secretary, Mr. J. Orchard, submitted an interesting statement of work during the past year, suggesting ground for continued effort in this important branch of Temperance work. Successful meetings have been held in various wholesale business houses. At one of these an employer said that some years ago it was almost a nightly occurrence to have young men returning home the worse for drink; last year there was only one case of drunkenness reported out of the entire staff. At least two young men, holding good positions, owe their continuance in their situations to the timely efforts of this Union, through whose interposing mediation they were rescued from drink when on the point of dismissal. In another large house seventeen of the employés took the pledge one evening after a lecture by Dr. Carpenter. The total membership has reached 700. The report announced progress also in the efforts made to induce employers to place non-intoxicant drinks on the dinner-table. Efforts continue to be made to do away with the wine-room in warehouses, "one of the greatest evils in commercial life." Parents write letters to the secretary brimful of gratitude for the good done to their sons.

Mr. Samuel Morley (Chairman) said he intended more than ever to give his energies to the advancement of this good cause. He confessed impatience at the slow progress made, compared with what might be done if all the friends of Temperance would do their utmost. This question must be borne in mind at the next General Election, when candidates who are pledged definitely to further the Temperance cause must be supported.

Vigorous addresses followed, from Canon Barker, of Marylebone, Dr. Barnardo, Mr. Kegan Paul, and Mr. George Williams. The Chairman, in acknowledging a vote of thanks, admitted the large increase of drink through workman's clubs, but was equally sure that the West-end clubs needed to be dealt with.

REFORMATORY AND REFUGE UNION.

THE sight of a number of children always stirs tender feelings; but to see 500 gathered together, the boys from six of the London homes, all of them representing the misery, neglect, or vice of the country, is a singularly touching spectacle. As one looked round upon those wistful faces turned eagerly towards their conductor, although they were as happy as could be, and although for many of them we trust bright futures are in store, one could not help being sadly grieved to know that so much requires to be done, and that there is such appalling need for these reformatory and industrial agencies. The Union, whose meeting was held on Wednesday afternoon last week at St. James's Hall, has connected with it 588 homes, with accommodation for 47,060 children. The Earl of Shaftesbury had, with his usual earnest readiness, promised to take the chair, but from feeble health was unable to be present. His place on this occasion was supplied by Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton.

Rev. Gordon Calthrop, who is a prince of children's speakers, gave them a short address, telling the story of two brothers, schoolfellows of his own, the elder of whom, when the boat was upset a little way out at sea, swam with his little brother until the sailors in another boat caught hold of him, but sank himself, exhausted, and was drowned just as the helping hand was stretched to pull him in. From this story was drawn the lesson that we should not forget our Elder Brother, Jesus Christ, who died to save us, nor be ashamed to tell the story of his death, nor neglect the writings which He has left for our guidance.

The one resolution which was put to the meeting, was the usual formal one of support to the institution, but it was proposed in a singularly practical and suggestive speech by Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., whose long interest in social questions gives him authority to speak, and lends weight to his words. There was nothing more sad in the nation than the degradation of the children, which is going on at such a fearfully rapid pace. The social surroundings of large numbers of them are so detestable, it is scarcely possible for them to emerge moral and useful members of society; they must become a danger to the State, or a charge to the community, and persons whose own lives are miserable to the last degree. Slowly the boarding-out system is beginning to be adopted, but he thought that emigration was better. In the colonies children are valuable almost from early years, and if reasonably trained before they are sent out, there is no limit to the number who can be placed in colonial homes, where sometimes they are even adopted into the family. Mr. Smith also advocated a stronger Minors' Protection Bill than the one now before Parliament, in order to protect young girls from infamy, and a law to repress the circulation of bad literature amongst young people. In conclusion, he deprecated the baneful practice amongst large classes of sending children of eight or ten years of age to the publichouses for beer, which they were tempted to sip as they brought it back, and in this way they often acquired a liking for it. He himself attributed partly to this the increasing drunkenness amongst women; and Temperance work seemed to take less hold amongst men.—Record.

OUR HIDDEN HAMLETS.—I.

WE have still living, in Pavenham, those who attended Turvey Church, when Legh Richmond was its pastor. And delightful has it been for me to hear these old folk tell how, in their early days, the people would troop over meadow and moor to hear that good man preach. Sometimes, however, I have felt sad when listening to their ancient ditties, for I have thought that the thirst for the Gospel, which characterised many of the poor at the beginning of the century, had died away from our country villages. Others doubtless, have indulged the same idea; but maybe we have all been wrong, as possibly some of the readers of The Christian may think, when I have told them a little of my late experience in connection with some of our hidden hamlets.

The characters of whom I am about to write are real; the names of both persons and places are fictitious. Having given this little piece of information, I will hasten to add that about three years ago I received from my old friend, Edith Graham, the reminder of a promise once made, to be present, if possible, on a certain occasion, and to take part in a certain service. I was delighted to keep my promise; and after hands had been joined, and troth plighted, amid the prayers of hundreds of her father's congregation, I saw the young bride set off for her new home at Willowford Rectory.

She had been married to Harold Trentham, an old Cambridge athlete, who had been led to devote the sanctified energy of his natural character to the service of his Lord and Master, Jesus Christ. Naturally of a retiring disposition, I had never expected her to become the active worker for the Master I afterwards found her to be; but both her husband and herself had sought a special baptism of the Holy Ghost, and from the commencement of their joint ministry God appears to have given them his gracious smile. Rather ludicrous in their seeming effects were some of Edith's first attempts to win the villagers for Christ. After an hour's struggle for one dear woman's soul she was rewarded with the exclamation, "Oh, Mrs. Trentham, however do you do to make such a nice prayer, without a book?" Another believed that what was to be was to be.

While opposition rose from some quarters whence it had been least looked for, our young friends felt themselves condemned to more or less isolation from neighbourly sympathy and support. They had received grace to set their faces firmly against the "garden" and the "tennis" party, so fashionable in that country district, and, as a consequence, they were very soon left to themselves by the clergy and gentry living around them. Soon, however, God gave them, in converted souls, seals to their ministry.

A notice appeared in The Christian telling how the Holy Spirit had been marvellously poured forth upon their parish. I had often received invitations to conduct a mission for them. Some two or three months since I felt constrained to offer my services, without waiting for any further appeal from my friends. "Both Edith and I are living in expectation of the Lord's return," said Harold, as soon as our mutual greetings were over, and a blessed keynote for our after-conversation had been struck by those soul-cheering words. I had known him when he had lived only to excel in cricket and music. What a change had been wrought by divine grace—living now for the Coming of Christ!

Scattered though the cottages of the parish were, the people knew how to come together. We had blessed meetings in the little schoolroom each night, as long as the mission lasted. Some had come two miles, others three or four, and others, I believe, from greater distances still. And what prayers we had! How I wished that some of our Christian folk, who have so much unreal mannerism with them, and who, with their stilted language and lengthened petitions, kill nearly every prayer-meeting they attend, had been present. I had been using the favourite Gospel figure, the life-boat alongside the sinking ship, and a poor sister who had evidently grasped the idea, just dropped down on her knees, at the after-meeting, with the words: "O Lord, I thank Thee that I am in the Lifeboat, and no longer on the sinking ship. Accept my thanks, O Lord, for Jesus Christ's sake, Amen." Another would pray for an unsaved husband; another for unsaved children. One poor dear fellow became somewhat entangled in ideas suggested by the word "inspiration." He had heard the collect in our Communion Service, "Cleanse Thou the thoughts of our hearts," &c., and he asked God to cleanse out the inspiration, evidently thinking that it was something evil; but I knew that his heart was right, and that his prayer would right itself ere reaching heaven, so I added my Amen to it, as to that of the others.

It was quite a sight, on the Sabbath afternoon, to see the people scattering themselves across the fields at the close of our service in the old tumble-down church. I wish some reader of The Christian would forward me £500 to have that place repaired. Presenting the appearance of a burying-wall, it has neither stove nor lights, and great must be their love for the truth to keep those poor villagers there in the winter, shivering through the lengthened service of "The Church of England." I do not expect that any one is going to send the £500, nor had I the slightest idea of mentioning such a thing when I began to write; but the thought just struck me that some one might possibly be led to do such a good action.

Be this, however, as it may, such a marvellous work has been wrought by God in that little country village during the last two years as I have never yet met with in any other village, north, south, east, or west. Visiting one little farm-house, I found that the father, the mother, and three grown daughters had, all of them, been brought to the Lord while the Trenthams had been at Willowford, and when, at the close of the mission, I asked those who could thank God for an assured interest in the Lord Jesus to stand up and sing with me the consecration hymn, "I will follow Jesus," I believe that more than half of the congregation instantly rose to their feet. John E. Linnell.

Pavenham Vicarage, Bedford.

ST. ANDREWS, BATTERSEA.—A sixteen days' mission, conducted by Dr. Morris, has just been held in this parish, one of the poorest and lowest in London. The congregations increased in number each night, and the interest felt was deep and real. Most helpful morning addresses were given on the Christian life. At the close a large number of the poorest came forward to offer thanks for blessing received: it was most touching to hear their simple testimony as to what the Lord had done for them. Workers are much needed in the parish.

VICE IN THE PUBLIC STREETS.—A circular has been issued, bearing the signatures of the Duke of Westminster, the Marquis of Ailsa, the Earl of Shaftesbury, Earl Stanhope, the Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Charles Bruce, M.P., Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., and others, stating that the state of the London streets, and particularly of those in the neighbourhood of Pimlico, has become so scandalous in regard to immorality that it is necessary to draw to it the serious attention of the residents of the district named in the cause of public decency. A private meeting is therefore summoned for May 13, at St. Peter's (Eaton-square) Parish Rooms to discuss the formation of a local vigilance committee, in order to secure the efficient co-operation of citizens and public authorities for the suppression of houses of ill-fame; to take action for the checking of vice in the streets; to reclaim fallen women; and to put in force the law for the removal of children from disorderly houses.

Notes and Comments.

THERE has been no day appointed for national humiliation and prayer, but we think there have been few Christian churches, families, or closets, where public, social, or private prayer has not been earnestly offered that the God of peace would save us from the threatened war with Russia. If war has not been already declared, we have not to thank the newspapers. With a few noble and patriotic exceptions, the dailies have done not a little to provoke war, and in doing so have proved how little they represent the opinion and feeling of the country. The Christian Press has almost unanimously advocated peace; and various religious bodies have enthusiastically passed resolutions to the same effect.

The first year of such a war would probably cost us fifty millions, but that would be a small part of the cost, compared with the mangled bodies, the bereaved families, the desolated countries, the broken hearts, the souls hurried unprepared into eternity, and the hindrance to missionary effort in India. We cannot too devoutly express our thanks to God that the news at present before the country gives hope that so wicked a war will be averted.

It is pleasant to record that when the Prince and Princess of Wales, after a fortnights' almost incessant round of travelling, were the Sunday guests of the Duke of Abercorn at Baronscourt, the Princess, after having attended divine service, visited the room of a poor working girl in the neighbouring town of Newtownstewart, and remained with the dying sufferer for two hours. What passed during the long interview on that quiet Sabbath afternoon probably will never be known on earth, for the girl passed into eternal rest a few hours afterwards; but there is in the fact a lesson and an example for those in less exalted positions who have it in their power to carry comfort and love to the homes and hearts of the lowly and suffering, and who profess to be unable to find time for the exercise of such practical Christianity.

Our Roman Catholic contemporary, The Tablet, has inserted a long letter with reference to the attitude recently taken by the Bishops of that Church in Ireland, reminding the prelates, in the words of Pope Leo XIII., that "the principal precepts of the Christian doctrine are the fear of God, and in everything to preserve justice in all its inviolable integrity. Whence it follows that submission is due to magistrates, obedience to the laws, and honour to the King." The writer of the remarkable communication goes on to say that, "it is to be feared that they (the hierarchy of Ireland) are driven on as a ship before the wind, which does not lead the storm, but rather goes forward, she knows not whither, and having lost all power of resistance in the velocity of her course, is at last dashed against the rocks and submerged."

Another letter says:—"God grant that the [Roman Catholic] Church in Ireland may not have entered on a new and disastrous policy, in complete variance with all her past traditions, and, for the sake of a seeming leading of their hitherto faithful flocks, that the shepherds themselves be not in danger of losing all influence for good, and all power in the denunciation of evil. . . . These results are feared by some of the wisest, most experienced, and most holy of the Irish priesthood."

"A terrible calamity," says The Methodist Times, "has befallen Methodism in the scene of our most glorious missionary triumphs. King George of Tonga, whose name has been uttered so often on missionary platforms, with the great majority of his people, has withdrawn from our communion, and established a new Church entitled 'The Free Church of Tonga.'" On commencing the perusal of this paragraph we were much startled, fearing that an earthquake or some equally awful event had happened. A little further down the column, however, we were reassured, especially on learning that "there is no doctrinal or even ecclesiastical difficulty. The Free Church of Tonga is to teach Wesleyan doctrine and to enforce Wesleyan discipline." Finally, we are much puzzled to know just where the "terrible calamity" comes in. As Mr. Percy Bunting, himself an eminent member of the Methodist community, lately remarked with great good sense, if there is any field in which denominational differences ought to be sunk, it is the mission field.

On the subject of "Cruel Cheapness," a correspondent writes to state that ladies who cannot for any reason find out poor needlewomen and pay them direct for work done, can, by entrusting their commissions to Mrs. Heckford, 8, High-street, Shadwell, E., be sure that the worker will be fairly paid. The prices charged for articles are not higher than would be paid in shops where a very small remuneration is given to the makers.

Many of our readers will have heard with regret of the illness of Canon Wilberforce. Truth says:—

> "It is not likely that Canon Wilberforce will be able to resume his parochial duties for several months, and in future he will have entirely to give up his Blue Ribbon Missions and all other exciting and exhausting platform work. Great sympathy is felt for him at Southampton, and general wishes for his speedy recovery are expressed."

The latest bulletin states that the Canon had improved, but his condition was still one that caused anxiety.

A War Budget—or, as it is euphemistically termed, a preparation for war budget—is something to which happily we are unaccustomed, and we trust it will long remain a novel experience in British Government finance. We are glad, however, since a deficit of fifteen millions had to be made good in some way, that the Chancellor of the Exchequer has added to the tax on intoxicants, and spared the tea. The Pall Mall Gazette pithily observes:—

> "The Daily Telegraph thinks Mr. Childers cannot have intended to establish a fiscal premium on teetotalism. But surely that ought to be an object with every Chancellor of the Exchequer. To put a premium upon temperance and a tax on intemperance is in itself a good thing, and a Minister cannot go very far wrong if he taxes deleterious luxuries up to the last point at which the impost ceases to be remunerative, and leaves the necessaries of life scot-free. Tea is a necessary of life; gin is not. Therefore, tax gin and spare tea; and that is just what Mr. Childers has done."

Very sincere and wide-spread regret will be felt at the death of Rev. Dr. Rees, of Swansea, just on the eve of the meeting of the Congregational Union, of which he was last year unanimously appointed Chairman. This section of the Church will meet under the shadow of a great sorrow, though a worthy successor has been found in Dr. Rees' friend and fellow-worker, Dr. Thomas, of Liverpool.

Two copies of the Revised Old Testament were last week presented by the Revision Company to the President and Prolocutor of Canterbury Convocation, though the book will not be issued to the public till the 19th inst. As the Revision Company is a mixed one, and not exclusively composed of Episcopalians, it would be a graceful act if copies were also formally presented to the Moderator of the Presbyterian Synod, the President of the Wesleyan Conference, and the Chairmen of the Baptist and Congregational Unions.

Under the dignified and able presidency of Rev. Robert Taylor, Norwood, the Presbyterian Church in England held its annual Synod in London last week. The Moderator, eschewing any ambitious and world-wide flights in his address, touched on some practical questions connected with his own denomination. He claimed that for soundness in the orthodox faith, and also for sober, scriptural views of Church government, Presbyterians yield to no other section of the Church Catholic.

While these claims may have a measure of truth in them, we think it was scarcely necessary for Mr. Taylor to exalt his own communion at the expense of other believers in the common faith. We would endorse a note of warning with respect to any system which "clothes one or two teachers with a quasi infallibility; and which, by its exaggerated individualism, tends to produce wilfulness and weakness, discord, and disintegration in the Church of God." But these results may follow, and as a matter of fact unhappily do follow, from all the systems—Presbyterianism not excluded—when systems are thought more of than the general profit. "Whate'er is best administered, is best." Organisation is good, and, indeed, it is imperative within certain limits. But where there is real life it might well be allowed freest scope in assuming the organisation that best befits its development and exercise. There is no small danger of forgetting that Church systems exist only for the good of the people, and not the people for the vindication of the systems.

A pleasing incident of the Synod was the reception at the Freemasons' Tavern, and the presence of Mr. Spurgeon, who is a neighbour of the Moderator's at Norwood. The great Baptist was very severe and satirical in his condemnation of advanced thought and thinkers; however physical infirmity may be creeping over him, his mental vigour is at least unimpaired.

If it be true that imitation is the sincerest flattery, an evening contemporary must feel considerably flattered by the change in form that The Rock, following in the wake of The Methodist Times, has assumed. The change of form, however, is not a very great matter, and in this case we think it a decided improvement. It would seem apparent that there is also to be a change in the spirit and method of our erewhile vigorous Protestant contemporary, if we may judge from the tenor of a leading article in this first number of the new series. With much in the article on "Things that differ—Reverence and Ritualism," we are not at all disposed to quarrel; we believe that the truest reverence can dwell with widely divergent forms of worship. We have, therefore, no difficulty in accepting, as it is barely stated, the theory that "each generation must be left to decide questions of mere ritual for itself."

But when we find, as we do in these days of advancing formalism, that forms of ritual are set up as the expression of the most unscriptural and pernicious doctrines, it seems to us quite possible to be culpably quiescent and acquiescent with regard to the matter. When we are told in so many words by "Father Ignatius" that if we would have "the full benefit of the blessings of God's gifts to help men in the way of salvation," we must believe in "the Real Presence of the body and blood" of Christ, as taught within "the original Catholic Church," we can only hope that the new editor of The Rock is not so all-embracing in his charity and goodwill as not to combat such sacramentarian doctrine and sacerdotal pretensions.

The religious world at large ought to feel grateful to the representative of The Pall Mall Gazette, who has extracted from Father Ignatius, in an interview, a statement of his true position. Many persons have been puzzled to think how the eloquent monk-preacher could reconcile his earnest and thoroughgoing evangelicalism with his monastic views. The truth has now come out. Ignatius says that his real vocation is "to revive monasticism in the Church of England;" his missionary work is only secondary and of necessity. That is, in plain language, he engages in public evangelistic work merely in order to raise funds with which to carry on his establishment at Llanthony. In the same conversation he describes the Reformation as "the greatest disaster which ever befell England." We think he will have a tough task to perform before he brings any sensible number of intelligent Christians to agree with him, all the more that they now know from his own mouth what he is aiming at.

Although we have not space in our columns for the discussion of the differing views as to the question connected with our Lord's second coming, whether He comes to take away his people by secret rapture or, as the words of 1 Thess. iv. 16 would seem more naturally to suggest, in manifested glory; yet we do not desire to underrate the importance of prophetic study, to which our correspondent, Mr. Warrand Houghton, at the close of his letter in our last number urges us to direct the attention of our friends.

By all means let this subject be prayerfully examined in the light of Scripture, but we would guard our readers against what we believe has been a fruitful source of confusion, not only to prophetic truth, but to Christian harmony and brotherly love—the adopting of some cut and dried scheme of prophetic interpretation made ready to hand by others. "Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind," is here a principle of importance. If the Bereans are commended for not taking the word of an Apostle, without searching for themselves "whether those things were so," surely it would be well for prophetic teachers to urge upon their hearers a similar independence of human teaching, as compared with Divine.

We venture to press this point the more because this very theory of "the Secret Rapture" has been sometimes treated as a test point in discovering whether allegiance was rendered to certain teachers whose teaching was regarded by their followers as little less than divine; and deplorable have been the results of this teacher-worship. "Envy, hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness" have abounded in the train of such partisanship. These evils are not the consequences of prophetic study, but of setting up one teacher or one school of prophetic teaching as alone worthy of confidence. We believe that much light remains yet to be attained on the subject, and that a confession of ignorance as to how little we as yet really know would be a much more hopeful sign of future progress in prophetic knowledge, than the dogmatic spirit which characterises too many of our prophetic teachers.

The meeting in Princes Hall, Piccadilly, this day (Thursday), to consider the question of the legal protection of young girls, takes place at eight p.m., not three p.m., as inadvertently stated in our last issue. In a note calling attention to this meeting, Miss Ellice Hopkins says:—

> "Only let the readers of THE CHRISTIAN realise this one fact: If Christian women put a child into an industrial school against the consent of her vicious parents to train her for God, the parents can claim her by law up to the age of sixteen. If the keeper of a den of infamy takes a child and sells her, body and soul, to the devil, the virtuous parent cannot claim his own child—should the present Bill pass in its present form—if she has passed her fifteenth year. Parental control ceases one year earlier in favour of the keeper of a den of infamy!! If your readers realise this, I feel sure they will make the greatest effort to attend the meeting, and protest by their presence against a lowering of the age that carries this monstrous consequence."

Judging from the prominent place he fills in current religious literature, Professor Henry Drummond is one of the most popular men of the time. Three leading magazines this month have articles either by or about him. The Expositor has the second and concluding part of a moderately-expressed, and on the whole an effective, defence of "Natural Law in the Spiritual World." Though not written by the Professor, this defence is no doubt largely inspired by him. In The Monthly Interpreter Rev. D. M. Ross adds one more criticism on the same book, in which he finds much to praise and not a little to dissent from. Good Words contains a charming paper from Professor Drummond's own pen, giving the result of his recent observations in Central Africa on the habits of the white ant, and its place in the wonderful scheme of nature. Besides all this, Mr. Drummond is more active and more successful than ever in the evangelistic field.

The Annual Conference of the Evangelical Alliance will this year be held in Glasgow, October 6—8. An influential Committee has been formed to carry out the local arrangements, and it is fervently hoped that, by God's blessing, the Conference will prove to be a time of spiritual refreshing to all who may assemble.

At a meeting last week, Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe did well to remind audiences of their responsibilities. We would take the liberty of reminding secretaries and speakers that they, too, have responsibilities which are not always discharged. The art of writing concise and telling secretarial reports seems to be a lost one; too often the hearers are treated to long strings of statistics and minute details of organisation, which move nobody and leave the vaguest possible impression on the mind. We wish, too, that the "time-table" plan were oftener adopted at annual meetings; then the earlier speakers would, perhaps, leave a fair share of the time for those that come after, and nobody would feel that they had been defrauded. Are not the programmes as a rule overcrowded?

We are promised the presence, on this side of the Atlantic this summer, of several distinguished American preachers. The visit of Dr. Phillips Brooks, of Boston, we have already announced. Dr. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, at the close of his quarter of a century's ministry in that city, is to have a four months' vacation, and has received from his church fifteen hundred dollars to meet the expenses of a European tour. Dr. E. Eggleston, who is now more of a writer than a preacher, comes to examine certain historical documents in the British Museum.

The occupants of the modern pulpit are having an uncomfortable time. An outspoken journal has not hesitated to call our preachers "dumb dogs," when questions of national morality are mooted. Now one of their own number, Rev. H. Price Hughes, speaking in his editorial capacity, accuses them of "barking at the moon." By which he means that they are engaged Sunday after Sunday in proving and re-proving what none of their hearers doubt or deny, while many burning topics of the time are as good as non-existent, for all the attention bestowed upon them in the average sermon.

Of course there are many strong and notable exceptions, but probably there is sufficient ground for the trenchant criticisms of this preacher-editor. He is an illustrious exception himself in both capacities. As, for instance, when he thus refers, in last week's Methodist Times, to the drink traffic:—

> "Here we are face to face with a gigantic evil which is doing more to ruin the bodies and souls of the people than all the churches are doing to save them. Let the churches destroy intemperance, and they will do more to promote the conversion of England than they would do by annihilating the influence of all the infidels and atheists alive. The trade of Burton-on-Trent alone, to say nothing of other places, is doing more real and irreparable mischief amongst us every week than all the Positivists' temples, and all the halls of science, and all the secularist publications, achieve in twelve months."

We would venture to improve on Mr. Hughes' prescription, and say to our preachers: Smite the drink traffic with one fist and the infidel propaganda with the other.

The publication of a cheap edition of the letters of the Princess Alice, with the addition of an Introduction contributed by the Princess Christian, will secure for the volume a wider circle of readers. The Introduction certainly is an interesting one, but it is, at least, doubtful if the view which the writer of it has expressed with regard to the action of the Princess Alice in accepting the dedication of a book by Strauss, is a satisfactory one. That the motive under which Princess Alice acted was one which, under certain circumstances, would be commendable there cannot be two opinions, but as it is known that the period of struggle and gloomy doubt through which the Princess passed, and from which she emerged into the clear, calm light of Christian faith, was, perhaps, the most unhappy portion of her life, one is tempted to question the wisdom or nobility of the act which the contributor of the introduction considers to have been a courageous one.

Sometimes silence is a better evidence of courage than speech would be. When anyone is troubled by doubts or beliefs which do not bring happiness, but the contrary, along with them, the wisest and noblest course is to abstain from action or utterance likely to extend the unhappy influence to others.

THE BIBLE IN MR. MOODY'S SCHOOLS.

BY LUCY J. RIDER.

MR. MOODY carries out his strong convictions of the importance of Bible study, in the very unusual opportunities for such study that are afforded in the two schools at Northfield, of which he is at once the founder and the inspiration. In common with Oberlin and Mt. Holyoke and Wellesley, "Bible Study" appears in every term's work in their published Courses of Study. This Bible study is arranged in weekly lessons, under the tuition of the regular teachers of the school. If a young lady is so fortunate as to do her preparatory studying at Northfield, and then take the full four years' course there, she will pass through, and be examined upon, a series of lessons covering the whole Bible: she will, in addition, be given one year of lessons on Bible doctrines. For Mr. Moody insists that no one shall be in the school, even for a single term, without receiving as much as can be given in that time of the great fundamental principles of Christianity. Mr. Moody also insists that this solid food of doctrine—but served up in biblical form, instead of the logical formulas—shall be given first to all the new comers; because some of them may not finish the course, and they must not go away without knowing for themselves, at least intellectually, the answer to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" or without being able to give others the answer to the question.

In this course the students discuss with their teachers such subjects as Repentance, Justification, Regeneration, Assurance, Sanctification, and the work of the Holy Spirit. These are taught topically, as indeed are all the Bible lessons. Let me give the main topics, nearly as used this year, in one or two of these lessons. First on justification:—

"(1) What is Justification? Give the root-meaning of the word.

"(2) Who justifies? On what external grounds? What internal conditions?

"(3) How does justification differ from regeneration?

"(4) What is a man not justified by? Have works any relation to justification?

"(5) What is the evidence that a man is justified?

"(6) What are the consequences of man's justification:—

"i. In his relation to God?

"ii. In his relation to men?"

And here is a briefer outline on Assurance:—

"(1) Of what may the Christian be assured?

"(2) Give Bible examples (Job, David, Isaiah, Paul, John).

"(3) Study 1 John on Assurance. How many times does the word 'know' occur in it?

"(4) Is it a mark of humility not to have assurance?

"(5) What are the hindrances to assurance?"

But, beside this foundation course, other Bible lessons are given in the schools. This year Mr. Moody, in the intervals of his evangelistic work, has spent some weeks in Northfield; besides conducting the Sunday evening services at the Seminary, he has given frequent Bible lessons at both schools,—lately on the Gospel by John. Moreover, a lady who for some years has been wholly engaged in Bible normal work and study, is employed by Mr. Moody as a special Bible teacher. Twice a week the students of the ladies' school come together for a course of normal lessons, in which are taken up such subjects as Bible Chronology and History, with diagrams, map-drawing of sacred lands, outlines of Christian evidences, simple studies on typology and prophecy, and special studies on books and characters.

Last of all, and, probably, most important of all, come the training classes, as they are called, under the care, also, of the special teacher. Attendance on them is purely voluntary, and the work required is not light; but they include about one-third of the pupils in both schools. They meet twice a week; and, as far as possible, the students actually prepare the work, which is designed to fit them for active religious life. The following will give an idea of the subjects treated: How to study the Bible; Use of helps; How to prepare the Sunday-school lesson (with original, copious, and sometimes very striking analyses); Bible-readings; Prayer-meeting talks; Blackboard lessons (just now the subject assigned is "A Ladder," the lesson to be for children, and illustrated); Object lessons (under this head the subjects "Salt," "Bread," "Water," "The Hand," "Bottles," "A Plant," will be given); The use of questions; Personal work; How to deal with inquirers; How to conduct children's meetings; The primary class.

This thorough practical training of young people in the study of the Bible itself, and in normal methods of teaching the Bible, cannot fail to produce marked results. We look forward with interest to the future work of the schools and of their graduates.—Sunday-school Times.

WORK AMONG NAVVIES.

BOURNEMOUTH.

DEAR SIR,—In prospect of the Whitsuntide holidays, by desire of the Committee who carried out the work, I send you an account of what was done for the navvies on the new Bournemouth railway during the Easter holidays.

There had been sad drunkenness at Christmas, and friends of all denominations united to organise some counter attraction. A large room was taken, and a bar fitted up with Temperance refreshments. Tickets were given away on Saturday and Sunday, so that no food might be paid for on that day. Amusements, such as draughts, quartetts, bagatelle, and various periodicals and books, &c., were provided, but the games and secular papers were removed on Sunday and replaced with religious periodicals. Several ladies helped to wait at the bar, others sang and played to them, while gentlemen recited, and each evening something special was arranged for. But, whether the programme was grave or cheerful, every night the last half-hour was devoted to reading a portion of Scripture, an address, Mr. Sankey's hymns, and prayer, to which all in the room at the time would stay, paying reverent attention. For some two or three hours on Sunday afternoons and evenings about a hundred and fifty men sang hymns with keen enjoyment.

Special addresses were given on Good Friday and Easter Sunday. I have given details that any friends who live near large bodies of navvies or men engaged on large works, without permanent homes near them, may put forth similar efforts for their benefit with like result.

The following letter from the spokesman of the railway men, or excavators, will show their appreciation of what was done. The use of the room by about 400 or 500 men during the week also testified strongly to the fact, as well as the testimony of the police to the far fewer cases of drunkenness amongst them:—

> "LADIES AND GENTLEMEN, and all who have taken any part in entertaining us through the holidays,—It is with great pleasure I stand here this evening on behalf of my mates, the railway men on the new line. We feel we cannot let these holidays pass without expressing a little of our feeling, as the honoured recipients of your wonderful kindness and benevolence to us. While I speak personally I speak the minds of all my mates. We are quite lost for words to express our gratitude for your untiring efforts to do us good both body and soul. We fully acknowledge the Christian spirit so prominently displayed on your part. And while our heartiest thanks are inadequate to express our wishes, we earnestly pray heaven to bless your efforts and repay you a hundredfold.
> "We look upon these holidays as red-letter days, for though we may not always have been railway men, and possibly we may not always be, yet whatever our station of life in the future be, we shall look back with joy and pleasure to the happy times spent in Bournemouth; and who can tell, the first steps of many a bright and brilliant career may be dated from these Easter holidays of 1885. It seems to my mind impossible that the Christian influence brought to bear upon us through you should be lost. And when our work here is done, and we are scattered over the world far and wide, and you are enjoying the ride from East to West, remember the well wishes of us all are ever yours; and when the solemn hour comes, and friends are gathered round your bed, and we are far away, unable to help to soothe your dying pillow, may He who has passed through the dark valley be your Comforter, and may yours be the 'Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.'
>
> "May we all meet you there is the earnest desire of your unworthy friends the railway men.
>
> "Yours humbly,
> "SAMUEL PIERCE SHEPPARD.
> "9, Davenport cottages, Surrey road, Bourne-valley."

An intercessory Service of Prayer for God's blessing before, and of Praise and Thankfulness afterwards, was held at the Y.W.C.A. Institute, 1, Bedford-place, Bournemouth, and largely attended by the Committee, subscribers, and helpers of the effort. I have enclosed my own letter of invitation, which, by the wish of the Committee, was circulated amongst the men, as I think a little thing of that kind is a special individual invitation to each one that sometimes pleases and attracts them, and I thought it might be useful as a hint to others:—

> "DEAR MATES,—Many of us having been thinking about your Easter holidays; that you will want somewhere to turn in, and be comfortable; something nice to do, and to listen to that won't hurt or bore you, but do you good—we have taken the Auction Mart, Christ Church road, for you from Thursday, April 2, to Easter Tuesday, April 7, where you will find refreshments at coffee tavern prices, music, singing, talking, a good fire, newspapers, periodicals, &c. Friends and pipes welcome. Do come, and spend the Easter holidays happily, and well, like Home!
>
> "Your friend,
> "EDITH H. G. WINGFIELD DIGBY.
> "13, Westover-villas, Bournemouth, March 18."

How wonderfully good Richard Weaver was, on Sunday week, to the navvies. I never heard the Prodigal Son so vividly and powerfully portrayed. I was deeply thankful also to hear of the blessed result to some there. God grant the good seed may have found the God-given honest and true heart, to bear fruit an hundredfold—fruit that shall remain.

I have heard, since our navvy effort, of two or three known to their missioner who, he believes, have come definitely out on the Lord's side.

EDITH H. G. WINGFIELD DIGBY.

BRIXTON.

Some ladies connected with Roupell-park Wesleyan Church provide coffee for navvies during their dinner-hour in order to keep them out of the public-house. The men are employed upon a new tram line, and the refreshment is served in a building attached to the church. While the men are eating their mid-day meal the harmonium is played and solos are sung by young ladies. According to a letter in The Methodist Times, the men were told that they might even smoke there rather than that they should adjourn to the public-house. The men having put the question to the vote, decided not to smoke.

MR. G. SOLTAU IN AMERICA.

MANY of our American contemporaries have highly complimentary notices of the work of our friend Mr. Soltau. The New York Observer says:—"Mr. George Soltau has greatly endeared himself to the people of Brooklyn by his excellent addresses in various churches. For two weeks he has spoken daily in the Westminster church—in the afternoon to children, who have attended by hundreds, and in the evening to Christian workers. His expositions of Scripture are very simple and attractive, his manner unostentatious, and his appeals loving and hearty. Many friends, especially in the Presbyterian, Congregational, and Episcopal churches, have sustained him."

In a lengthened editorial note The New York Independent says:—"Mr. Soltau brings to his work in this country a peculiar freshness in the presentation of truth. He is a man of great spiritual insight, and reminds one of Mr. Moody in his familiarity with the Bible, and his ability to make its narratives living realities, setting forth the condition and needs of modern life. His Bible readings to Christians, his talks to children, his evangelistic appeals, are entirely unlike, but are equally adapted to their purpose. Christians are greatly helped by him, and, under his handling of the word, gain a new interest in their Bibles; children are fascinated by him, crowd his meetings, and easily grasp the fundamental Gospel truths which he sets forth with great plainness; and those out of Christ are quickly brought under conviction by the searching way in which he appeals to their consciences."

BRIGHTON CONVALESCENT HOME for CHILDREN.—Those desirous of placing children needing special care, from Hospitals or otherwise, at the seaside, will be interested in learning that arrangements may be made for their reception at the Home for Children, established at 7, College-place, as a branch of the London and Brighton Invalid Home, Kemp Town. Inquiries may be addressed to Miss E. S. Elliott (Hon. Sec.), 66, Mildmay Park, London, N., or to the Matron, Mrs. Jenkins, 7, College-place, Brighton.

MR. HAMMOND IN GLASGOW.

THE week's mission in Augustine Free Church was concluded on Sabbath week. Mr. Hammond addressed in the afternoon a large congregation of adults with great power. One almost regrets that such gatherings have not formed a larger feature of his mission to our city. It is a matter worthy of consideration whether an effort should not yet be made to secure his services for a series of meetings to grown people. There is, however, this to be said for the plan adopted, that it concentrates energy and effort in a very important direction, and the work might suffer from a division of force.

In the evening the children mustered in great force, and with the workers filled the large area of the church. The gallery, too, was well filled by adults, who seemed to enjoy the service as much as the little folks. Among the ministers present were Rev. J. Inglis (of Dundee), Rev. Thomas Havre (Congregationalist), Rev. J. Fullarton, and Rev. Campbell Gullan. It was interesting to observe that of those children who appeared to derive good, no fewer than twenty families were represented whose parents are members of the church where the services were held. This fact brings out how large and important a factor in the destiny of the young is the home influence. The ministers' Bible-class, which is a large one, solidly bore testimony to their having experienced a saving change. To realise and harvest the gain will depend mainly on the wise and affectionate care with which these weeks of mission work are followed up by pastors and teachers, who themselves must have felt the ordinary level of their missionary real and labours immensely raised. One superintendent remarked on leaving the church: "I feel the burden of responsibility seriously increased."

We wish Mr Hammond still greater success in what yet remains of his work in our city. If we envy him any one thing in particular, it is the large place he has gained in the affection and gratitude of many hundreds of children. For some time to come, for a long time, let us hope, Sabbath-school teaching and work generally among the young will be more urgent, personal, and more deeply inspired by the visit of our brother. J. T. Campbell Gullan, Minister of Augustine Free Church.

In its issue of Saturday The North British Daily Mail says: At the noon meeting yesterday the question of Temperance was prominently referred to. Mr. Oatts expressed the gratitude of the community for the action of the recent Licensing Courts in refusing to grant new licences. Mr. Hammond stated the fact that he had noticed a great change for the better in the drinking habits of the people of Scotland since his first visit, twenty-four years ago. He hoped that a time would soon come when every professor of religion would say, "I will neither touch, taste, nor handle the accursed thing." He related the following touching incident:—

The inhabitants of a thriving town in Pennsylvania assembled, as was their custom, to decide what number (if any) of licences the town should petition for from the County Courts whence they were issued. There was a very full attendance. The magistrate presided, and the physician, deacon, and minister were on the platform. One of the most respectable citizens, after a short speech, moved that the meeting petition for the usual number of licences, and not give way to any excitement. When it was about to be adopted, and the chairman was going to put the motion to the meeting, an object rose in a distant part of the meeting, and all eyes were instantly turned in that direction. It was an old woman, poorly clad, whose careworn countenance was the powerful index of no light sufferings; and yet there was something in the flash of her bright eye that told she had once been what she then was not. She addressed the chairman, and said that with his permission she wished to say a few words to the meeting. She had come because she had heard they were going to decide the "licence question." "You," said she, "all know who I am. You once knew me as the mistress of one of the best estates in the neighbourhood. I once had a husband and five sons, and woman never had a kinder husband—mother never had five better or more affectionate sons. But where are they now? Doctor, I ask where are they now? In yonder burial-ground there are six graves filled by that husband and those five sons; and they are all drunkards' graves! Doctor, how came they to be drunkards? You would come and drink with them, and you told them that temperate drinking would do them good. And you too, sir (addressing the minister), would come and drink with my husband, and my sons thought they might drink with safety, because they saw you drink. Deacon, you sold them rum, and made them drunkards. You have now got my farm and all my property, and you got it all by rum! And, now I have done my errand, I go back to the poorhouse, for that is my home. You, doctor, you, reverend sir, and you, deacon, I shall never meet again until I meet you at the bar of God, where you too will meet my ruined and lost husband, and those five sons, who, through your means and influence, fill the drunkard's grave!"

The old woman sat down. Perfect silence prevailed until broken by the Chairman, who rose to put the question to the meeting—"Shall we petition the Court to issue the licences to the borough for the ensuing year?" and then one unbroken "No!" which made the very walls echo with the sound, told the result of the poor old woman's appeal. When Mr. Hammond finished telling this story many eyes were filled with tears.

The children's meetings in Oatlands are continued night after night with the greatest success. In no district of the city have the meetings been so quiet and orderly, and Mr. Hammond has been heard to say that those in Oatlands have been most like those in America of any he has had since his arrival among us.

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

SIR,—We cordially commend to your attention and sympathy the very excellent and important work carried on by this Mission amongst the 12,000 men and lads employed in the various North Sea trawling fleets. Ample proof has been furnished of the genuine and successful character of the Society's operations—and, if so successful in its infancy, the work cannot fail to prove still more valuable when it receives that measure of public support which it clearly merits.

Funds are much needed, not merely to maintain and extend existing missionary effort, but to acquire for the Society the specially equipped ships by means of which that effort is alone practicable and effective. A sum of £6000 is necessary for the purchase of the four smacks (hitherto privately owned) now cruising in this service; but it is essential that six others should be added.

The Committee in allowing their vessels to trawl at night with the fleets, in order as far as possible to cover their working expenses, have acted on the soundest principles of true philanthropy, as they only seek from the public the means of defraying the cost of actual mission work, and of medicines, surgical appliances, libraries for the smacksmen, &c. We trust liberal contributions towards these objects may be sent to the Secretary, 31, New Bridge-street, Ludgate-circus, E.C.

R. N. Fowler (Lord Mayor), President.
Robt. W. Carden, } Vice-Presidents.
Edward Birkbeck, }
E. J. Mather, Secretary.

BORDESLEY.—The Evangelistic Mission in this district of Birmingham continues to labour for the Master amongst the poor and working classes. The superintendent is Mr. J. Head, 21, St. Andrew's-road, of whom Mr. Alderman White writes: "Knowing the value of the work done by Mr. Head in connection with this mission I can cordially commend him to the kind help and sympathy of the Christian public. He labours among the very poorest class of the population, and pays constant visits to the homes of the sick and suffering. The results of his labours are strikingly apparent in the lives and homes of many." He much desires to purchase a tent for Gospel work, and will gratefully acknowledge any assistance to this end.

MR. AITKEN AT EATON CHAPEL.

ON all three Sundays of this mission the church was crowded to its utmost capacity. The afternoon addresses to men only, were marked by special power, directness, and telling earnestness. Many were led to give themselves to the Lord. Indeed, the large attendance of men at all the services has been one of the marked features of the Mission.

The wonderful depth and spirituality of the morning addresses were referred to in a previous notice. The evening after-meetings deepened in power and intensity as the time passed on; from one house of business alone we gratefully give thanks for twenty-three young hearts yielded to Christ. Night after night we have shared in the deep joy of heaven over repentant souls, and the answers to prayer for the conversion of special individuals have been remarkable and most encouraging.

On Monday evening, April 27, after a most strengthening address on "Kept by the Power of God," the farewell message came from the lips of the missioner. The mission closed with the Te Deum and the Lord's Supper. There were about 500 communicants during the day. This feast was felt to be indeed as the very presence chamber of the King, and hearts, melted by the love of the crucified, risen, and ascended Lord, yielded themselves, soul and body, wholly to his will and service. We ask your readers to join us in praise to God as we abundantly utter the memory of his great goodness, and to pray earnestly that the work begun and deepened in so many hearts by the Holy Ghost may continue to his praise and glory.

The thanksgiving offerings at the end of the mission towards the Parochial Mission Society amounted to over £90. B. A. R.

AFTER THE MISSION.

Hail, sacred tumult, strange immortal strife!
Force matched with force, and host beleaguering host
In deadly siege; Earth's high proud banners tost
Madly from wounded hands round springs of Life!
Hail, Sinai's thunder, tears, and priestly knife,
Woes of the self-slain, wailings of the lost!
Hail shouts of landing on Faith's sunlit coast
With summer wafts of deathless music rife!
High o'er the surging throng Heaven's messenger,
Eager and calm as from some rock-built height,
Sways with the Spirit-sword, celestial bright,
That mighty sea of straining souls that stir
And quiver with each flash, till o'er sin's night
And that vast conscience hushed, bursts glory-light!

April, 1885. Charles A. Fox.

GENERALS AND ARMY CHAPLAINS.—A special correspondent of the Western Morning News, writing from Korti, complains that we have generals who entirely ignore the immortal part of the men under their command. One general, during the Zulu War, told his chaplain that he grudged him not only the biscuit he ate, but the very tent he slept in. No chaplain was sent with Sir H. Stewart's column, because General Buller peremptorily refused. One officer excused this omission on the ground that Protestants did not lay the stress on having a clergyman in sickness or death that Romanists did; another alleged that soldiers did not care for the parson—in fact, felt better without him. The Gordon Highlanders and Black Watch, who would not have brooked a refusal, took their chaplain with them up the Nile without leave.

A BAD BEGINNING.—We regret to observe that Dr. King has begun his work as Bishop of Lincoln by wounding the feelings of the Wesleyan Methodists in his diocese. In the parish of Holbeach, from time immemorial, the minute bell has always been tolled at the burial of any parishioner, irrespective of creed; but the other day the vicar, without the slightest previous notice, ordered the bell to be stopped while a venerable and highly respected parishioner, who happened to be a Methodist, was being buried. Dr. King, when appealed to on the subject, curtly refuses to reprove the vicar, though he has not the courage to avow the sympathy with the intolerant action which he most likely feels. Such petty acts of persecution cannot be too severely condemned. They are particularly inopportune at a time when the Democracy are about to be invested with political power.—Christian Leader.

TO MY CANADIAN FRIENDS.

BY ANNIE MACPHERSON.

Dear Canadian Fellow-workers,—

MANY hundreds of you who have in your homesteads our lads and lasses growing up into useful citizens, are now reading with us the weekly paper called The Christian, sent to you by readers in England who are deeply interested in the welfare of each boy and girl we have these fifteen years taken across the ocean, and with much prayer and parental care placed in your prosperous Ontario.

A farmer's wife writes that "through reading the paper from England their hearts have been enlarged; they lend it to neighbouring farmers, read portions at the weekly prayer-meeting, and then post it off to their son living in the North-West."

Our visits to Canada are brief, and generally in the summer when the heat is great, therefore, many of your settlements or your faces we shall never see on earth; but daily as a band of workers we remember you and your responsibilities to the orphans, fatherless and motherless, whom we have sheltered and endeavoured to care for in the name of the compassionate Jesus.

The patient, kind, and generous manner in which you have borne with growing-up youths is now a subject of deep gratitude to us, and of great interest to many in England.

Your ever-returning need of a "chose boy or girl" has met our need of a start in life for many a brave youngster longing for adventure. Your out-door life, accompanied by the plenty of food always upon your tables, has strengthened the constitution of many a once delicate city child.

As our work in the great city increased we transferred the two Homes at Belleville and Knowlton to others. We sold our farm at Galt, and have purchased a commodious house at Stratford, Ontario, suited for both winter and summer work.

We feel that the lawn, flower-beds, and garden will be a model to those in whom we are interested, as they settle in your midst and become worthy citizens of your great Dominion.

It was twenty years ago that we gave up, as a family, our own home-life and came to live down among the masses of the very poorest of the people as a privilege to work for the Master on behalf of children.

Our Receiving Home is amid the busy throngs, but our Training Home is away in an old suburb in a very quiet corner, where education is carried steadily on, and the same scholastic rules are resumed at the distributing Home at Stratford. Our main rule is an ounce of kindness and an ounce of firmness well compounded, and applied with the discipline of loving educated Christian ladies. The standard is, perfect loving obedience from principle, and not from compulsion.

We mention this to show our Canadian friends the reason why we are anxious for the youth we place in your midst, to pursue their standards and finish their English education. It is to them the little fortune we watch over for them in this life; we covet for them not wealth, but a useful, profitable, contented life here, and an entrance into the everlasting life through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

The outcome of these years of work is calculated to stir up the Church of Christ to more definite care of the young. Organisations are very well, but plodding individual work is what God is pleased to bless much in these days, among both home and foreign heathen.

The first youth who decided for Christ in our Mission has been for ten years steadily working for Him in one of the central provinces of China.

Only seven of the 3905 sent to Canada have become inmates of the Canadian Penitentiary, or an expense to the Dominion.

1877 are on farms as agriculturists.
253 have trades, having been first on farms.
16 in professions, doing fairly well.
467 are girls in good service, and of excellent character.
216 are adopted, but still under our guardianship.
109 married, and settled virtuously in life.
177 returned to England to bring their friends to Canada.
173 were joined by their friends going to Canada.
49 have died, many of whom we have a sure hope.
An ever-changing number are in the Home at Stratford.

These statistics tell of years of hard work borne by a few unitedly engaged for one purpose—the welfare of the young; much travelling; year after year listening to heart-breaking stories; beholding orphans' tears; witnessing widowed hearts parting with their all—their boy; midnight fellowships, waiting upon God for means, strength, and constant guidance.

On the other hand, they tell of grand outcomes, as hundreds of photographs show. The other day a poor widow could scarcely be convinced these two well-dressed young men were her Freddy and Dickey.

Lives saved! Who now grudges the given-up jewel or treasured store or saved pence to have aided in rescuing a life from penury to honest industry? Many a lonely farm-house home, unblessed by the sweet music of a child's voice and lonelier heart, has been filled. Missionaries, found in Canadian Sunday-schools and educated in your institutions, have gone forth to proclaim the Gospel in distant lands, rescued o'er and o'er again. Multitudes of prayers have been called forth and have ascended definitely for children by Christians of every creed all over the world.

Much has been written to show forth the domestic, peaceful, happy lives of the sturdy high-principled Canadians, in connection with these children of hope. Thus we are encouraged to go forward in this most happy work, willing to be assisted to continue it by those who feel sympathy for orphan and destitute children.

We hope to spend the month of August at Stratford, in Canada, and then visit outlying provinces to find the "lonely hearts to cherish" our very young children as adoptions.

May the Dominion be prospered by a good harvest in the good providence of our God, and all our protégés grow up obediently to all those who govern them righteously, if not we must remove them, as we have plenty of applications; and if they are in fault we must restrain them.

Home of Industry, Spitalfields.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Four cities and fifty-six counties in Canada have adopted the "Scott Act," which prohibits the sale of liquor as a beverage.

Mr. William Noble will conduct a Gospel Temperance Mission in Highgate, N., in a marquee seating 1000, from June 6 to 22.

In Grangemouth, N.B., a recent plebiscite showed in favour of local option 1340, against only 53; 46 were neutral and 184 returned the papers blank.

The debate on the second reading of the English Sunday Closing Bill in the House of Commons has been "adjourned"—in other words, probably shunted for the session.

The Soldiers' Total Abstinence Association in India has a membership of 11,000. Every assistance is given by the officers to Mr. Gregson, the active superintendent of the society.

Under a new law, in the State of Maine, drunkards will be imprisoned from five to thirty days for a first offence, and from ten to ninety for a second offence.

At the recent Glasgow licensing court the chief constable stated that he had a number of applications from persons wishing to abridge the hours of business from eleven till eight or nine o'clock in the evening.

Paragraphs are going the rounds of the Press, showing that the Welsh Sunday Closing Act has proved a failure. The almost unanimous opinion of the clergy and Nonconformist ministers, however, is that the Act has been and is a great boon.

Hon. and Rev. F. G. Pelham, Rector of Lambeth, has bought the goodwill of a beershop in Lambeth-walk, and has closed the premises. Mr. Pelham, who is an enthusiastic abstainer, means to exert all his influence to prevent another house being opened in its place.

Mr. R. T. Booth.—An Auckland correspondent writes:—"A most successful Gospel Temperance mission has been conducted here by Mr. R. T. Booth; it has resulted in upwards of 3500 new pledges, and nearly 4000 donning the blue. The mission lasted seventeen nights, and each evening 1500 people gathered together in the Theatre Royal. Mr. Booth was supported by fifteen to twenty of the ministers of the city."

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

Neuchâtel.—Two members of the Salvation Army have recently been imprisoned four days for speaking and praying at the funeral of one of their number.—Journal Religieux.

The Episcopal Church of New York has undertaken an aggressive missionary campaign, and is preparing for a series of missions upon the plan of those recently held in East and West London.

In Germany some of the leaders of religious thought are putting forth vigorous efforts to make Sunday publications serviceable to the cause of Christianity. In Berlin the immense work of the city mission is carried on chiefly through the sale and distribution of printed sermons on Sunday morning. The circulation of these attains to no less than 75,000.

L'Evangéliste contains a protest against Miss Booth's statement in Exeter Hall that "if France is ever to be saved, it will be by means of the Salvation Army." The writer brings forward the work of Messrs. McAll, Armand Delille, Sainton, Mdlle. de Broën, and many others in connection with the "Mission Interieure," all of which abound in rejoicing facts of evangelisation among Catholics.

Spain.—Mr. Armstrong's Occasional Paper for April gives some encouraging details of success of the various agents in Spain in leading Romanists to a knowledge of salvation through Jesus Christ. Evangelising in the villages is found to bring forth most fruit. Pau is considered a good basis for work as the priests do not interfere so much, and the many Spainards found there carry the light with them on returning to their own country.

Pittsfield, Mass.—The greatest revival of religion which has been witnessed since 1827 in Pittsfield, Mass., is now being enjoyed by the churches here. At the completion of two weeks' services, some 300 converts were reported, making with a previous mission in February, 500. Many of these are heads of families; others are young men of great promise. Among the inquirers were many Roman Catholics, and a number of the most intelligent of this class have been converted.

The Recent Baptism of a Young Hindoo, says The Indian Witness, is especially interesting in the fact that the convert went quietly home, and continues to live under the parental roof. We are sure every thoughtful Christian must rejoice in the hope that the time is very near, in a measure has already come, when Christian converts will be tolerated in Hindoo homes, and the old custom of providing shelter for them elsewhere be finally abandoned. We are sure that Christians generally will rejoice to have it so.

Bordighera, Italy.—On Tuesday, April 21, Mrs. Robert Clark, wife of Rev. Robert Clark, who has been for the last thirty-five years labouring in the mission field in the Punjab, gave a deeply interesting account of her experiences in Northern India, at a Drawing-room Meeting at the Villa Aurelia. It was what she called an "Information Meeting." She was able to tell of much encouragement in her work. A collection was made at the close for her son's Medical Mission in India, which requires support.

Turkish Missions in Asyout.—Rev. Dr. Hogg, of Asyout, one of the valued and long-tried agents of the Turkish Missions Aid Society, gives, in the April number of The Star in the East, an interesting account of a six months' mission tour among the stations between Asyout and Assouan. He gives some striking statistics of the changes which the Mission at Asyout, in its twenty years' existence, had been the main factor in accomplishing. Amongst others, slavery had been almost abolished; there are fifty-five points of light scattered over the Nile valley, where the Word of God is read and expounded; the status of women had been raised; while, in the cholera epidemic of 1865, most of the Copts of Asyout got drunk, in that of 1883 most of them met for prayer.

Religious Liberty in Austria.—A correspondent of the Evangelical Christendom writes:—"The children of Protestant parents in this part of Austria (Graz) are not yet permitted to attend divine worship along with their parents. Our religious meetings are tolerated by the police, and well attended by the public; but the authorities abide by the strict order that no children under fourteen years shall be allowed to attend, threatening, in case of contravention, at once to forbid all religious meetings. You may easily imagine what our feelings as parents are. We have felt bound by conscience to leave the Roman Catholic Church, and now are compelled to see our children growing up without the influence, so needful and healthful, of any social worship. It is a bitter cup to the parents, and a threatening danger to the State."

Letters to the Editor.

SHOPS v. STORES.

SIR,—However much the title of "abominations" may attach to the Civil Service and similar Stores, it certainly does not apply to Industrial Co-operative Societies, of whose existence your correspondents appear to be ignorant. May I take the liberty of informing them that over 7000 such Societies exist in England alone, with a Wholesale Society, the property of the distributive societies, which last year did a trade of £4,675,371?

May I recommend your readers who are interested in this great question of social reform to procure a little work published by Messrs. Cassell, entitled, "Working Men Co-operators"?

Yours obediently, CO-OPERATOR.

SIR,—The question has been raised in your columns whether Christian people ought to buy their supplies in the cheapest market, or to pay more than the market value in order to support the local tradesman. Let us suppose, by way of argument, that it is wrong to deal with the Stores. Do you know the origin of the "Stores?" It was this. A few Government clerks, anxious to make their small salaries go as far as possible towards the support of their families, combined to purchase some chests of tea at wholesale price—i.e., in the cheapest market. Was this wrong? Ought they to have said "No, we will reduce our expenditure on the clothing and education of our children, and buy our tea at retail price of the retail tradesman to enable him to make his living out of it. We see the tradesman in question able to have his country villa; he drives to the station in his brougham sometimes; his wife dresses better, and his children have a better education than our own. We know he gives them a pleasant holiday at the seaside every year, which we can seldom, if ever, manage for ourselves. But it is right to support the retail tradesman; and therefore, though we and ours must go threadbare, and can hardly keep our heads above water, even when all are in good health and there are no claims of poor relations on our small purse, we will not try and save a little by buying our tea in the wholesale market, and we will help to maintain the retail tradesman in his villa and brougham and seaside trip."

Will anyone say that they should have said this? If it be asserted that they should, it must be laid down as a hard and fast law of Christian life that no true Christian, even though a wholesale producer himself, should buy in the wholesale, that is, the cheapest market, but that in order to support the retail tradesman in ease and comfort, all must obtain their supplies of every description through him and him alone. Anybody who tries to follow the consequences of such a principle will soon see the utter impossibility of applying it, and it is in fact a reductio ad absurdum.

The Government clerks in question soon found that they could save expenditure on many other articles besides tea by combining to buy wholesale, and then dividing among themselves. They enlarged their operations, and increased their members; this necessitated premises, staff, machinery, and "the Stores" were the result. At what stage would any principle contained in, or deduced from Scripture, have condemned their proceedings? I have given much thought to the matter, and I confess I am unable to discern it.

It would no doubt have been perfectly right for any one of the persons to whom I have referred, and it is a course I have often adopted myself, to have gone to his ordinary tradesman, and have said, "I do not want to take my custom from you; if you will supply me at prices only a little above the wholesale prices, I will pay you cash. I will call for the goods, and I will continue to deal with you;" and such offers have been accepted. But with the exception of such a method of proceeding I know of no precept or principle in the Word of God which precludes me from buying in the cheapest market, in order that I and mine may live and owe no man anything.

But, supposing that a different course of conduct were incumbent on Christians whose necessities do not compel them to buy in the cheapest market, where is the line to be drawn? Are the people with incomes of £200 a year and upwards to refrain from Co-operation, as a means of enabling them to maintain their families decently and healthily? and are those with lesser incomes to be permitted to co-operate? If it is wrong for the former, is it right for the latter? If so, why should the retail tradesman be supported solely by one class of society? The fact is, the moment you get away from fundamental principles of political economy and attempt to interfere with them, or substitute others for them, you are involved in hopeless confusion, and you end by doing harm instead of good. You might as well attempt to interfere with the law of gravitation and substitute another principle for it.

Suppose you try to do this. The law of gravitation imposes a penalty on its infringement. But as that law involves the infliction of pain on your children if they fall, you make arrangements by clothing, and otherwise, which shall relieve them from the dangerous consequences of falling. You succeed for a time, but there comes the moment when they have to face the dangers incidental to the world in which they live. What have your precautions produced? Why, a sense of false security,—your well-meaning efforts to protect them against the inevitable results of disregard of the law of gravitation have necessarily ceased; and the child, thinking it can fall on the hard ground with impunity, falls, and reaps the consequences.

God's laws for the physical welfare of the human race cannot be disregarded or supplanted, and the law of "supply and demand," however it may be stigmatised as "hard" and "worldly" by well-meaning philanthropists, is as much one of those laws as the law of gravitation. We are now seeing what the refusal to obey the Divine law of emigration (Gen. ix. 1), and the determination to congregate in large cities (Gen. xi. 4), are producing; and any attempt to regulate commerce by any other principle than that of buying in the cheapest and selling in the dearest market is equally certain to be disastrous, however specious and apparently philanthropic may be the motive. It is no doubt true that the working out of these laws is attended with hardships to many. But the hardships and suffering that follow in that case are less than those which must certainly be the result of attempts to regulate traffic upon principles of man's devising.

It may be asked, where is the sanction for buying in the cheapest and selling in the dearest market? I reply that the Scriptural principle governing all transactions of the nature of commerce, is that of paying a fair price. And to the question, How is that fair price to be ascertained? I reply: the operation of the laws of supply and demand must settle that price. It must vary according to a thousand circumstances which affect it; but those laws can alone settle it. It is only the law of gravitation which can settle the level of water, and if we attempt to interfere with that law in that case, and to build our houses and ships, and construct our canals and docks, on any other, nothing but ruin can result. We may use that law for the storage and supply of water and the movement of ships, &c., but we must work on its lines and on no other.

Suppose, however, for a moment, that Christian philanthropy require us to interfere with the operation of the law of supply and demand, and that on the (so-called) "Live and let live" principle, we pay the retail tradesman a higher price than we can purchase our supplies for elsewhere, in order to maintain his income at a certain level. I would ask, by the way, where is the level to be fixed? Is he to be debarred when he has reached the level, from purchasing in his turn from any but retail tradesmen? and if he be a grocer, is he in that case to be compelled to buy his sugar and tea of another retail grocer, instead of consuming those he has purchased for his own business at wholesale price?

What then, will be the result? Having succeeded in affording a competence to the retail tradesman who thus lives decently, another man, anxious to support himself and family decently, argues that if one grocer can get a comfortable living in the place or street, there is a chance for another, and sets up a shop accordingly. But his assumption is wrong. The first man has been supported partly by charity; he has managed to keep his head above water by the aid of his kind Christian neighbours, who have given him the portion of their incomes which they could have devoted to other purposes if they had procured their supplies at the "Stores." One of two consequences must follow: either the philanthropist must keep the second man and his family by the same method, continuing to pay the prices which sufficed to maintain the first, and so, ad infinitum, as fast and as long as other grocers, anxious to make a living, follow the example set them; or the two men must compete for custom by selling better goods or at lower prices—and this is the operation of the law of supply and demand in the village or street—till one of them finds, at the cost of ruin, that the demands of the place will only support one tradesman of the kind. But if that one can only be supported by well-meant but ill-directed charity, he ought not to be there at all. He should emigrate, or take up a business which is legitimately self-supporting.

It is surely as clear as daylight that it is not the duty of Christian people to support any trade whatever by charitable donations. If, in the revolution of the social wheel, increase of population, discoveries of gold, mechanical inventions, and other things have combined to alter the conditions of production, it will be as hopeless to attempt to stem the tide of the Atlantic by mud barriers, as to prevent these things from bringing about their natural result.

Men must—and it is perfectly right that they should—combine to produce articles required for consumption by humanity in the cheapest possible way; and it is equally right that they should combine to buy at the cheapest possible price, and whether this be by the establishment of London "Stores," or village "Co-operative Associations" there can be no law, Divine or human, against it. It is by these processes that "fair prices" are fixed, and that when such prices get lower than will enable the producer to live—whether he be a builder of ships, the owner of a factory, a match-box maker, or a shoeblack—he must seek his livelihood, at home or abroad, in some other way.

Do let this question be looked at from the intelligent standpoint of a Christianity which takes into account the laws of nature by which God is pleased to regulate the universe, as well as the precepts of his Word, which inculcate love and kindness as the distinguishing characteristics of the followers of Christ. If we once get away from such a standpoint, we are at the mercy of the wildest vagaries, and are exposed to the contradictions and fallacies which appear in the letters of some of your correspondents.

Look at one or two of these. "Certus" congratulates himself that by employing the retail tradesmen he has had "no carriage to pay." Then he has taken away so much custom and profit from the Railway Company or carriers, who are dependent upon the money they receive for carriage of goods for their means of livelihood. How do they look at his attempt to carry out the principle of "live and let live"? Perhaps the carrier is a struggling man, with a large family, who lives in the village, and just gets a living by his daily journey to London and back. "Certus" may be quite sure of the propriety of his conduct, as his name implies he is, but the carrier may not be so sure.

"Manufacturer" is in an equal fog. On what does he base the contention that because "officers of the Army and Navy derive their pay to a large extent from the taxes paid by the retailers of the country, they ought to return some portion to those who have to find their "salaries" by dealing with the retail tradesmen instead of by establishing and dealing at the Stores? Will "Manufacturer" tell these officers the amount they ought to return to the other classes who pay taxes, which these classes are, and the shape such return should take? If, moreover, the tax-payers are to be repaid by the servants of the Government, the soldiers, sailors, postmen, &c. must bear their share of repayment. I should like to see "Manufacturer's" ideas developed in a carefully prepared treatise.

Once again, "W. R." lays stress on the contention of a shopkeeper that, as the tradesmen had largely contributed to providing the attractions of the place, they naturally expect a return by having a share of the custom of the residents. Will "W. R." or his "shopkeeper" give the name of one trade-man in that town who established himself there with the object of "contributing to the attractions of the place"? I should like to see the individual.

Yours faithfully, SCRUTATOR.

SWEDISH MISSION IN EGYPT.

DEAR SIR,—With reference to a letter from Mr. W. Mackintosh, headed, "The Soudan," in a recent issue, I can inform you that, according to letters from Countess Maggiolini, the only English person with the Italian Expedition to Massowah, the Swedish missionaries were quite safe in that fortress some six weeks ago, and were preparing as usual to start for their summer quarters at Keren, in the province of Bogos (Abyssinia), which place is to serve as a summer station for part of the Italian troops.

According to the Italian papers, all Osman Digma's followers in those parts have been dispersed by the Italians.—Yours faithfully, 4, Lansdown-terrace, Cheltenham. H. READE.

FEMALE EMIGRATION.

DEAR SIR,—Emigration for myself has now become a necessity, and before leaving the old country, which I purpose doing in the course of a few weeks, may I ask the favour of your kindly inserting a few lines in your columns, as some of the unemployed women, so greatly in excess in this overcrowded country, may like to accompany me. Those skilled in household duties can find immediate employment. Canada will be the place of destination. A comfortable "home," under the patronage of the Princess Louise, Marchioness of Lorne, receives emigrants free of charge for the first twenty-four hours; after that time there is a small weekly payment, but engagements are so quickly made that it frequently happens there is nothing to pay.

An encouraging letter has just come to hand from the Board of Management at Montreal, conveying the assurance that able and willing workers, who can adapt themselves to Colonial life, readily obtain occupation. It will afford me pleasure if I can continue to help out to other lands, where woman's work is really wanted, some of the unemployed women who cannot earn their livelihood at home.

Applicants must have good recommendations; it is important that those going out should be likely to do well for themselves and their employers.

Yours faithfully,

SOPHIA STRONGI'TH'ARM.

BARCELONA PROTESTANT COTTAGE HOSPITAL.—Will the friends of this institution who have hitherto sent their offerings for the same through me, kindly do so now, through Mrs. McAulay, Buckingham House, Finsbury-park, N., as I find myself obliged to leave England, and withdraw, for a time at least, from this department of service?

ANNA VON MIELECKA.

Shugborough, Stafford.

THE STRANGERS' REST.—On Friday, May 1, the monthly meeting of workers took place. Interesting details of the work were given for the benefit of visitors. Mr. Isaacs told of a tea provided the night before for 200 poor children of the Highway, and asked prayer for blessing on another tea to be given this week to 150 homeless lodging-house men. Help was craved both in funds and in bags for the sailors' books, 2000 of which are used annually. The address was by Mr. Robert Brown, on "The God of peace" (Heb. xiii. 20). He concluded with a few stirring words to any unsaved one present.

THE CHURCH PASTORAL AID SOCIETY.—A sympathising publisher, Mr. D. Quarterman, 128, Jamaica-road, Bermondsey, S.E., has offered to give to this Society all the profits that may accrue from the publication of a weekly penny sermon on practical subjects, by various Episcopal preachers. No. 1 of "Our Pulpit" contains a sermon by Dean Fremantle, of Ripon, on "The Conversion of Paul," and other eminent preachers have promised to contribute discourses. Doubtless many members of the Church of England will be glad to help on the work of the Society by becoming regular subscribers to "Our Pulpit."

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Social Purity.—On Friday evening Mr. Charles James, of the Gospel Purity Association, gave an address to about six hundred men, at Miss Weston's Sailors' Rest, Portsmouth.

Prof. Henry Drummond, of Glasgow, recently conducted evangelistic services in Sefton-park Presbyterian Church, Liverpool, on three evenings. The congregations were exceedingly large, and the impression made by the services profound.

Mr. W. Forbes has been conducting Gospel services and Gospel Temperance meetings (in connection with the Gracechurch-street Y.M.C.A.) at Whitechapel and Bermondsey. At both places numbers signed the pledge.

Mr. W. Sampson, the Cornish evangelist, has recently conducted very successful revival services at Queen-street Chapel, South Shields. Many professed to find Christ. He has also conducted services at Burley-lawn Chapel, Leeds, where the congregations were large, and the divine blessing great.

Wood-green.—Cornelius ("Gipsy") and Mrs. Smith have just held an eight days' mission here with very good results. Persons who have come from other localities to reside in this increasing suburb, and who had backslidden, have been restored; others have been led to Christ who had never known the joys of his salvation.

Railway Men at Norwich.—A mission for railway men employed at the station and works of the Great Eastern Railway Company at Norwich has been established. A new mission-hall has now been opened, capable of seating 400 persons. In this it is proposed to hold on Sunday and week-day evenings special Gospel services for the railway employés. On the evening of the opening day upwards of 1300 railway men and their wives met together at a social gathering in St. Andrew's Hall.

Cupar Fife, N.B.—A deputation of medical and other students from Edinburgh University has held a series of evangelistic meetings in Bonnygate U.P. Church here. A remarkable feature in the meetings was the earnest simplicity with which the students spoke, telling the story of their own conversion. During the week nine students addressed the meetings. On Friday evening three young men testified to their having found Christ at the meetings, and we understand several others have decided for the Lord Jesus. W. L. T.

The Edinburgh University Students' Holiday Mission continues to prosper. Some delegates have gone so far north as to be within sight of John o' Groats. They have held meetings in Wick with signal success. Others have come as far south as Brighton. On Sunday week Professor Drummond and seven students addressed a crowded gathering in Greenock. Their earnest addresses made a profound impression on the vast audience, which was composed entirely of men. The speed of the movement augurs well for the influence it has begun to wield.

Hammersmith.—A successful Gospel mission has been carried on during the past three months in the Temple of Varieties, conducted by Miss Brryman. Closing meetings were held on Sunday, April 26. In the afternoon she addressed the young converts from the words, "Ye are not your own" (1 Cor. vi. 19), and made an earnest appeal to engage in some form of Christian work. In the evening she addressed a crowded audience from the words, "Is it well with thee?" (2 Kings iv. 26). From the number of inquirers at the close it was evident that the word spoken had reached the heart and was made a blessing to many. Fervent prayer was offered up that Miss Brryman and her friend and companion in the work, Miss Cresswe might be abundantly blessed in the future.

Wimborne, Dorset.—A ten days' mission has just been held at St. John's Church, Wimborne, Rev. W. H. Redknap, Ryde, being the mission preacher. The congregations, which were good from the beginning, went on increasing steadily to the end. As the preacher on each occasion in the clearest language set before the people the way of salvation, the attention of all was rapt and intensely earnest. Many were the expressions of interest and thankfulness for the privilege enjoyed. The requests for prayer and praise sent up daily were clear evidence that the Holy Spirit was working with the word, and that the mission was proving a real and a great blessing. On Tuesday, the closing day, the Lord's Supper was observed after the mid-day and evening addresses. Notwithstanding the very unfavourable state of the weather, the evening attendance was large and most encouraging. It has been a time which will be remembered with thankfulness and praise by many.

Selkirk, N.B.—The Baptist Church here has been putting forth a special effort to win souls to Christ. Having secured the services of Mr. J. W. Moodie, the Soldier Evangelist, they commenced a series of meetings on Sunday, April 12, which were brought to a close on Friday, April 24. The meetings were not so largely attended as we could have wished. However, many Christians from other churches came to help on the work, and in so doing have been greatly refreshed in their own souls. As the meetings drew to a close, one here and another there were led to put their trust in Christ, and we have good cause to rejoice. Mr. Moodie's next field of labour is Ayr. R. L.

Blackdown Hills Mission.—Dear Sir,—The time is close upon us when we hope to commence summer tent services, and open-air work among our village populations. The opportunities for bringing the Gospel before them are great, and past experiences prove this means to be very fruitful in gathering in the lost ones. We shall be thankful for a good supply of small books, tracts (narrative), for the unconverted, illustrated papers, &c., as well as help for expenses connected with the work. We are still cheered by seeing blessing all around us, and in other places visited.—Yours faithfully in the Lord, George Brealey.

Clayhidon, Wellington, Somerset.

Richard Weaver has been having a month's rest with an old friend in the South of England, and has held a number of meetings at Bournemouth and Swanage. His congregations, as usual, were largely composed of men, from whom, in each place, some were translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son. In a public-house in the New Forest, where we stopped, we met with some navvies, to whom Richard spoke, and one of them remembered his sermon of sixteen years ago at the Victoria Theatre. The substance of it was repeated by the preacher to these railway men, who, as well as the landlady, thanked him with tears in their eyes. He has now gone for a fortnight to help Miss Robinson, at the Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth, and will then probably pay a visit to Belfast. M.

Mr. J. M. Scroggie's visit to Blackheath was brought to a close on Sunday week. The testimony regarding the blessing vouchsafed is of the most assured character. Bible-readings were held during the afternoons and this feature was very much enjoyed. There was no lack of helpers for the after-meetings. Mr. Scroggie's address upon "The Blood" rivetted deep attention as he traced it from the gates of Eden, through the patriarchal and tribal economies, to the great sacrifice at Calvary. Each incident referred to was used to enforce its present day power with a strength which appears to be still increasing with Mr. Scroggie as he continues to labour in the white harvest fields. Although Mr. Scroggie has left for the North, the meetings are continued under the guidance of Dr. McKilliam.

LEAP, Co. CORK.—At this time of the year our harbour is visited by large numbers of Manx fishing boats, that come for the mackerel fishing. The larger number of the fishermen on board these boats are Methodists, good Christian men, who are always glad of religious literature for Sunday reading, that being their only idle day. I should be very thankful if any of your readers would send me for these men religious papers, &c., that they have done with. I think sailors for the most part like illustrated publications best.

In his report presented to the annual meeting of the Baptist Missionary Society, Mr. A Baynes stated that they had had more conversions, larger reinforcements, and larger contributions than ever. Twenty-two missionaries had been accepted by the committee during the year—a larger number than in any previous year of the society's existence.

In connection with Holloway Baptist Chapel, of which Rev. J. R. A party of fifty-five children from Dr. Stephenson's Homes in East London and Gravesend have left for Canada. At Stafford the children were joined by ten from the Cottage Homes at Birmingham. At Liverpool a further contingent of thirty awaited them from Dr. Stephenson's other Homes at Edgeworth and Ramsay.

After attending the Conference of the Evangelical Alliance in Copenhagen, Colonel Brooke, of Blackheath, made a mission tour in Finland, which was very largely blessed, but his friends fear he strained his health, for since his return his strength has given way, and it is very unlikely he will ever resume the active Christian service in which he has been so long a leader.

Commenting on the fact that Bishop Temple is to hold his first "Confirmation" at Mr. Mackonochie's Ritualistic church, The Christian Leader says:—"An overwhelming majority of the English people are undoubtedly Protestant in every fibre of their being; and the day is hastening when the presence of the Confessional and kindred practices in thousands of parishes will excite such a storm as is apparently not anticipated by the men at present at the helm."

At the anniversary of the Anti-Vivisection Society last week Mr. A. Wall, L.R.C.P., expressed himself as sure that ninety-five per cent. of the medical profession had never seen a vivisection experiment in their lives. If they had, he was convinced that they would condemn the whole practice. Mr. Ruskin has formally resigned his professorship at Oxford in consequence of the recent vote authorising the practice of vivisection at the university.

The hitherto defiant system of Mormon polygamy, says The New York Independent, seems to be getting into a bad way under the pressure of legal suasion. President Taylor calls it "the reign of terror." The Edmunds law, in its recent execution, seems to be doing good work in Utah; our earnest hope is that the United States authorities will keep up its execution with such promptitude and vigour that all Mormon polygamists will come to the conclusion to submit to this "reign of terror."

The Episcopal Church of Wales has lost one of its most eloquent and trenchant preachers through the death of Rev. John Griffith, rector of Merthyr. Outspoken to what devotees of expediency would call a fault, he never hesitated to attack any person or institution which seemed to call for censure. It will long be remembered how in the labour troubles of 1875 he took a firm stand on behalf of the workmen, whom he considered unfairly treated. For many years he had lost no opportunity of dealing vigorous blows at Ritualism.

LIVERPOOL LITTLE EMIGRANTS.—A telegram from Moville announces the safe arrival there, en route for Canada, of Mrs. Birt and a party of eighty girls. Mrs. Birt also writes: "The boys who went last month had a beautiful voyage, and most of them are already settled in their new homes."

THE SALVATION ARMY.—Next door to the Edgware-road Railway Station, General Booth has erected a handsomely-appointed new hall, in which to carry on the war in this crowded district of the West-end. The hall is capable of seating 3200 persons. In the basement there is a smaller hall, which will give accommodation to about 1000 persons, while there are also in the building commodious offices and dwelling apartments for the convenience of the persons appointed to carry out the work of the army. At the opening ceremony on Saturday afternoon, it was announced that there was still a deficit of £3000 to make up, and to this end strong appeals were made in the course of the proceedings for pecuniary assistance.

DORKING.—A large congregation assembled at the Lecture Hall, Dorking, on Wednesday, April 29, to celebrate the anniversary of the Christian Workers' Union, and bid farewell to one of their most earnest Christian workers, Mr. A. Howe Brace, for nine years town missionary, now leaving for the post of Canadian agent in connection with Mr. Fegan's work amongst the destitute boys in London. After the report, the chairman, Mr. E. M. Denny, presented Mr. Brace with a purse of gold and an address in the name of the people, showing their appreciation of his unwearied and earnest labours. Mr. Brace made a suitable address in reply. Mr. Fegan gave some hints to Christian workers. Others followed expressing regret at Mr. Brace's leaving, while wishing him God-speed in his new sphere.

EVANGELISATION SOCIETY OF VICTORIA.—The half-yearly meeting of the Evangelisation Society of Victoria was lately held in the hall of the Y.M.C.A.; there was a good attendance of subscribers and friends. Mr. C. Carter (the secretary) read a statement of work done by agents of the association in the colony during the six months ending with last month. There had been twenty-six missions held and 420 meetings. The total of attendances numbered about 607,770. As showing the unsectarian nature of the work, he mentioned that missions had been held as follows, viz., in five Wesleyan churches, three Presbyterian, two Bible Christian, two Churches of England, three Congregational, three Union churches, three State-schools, three town halls, five public halls, one mission hall, and one Gospel tent.

Notices of Books, &c.

A DIVIDED HOUSE. By ANNE S. SWAN. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier. 2s. 6d. This vigorously written tale, by a practised hand, carries with it a solemn lesson in keeping with the apostolic injunction against being "unequally yoked." Young persons of both sexes may read it with profit as well as pleasure.

FROM THE PLOUGH-TAIL TO THE COLLEGE STEPS. Hamilton, Adams & Co. The "Suffolk Farmer's Boy," whose autobiography is given in these pages, deserves credit for his persevering struggles to rise in the social scale, though we can scarcely discover any sufficient reason for inflicting the record on a book-burdened public.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. have commenced the publication, in shilling monthly parts, of Professor Eber's well-known descriptive and profusely-illustrated work on EGYPT. At the present juncture in the history of that famous country, this serial issue of a standard volume will be sure to meet with wide acceptance.

VERUS: a Roman story. By B. G. KINNEAR. Elliot Stock. A tale in blank verse, in which the hero is a noble Roman, who, after vainly seeking happiness in art, learning, and rustic life, receives the Gospel, and becomes, first an honoured preacher, finally a Christian martyr. The poem has not a few fine passages, and depicts truthfully the trials, temptations, and victories of the early Christians.

THE CHILD'S PICTORIAL (2d., S.P.C.K.), a monthly coloured magazine, is a new departure in serial literature. The coloured pictures, on the whole, are really excellent, but if the conductors are to carry out their wish to edify as well as interest their youthful clients, they will have to put more backbone into the literary framework of the magazine.

In the current number of the BRITISH AND FOREIGN EVANGELICAL REVIEW (3s. 6d., Nisbet) Dr. Sinclair Paterson gives a varied bill of fare, containing dishes theological, philosophical, polemical, historical, archæological, and expository. After a cursory inspection we are most interested in Dr. Macmillan's paper on "Egyptian Obelisks," and an American article on "The Scotch Covenanters."

GENERAL GORDON AT GRAVESEND, by W. E. LILLEY (1s., Hamilton), is a most welcome addition to the memorial literature of the departed hero of Khartoum. From intimate personal knowledge of Gordon, the author furnishes many details of the busy and useful life he led during the years of his residence at Gravesend. No reader of this record—all too brief—can fail to cherish a deep veneration for the great man for whom a whole world mourns.

Among the recent issues of the "New Biographical Series" of penny tracts published by the Religious Tract Society are Paul Rabaut, the desert pastor, by Richard Heath; Augustine, by Dr. Marcus Dods; Latimer, by Rev. C. Warren, and William Cowper, by Dr. Macaulay. A fine portrait is given with each, and all are remarkably suited for distribution among the humbler classes, who cannot possess themselves of expensive biographies.

BRIEF ESSAYS AND SKETCHES. By MATILDA STURGE. 3s. Harris & Co. A volume of very readable reviews, containing the essence of several valuable biographies which have appeared during the past few years, interspersed with thoughtful papers on questions of current interest, now gathered from the pages of two periodicals issued by the Society of Friends. In the paper relating to the question of "birthright membership," in that society, the writer might with advantage have taken up a more decided position.

THE ABIDING CHRIST. By Rev. W. M. STATHAM. Elliot Stock. A book of uncommon merit. Its object is to furnish preachers with seed for sermons, and thoughtful Christians with seeds of holy meditation. The sentences are crisp, the allusions concise, and the aphorisms abundant. But there is no confusion of thought, no writing for effect. Solid truths are plainly stated: imagination is never allowed to degenerate into fancy, or reflection into idle speculation. It is a book the Spirit cannot fail to bless.

PRIESTLY PRETENSIONS AND GOD'S WORD. By R. T. MCMULLEN. 9d. Elliot Stock. In a private note accompanying this pamphlet the author writes: "All our observations of to-day equally with those of the historian, show conclusively that wherever sacerdotalism holds sway it brings nothing but poverty, degradation, and ruin in its train." This thesis the author seeks to expand in his pamphlet, both by an appeal to Scripture and to history. The subject is one that demands attention in these days, when many professed teachers of Christianity are doing their best to enslave the consciences of the people.

The current issue of The Sunday Magazine contains an interesting article on the work of the "Missions to Deep Sea Fishermen," with several excellent illustrations.

VOICE-USE AND STIMULANTS. By LENNOX BROWNE, F.R.C.S. 3s. 6d. Sampson Low & Co. Every conscientious drinker of alcoholic beverages, and every professional user of the voice, should read the facts that are set forth in this interesting volume. The effects of tobacco on the voice are touched upon, and a list of 370 singing correspondents appended gives a strong balance in favour of Temperance where the voice is concerned. The work displays immense research, and more than ordinary literary ability.

The April number of THE CHRISTIAN TREASURY (6d. E. W. Allen) is a most excellent one. The first paper is by our esteemed contributor Rev. William Guest, who furnishes an able and discriminating sketch of "Two Distinguished Writers"—Carlyle and George Eliot. There is a sprightly and attractive story by Mr. Wells Thatcher, a touching tale of the Soudan by Mrs. Evered Poole, a memoir of General Gordon, and, with many other good things, articles or poems by Theodore Monod, Horatius Bonar, Christmas Evans, Dr. Guthrie, Charlotte Murray, William Luff, &c. A trully splendid sixpennyworth of choice family reading.

LIGHT AND SHADE: Pictures of London Life. 1s. Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street. This sequel to the now historic "Bitter Cry of Outcast London" consists mainly of articles recently contributed to the Press, descriptive of the relief and rescue work carried on among London poor with such zeal and painstaking by the London Congregational Union. Those who wish to acquaint themselves with one of the most practical of modern philanthropical movements cannot do better than carefully con these graphically-written chapters. While such efforts continue to be made as are here recorded, Christianity need not fear all the infidel and agnostic arguments that can be formulated against it.

The sixth volume of PRESENT DAY TRACTS (2s. 6d., Religious Tract Society) is not a whit behind its predecessors in general interest and value. Having noticed the tracts it contains as they appeared, we need only say that the contributors are Dr. W. G. Blaikie, Rev. A. H. Sayce, Dr. Murray Mitchell, Professor Radford Thomson, Rev. William Arthur, and Sir William Muir. The Tract by Mr. Arthur on "The Divinity of our Lord in relation to his work of Atonement" is the first instalment of a series intended specially for the confirmation of the faith of professed believers. With this volume the first series of Tracts closes. The Religious Tract Society deserves the heartiest commendation of all lovers of Bible doctrine for the publication of these powerful vindications of the truth.

THE ALTERNATIVES OF FAITH AND UNBELIEF. By DR. CHARLES STANFORD. 1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. If it be an essential characteristic of a Christian apologist that he should not only have a firm grip of the truth himself, but a tender and sympathetic consideration for those whom he wishes to convince, then Dr. Stanford is the very beau ideal of a defender of the faith. Many Christian advocates seem to us to fail in this particular. In eight short chapters the good and gentle doctor states the opposing positions with such fairness and freshness and force that the honest and unbiassed "seeker after truth" must, we think, be shut up to the true alternative of simple faith. We can safely say that we do not know a better treatise on Christian evidences in brief form, or one that may more confidently be placed in the hands of the thinking youth of the time.

THE ENGLISHWOMAN'S YEAR BOOK FOR 1885 (1s Hatchards.) contains a large body of information on all sorts of subjects relating to female industry and philanthropic effort on behalf of women and children.

THE A B C CHURCH AND CHAPEL DIRECTORY AND MAY MEETING HAND BOOK (2d. R. Banks, Racquet-court) is as full as ever of statistical information that will be found of great service at this season of the ecclesiastical year.

THE ADVERTISERS' GUARDIAN. By L. COLLINS. (2s. 6d. 4, Wine Office-court, E.C.) About half this book is made up of advertisements; in the other half there is much chatty and interesting writing about the art and practice of advertising, with a list of newspapers, &c.

REV. T. S. DICKSON, of Dundee, has published (Winter, Duncan & Co., 10, Castle-street, Dundee) a penny pamphlet giving some reasons for the abolition of church bazaars. Those whose minds are exercised on the subject may get help and guidance from its perusal.

ALL who purpose paying a visit to the Exhibition just opened at South Kensington ought certainly to procure the wonderful INTERNATIONAL INVENTIONS EXHIBITION AND ROUTE BOOK, which contains the fullest and most particular details as to railway and other routes, cab fares, &c., within a radius of twenty-five miles from the metropolis. It can be obtained at all railway bookstalls, and the price is the nominal one of a penny.

Notes on Daily Readings.

These notes on the chapters of Scripture arranged for the "Bible and Prayer Union" are not intended in any way to interfere with the "Monthly Notes." Those who desire to become members of the Union should communicate with Rev. T. Richardson, St. Benet's Vicarage, Mile End-road, London, E.

MAY 7.—ACTS X.

v. 19.—"While Peter thought on the vision . . ." —The Apostle's difficulty was a perplexing one; the command given involved the reversal of a Divine law (Lev. xi. 44), the transitoriness of which, as a ceremonial observance, he had not yet learned. Three elements entered into the means by which his difficulty was solved: thought—the exercise of mental faculties; spiritual intuition or direction—"the Spirit said;" providential interposition—the three men at that very juncture stood at the gate inquiring for him. In our perplexities the same sources of direction are available, and each one to be diligently sought. They should meet in harmonious combination. To suspend thought is rashness; to ignore the guidance of the Divine Spirit is ungodliness; not to observe the leadings of Providence is unbelief, and indifference to the fact of the Divine government of human affairs.

v. 45.—"On the Gentiles also was poured . . . ." —On the reception of Christ into their hearts by faith, they and those of Jewish extraction were "made one;" the middle wall of partition was broken down, and the "one body" stood confessed. Peter and the rest at last met "where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, ... but Christ is all and in all."

MAY 8.—ACTS XI.

Striking illustrations are found in this chapter of the kindred graces of meekness and acquiescence in the will of God. In verses 2-4, we find Peter challenged by the Jewish believers at Jerusalem concerning his reception of Gentile converts. The fact is notable, as entirely disproving all ideas of Papal supremacy pertaining to Peter; but the spirit in which, as an apostle, he meets the contention, devoid alike of offence at being called in question, and of desire to dominate, as also his evident desire to win them over to the new light which had shone upon his own mind, are specially noteworthy.

v. 8.—"Forasmuch as God gave them the like gift." —One of the best means of destroying prejudice and false opinions is a powerful revival of religion. More erroneous doctrines and unholy feelings are overcome in such scenes than in all the angry controversies, and bigoted and fierce contentions, that have ever taken place. If men wish to root error out of the Church, they should strive by all means to promote everywhere revivals of pure and undefiled religion. The Holy Spirit more easily and effectually silences false doctrine and destroys heresy than all the denunciations of fierce theologians, and all the anathemas which professed orthodoxy and love for the purity of the Church ever uttered from the icebergs on which such champions usually seek their repose and their home. —Barnes.

v. 21.—"The hand of the Lord was with them."—Notice in this whole passage how the personal Christ is made prominent: The Lord, ver. 20; they preached the Lord Jesus, ver. 21; the hand of the Lord was with them, ver. 23; Barnabas exhorted them to cleave to the Lord, ver. 23; much people was added to the Lord, ver. 24.—Professor Lindsay.

v. 26.—"Called Christians first in Antioch."—Not, as might have been expected, in Jerusalem, but in this Syrian and Gentile city, "of high mental culture, given to jests and gibes, and much influenced by Roman manners and modes of thought." A year of the exhortation of Barnabas (a good man, full of the Holy Ghost and faith, a son of consolation) and of the teaching of Saul of Tarsus, so wondrously converted, and taught by direct revelation (Gal. i. 12), produced a Church so like Christ, the Anointed One, the King, that they were called Christians. The Holy Ghost does not say by whom, therefore we may not inquire; the fact that they were so called is the important thing.

MAY 9.—ACTS XII.

v. 3.—"Then were the days of unleavened bread." —Days when the Church kept feast with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth (1 Cor. v. 7, 8). Compare John's "And it was winter," "And it was night" (x. 22; xiii. 30), with the circumstances in each case. Shakspeare's,

> "Now is the winter of our discontent > Made glorious summer," may have been derived from John x. 22.

v. 8.—"And the angel said unto him. . . ."—See here how by degrees (and not all at once) God oftentimes sendeth forth his prisoners (his afflicted ones) out of the pit, wherein is no water (Zech. ix. 11). He is a "God of judgment," and waits a fit time to deal forth his favours (Isa. xxx. 18); He crumbles his mercies, as the cloud dissolves dropmeal upon the earth; we have his blessings by retail, to maintain commerce and communion between Him and us. Have patience, therefore, and wait for full deliverance. We know not what we lose by making haste, and not holding up our hands, as Moses did, to the going down of the sun. If God have begun to enlarge us, He will in due time do it to the full. If we should not be in straits sometimes, God should have "no tribute from us;" as those malignants suggested against those returned captives (Ezra iv. 13).—Trapp.

v. 24.—"But the word of God grew and multiplied."—Professor Lindsay observes: "There is a sermon in the word but. It turns down the page of history on Herod Agrippa and his persecution as things of no lasting moment, and points to the eternity of growth in the seed which is the word." It reminds us of the heroic words of Paul: "I suffer trouble, as an evil-doer, even unto bonds; but the word of God is not bound" (2 Tim. ii. 9).

MAY 10.—ACTS XIII.

v. 11.—"He went about seeking someone to lead him."—As Barnes says: "How soon can God bring down the pride of man, and make him helpless as an infant. How easily can He touch our senses, and wither all our enjoyments, and how easily can He annihilate all the sinner's pleasures, break up all his plans, and humble him in the dust."

v. 36.—"David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God."—The whole life of a Christian we see is a service of God. There is nothing that we do but it may be a "service" of God. No: not our particular recreations, if we use them as we should: as whettings to be fitter for our callings and enjoy them as liberties, with thankfulness to God, that allows us these liberties to refresh ourselves. There is no passage of a man's life but it may have the respect of a service of God. Oh, if we could think of this wheresover we are, we would take no liberty to offend God in anything. We would not thrust religion into a corner, into a narrow room, and limit it to some days, and times and actions, and places, and then take liberty to defraud and dissemble, to amuse ourselves this way and that way. Is this to serve God? To "serve" God is to carry ourselves as the children of God wheresoever we are: so that our whole life is a service of God.—Sibbes.

MAY 11.—ACTS XIV.

v. 15.—"We also are men of like passions with you."—Note the genuine humility and self-renunciation of the Apostles. They could truly say, "nor of man sought we glory." It is a cheering assurance for the Lord's "little ones," who feel their own nothingness, that the mightiest suppliant known in the Word of God, Elijah, was "subject to like passions" with themselves (Jas. v. 17); and so also the noblest workers here make the same confession. All power is of God.

v. 22.—"Confirming the souls of the disciples."—The word Disciple signifies literally a scholar. The Church of Christ was a school, in which Christ Himself was Chief Master, and his Apostles subordinate teachers. All the converts were disciples or scholars, who came to this school to be instructed in the knowledge of themselves and of God; of their duty to Him, to the Church, to society, and to themselves. After having been initiated in the principles of the heavenly doctrine, they needed line upon line, and precept upon precept, in order that they might be confirmed and established in the truth. Though it was a great and important thing to have their heads, their understanding, properly informed, yet if the heart was not disciplined, information in the head would be of little avail; therefore they confirmed the souls of the disciples.—Adam Clarke.

v. 27.—"They rehearsed all that God had done with them."—Such a missionary meeting, however it lacked the éclat of our modern "May Meetings," must have been full of truest inspiration and incitement to thankfulness and joyful consecration.

> "The Lord hath done great things for thee!
> All through the fleeted days
> Jehovah hath dealt wondrously;
> Lift up thy heart and praise.
> For greater things thine eyes shall see,
> Child of his loving choice!
> The Lord will do great things for thee;
> Fear not, be glad, rejoice!"

MAY 12.—ACTS XV.

v. 9.—"Purifying their hearts by faith."—Faith (as a neat house-wife) sweeps clean, and suffers never a slut's corner in the soul. It is ever purging upon corruption, and lets out the life-blood of it; for it shows a man a better project than to dally with carnal pleasures, or to be basely affixed to earthly profits. Every true believer beareth a brush at his back, as we say of a trim man. His faith consecrateth his heart, and maketh it, of the devil's thoroughfare, God's enclosure.—Trapp.

v. 14.—"To take out of them a people for his name."—Here the great purpose of the Gospel dispensation is shown to be, not the conversion of the world, but the gathering out, from all nations, the Church, who shall be the bride of Christ, the partner of his throne when He returns to reign, and to fill the world with righteousness and peace. This harmonises the prophecies of the Old Testament with the Gospel of the New: ver. 15.

v. 29.—"Fare ye well."—An old English form of expressing good wishes and goodwill. It is compounded of two words, meaning to go, to go well, or prosperously. Like to that other form of sound words, God be with you, corrupted now into "Goodbye." And of the same meaning with adieu! à Dieu, to God: that is, I commend you to God. All these terms savour not only of goodwill, but of piety. Our pious ancestors believed that nothing was safe, or prosperous, over which the shield of God was not extended, and so they gave each other to God. What a pity that such benevolent and pious wishes should degenerate into cool formalities, or unmeaning compliments.—Ad. Clarke.

MAY 13.—ACTS XVI.

This chapter is full of incidents of peculiar interest and importance. Paul's acquaintance with Timothy, and adoption of him as his companion and helper, occupies the first three verses, and initiates a memorable passage of Apostolic history.

vv. 9-12.—The introduction of the Gospel to Europe, by the express injunction of the Holy Spirit and by the hand of Paul, calls for special recognition. The propagation of Christianity in Europe began at a prayer-meeting; there the first convert was made. It is where "prayer is wont to be made" that Christian workers are most likely to be made useful, and the Lord's work in opening hearts most likely to be seen.

v. 29.—"He came trembling, and fell down before Paul."—When he fell down before the servants of Christ, it was a virtual confession of sinfulness and guilt. The true meaning of the act is conveyed by the exclamation of the publican, "God be merciful to me a sinner!" How precious is a broken heart! Although a broken heart is a heart of sorrow, it is a heart that gives joy to holy angels. It is the most welcome sacrifice that a sinner can bring to God. It is the ground of one of our Lord's beatitudes: "Blessed are they that mourn: for they shall be comforted."—A. Gray.

v. 31.—"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. . . ." —By believing the promise of God, and by trusting in the person of Christ, we are united to the Lord Jesus; so as to have a real interest in his blood and righteousness. Being united to Christ, our sins are done away, by virtue of his infinitely precious atonement; and eternal life becomes ours, on account of his everlasting righteousness. Whoever thus believes, believes merely as a sinner not upon the supposition of any goodness in himself, but upon the sole warrant of God's promise in the Gospel. Such an one shall not be ashamed of his belief; shall never be disappointed of his hope; "according to his faith it shall be unto him."—Hervey.

SEDGLEY, DUDLEY.—For twenty-five years Mr. F. A. Homer, J.P., has been carrying on successful mission work in this neighbourhood. In addition to a large hall and a variety of ordinary aggressive evangelistic methods, a boys' brass band for outdoor work, free lending library, colporteurs, and police court missionary, all render efficient service on the side of Gospel truth. It is very gratifying to find the local clergy and this worthy magistrate working hand-in-hand for the salvation of souls, while the position of the latter on the bench enables him to direct his labours into peculiarly needy and interesting channels.

UNITED KINGDOM BENEFICENT ASSOCIATION FOR POOR GENTLEFOLK.—Miss Bullar, Bassetwood, Southampton, writes, with reference to this Association:—I will gladly send information to any unacquainted with this good work. I especially ask for help as "friends" to individual candidates and annuitants. Cheering letters, newspapers, small articles of food and clothes, are received with the most touching gratitude. Two hundred candidates and annuitants are still waiting for "friends," and it would be a very great help if some readers would, besides personally undertaking to be a "friend," speak of the need for them to benevolent gentlemen as well as ladies.

Dear Friends,—

We are in such very urgent need of help at the "Homes" just now, that I shall be deeply grateful for any gifts, however small, which can be received before our Annual Meeting, which takes place (D.V.) on May 20.

Your grateful fellow-worker
Among Homeless Children,

REDUCED GENTLEWOMEN.

THE Christian Public is aware by this time of the lamented death of my beloved sister, Julia Corke, the originator of the effort to establish the LUTHER MEMORIAL HOME, to grant rent-free rooms to the above class.

It is earnestly hoped and believed that this needed work may still be accomplished, that Christian Workers will take it up, and by their prayers, sympathy, and exertions to raise funds, to add to the £200 already subscribed, strengthen the hands of the Treasurer (Miss Julia Fox, 54, Kensington Park-road, Ladbroke-square, Bayswater) and of myself, who, having worked in the cause from its commencement, will gladly take up this legacy of my beloved sister.

Funds continue to come in which bereavement has prevented my acknowledging as yet. Thanks for all. Cards for Collecting Shillings will be gratefully supplied, and Contributions thankfully received by the Treasurer, or by—

ANNETTE CORKE, Hon. Sec.,
120, Ledbury-road, Bayswater, W.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of SHAFTESBURY, K.G.
ESTABLISHED 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES:

27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN;
AND 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE, or by the Proprietors of this paper.

NOTE.—Subscriptions or Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Friends will please notice the exact title "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

THE LAST DAY.

A CONTRIBUTOR (Mr. C. Steinitz) sends us the following:—Saturday, May 2. will be memorable in the annals of the International Inventions Exhibition. The Prince of Wales had long before announced his intention of opening the Exhibition on Monday, the 4th. It is well known that the Prince's arrangements are rightly and necessarily carried out like the laws of the Medes and Persians. For many weeks intending exhibitors have had every opportunity of completing their arrangements—being daily reminded by placards posted throughout the building that all must be ready by Saturday, the 2nd. But many finding that all things continued (with their neighbours) as before, and judging from appearances that it was impossible to open on the appointed day, pursued the even tenor of their way, asking one another as they surveyed the half-finished—and in many instances scarcely begun—stands and show cases, "Where is the promise of his coming?"

When, on Saturday morning, special placards printed in red ink announced the fact that the last day had really come, a scene of bustle and activity commenced which could only be appreciated by those who saw it. Many finding it impossible to repair in one day the neglect of a week, obtained permission to work on Sunday; but in vain. The Prince made an unexpected visit of inspection on Saturday, and took in the whole scene of unreadiness.

The application to the careless soul of this little parable is obvious. The Christian struggling with the battle of life, and sometimes discouraged by the fact that his work is unseen, may also take heart from it. The Prince is nearer than we think, and sees it all.

MRS. HILTON'S CRECHE ORPHAN HOME.

ANOTHER of the periodical sales of work, by which Mrs. Hilton is able partly to replenish her exchequer, was opened in the Cannon-street Hotel on Saturday last, remaining open throughout Monday and Tuesday. Many kind hearts and loving—almost exclusively womanly—hands had contributed to the preparation of a very superior collection of useful and ornamental articles, which were artistically displayed on the twelve stalls.

In opening the bazaar on Saturday, Mr. Arthur Pease, M.P., referred in most sympathetic terms to the good work that has been accomplished these past dozen years by the Crèche, and other departments of the work, and the many similar efforts that have sprung from it. His remarks were well corroborated by the presence and sweet song of a number of children from the Orphanage, who, with their tasteful attire and rosy looks, won the admiration of the assembled friends. We heard from Mr. Pease, with much regret, that the failing health of Mrs. Hilton makes it improbable that she can long continue to take so active a part in her loved work as she has hitherto done. While strength is granted to her, we trust the friends of the widow and the helpless children will hold up her hands by prayer and practical sympathy.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For blessing granted in connection with a Gospel Temperance Mission at Pangbourne, Berks.——For answered prayer for recovery from serious illness.

PRAYER.—For a Gospel Mission in Birkenhead, May 10 to 17.——For services held by Rev. A. T. Jones, of Newport, at the Gospel hall, Wood-green, on the 10th, 11th, and 12th inst.——For much blessing on the meetings of believers to be held in Dublin on June 2 to 4.

Bible Schools, Madeira.—These schools are the only means in operation for making the native children acquainted with the Word of God. In the island very little support can be obtained, and it is necessary to look to Christian friends in England, or abandon the work. Donations received by Messrs. Child & Co., bankers, 1, Fleet-street, London.

Literature for Canada.—Will the friends of Temperance kindly help a Blue Ribbon Band at Metapedia Canada, by sending to Miss L. A. Fraser, Lovat Dale, Metapedia, New Brunswick, copies of The Christian or other evangelical papers, tracts, texts, or anything that will aid in carrying on Gospel Temperance work?

CHILDREN'S Special Service Mission.

A PUBLIC MEETING

WILL (D.V.) BE HELD IN THE

EXETER (Lower) HALL, STRAND,

On Friday Evening, May 15, 1885,

At Half-past Six o'clock.

Rev. Dr. H. SINCLAIR PATERSON will preside.

Addresses by Mrs. Reaney; W. Shrimpton, Esq., who has held Children's Services during the past year in the Cape of Good Hope, Natal, Australia, and New Zealand; and E. Arrowsmith, Esq.

The Anchorage.

Hebrews vi. 19.

To shelter respectable
Young Women in Trouble.

FOR rules of admission to the Anchorage House, and full particulars of the work of the Anchorage Mission, and for trained servants, apply (by letter only) to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley, Rosslyn House, Grove End-road, N.W., London.

Many of the young women admitted being mothers or about to become so, the extra care they require, and (when friendless) the help that the Mission must give towards paying for their infants at nurse during the first few mouths of the mother's return to service or other occupation, causes the work to be unusually costly, and subscriptions are much required, sent either to Mrs. H. Stuart-Wortley (President of the Ladies' Committee) at her private address as above, or to Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

"ALL ISRAEL SHALL BE SAVED."

BY

ADOLPH SAPHIR, B.A., D.D.,

Author of "Christ and the Scriptures," &c., &c.

32 Pages. Demy 8vo. Price SIXPENCE.

"Dr. Saphir ha already written many things, . . . but nothing from his pen has so deeply touched me, and many other readers, as this powerful appeal to Christendom from the lips of a Jewish Christian; for, like the Apostle, Saphir also is a son of Israel. Without Christian believers from Israel, there would be no Church in existence; the first Christian congregations in Apostolic days were Jewish."—Professor Delitzsch.

Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"We devoutly wish that by some means or other a copy could be placed in the hands of every Sunday-school superintendent and every pastor of a Church."
Penuel.

"We are quite sure that this book is well calculated to encourage effort, and stimulate the Church to diligence in this direction."—The Methodist.

"THY FIRST LOVE."

Christ's Message to the Church at Ephesus.

By REV. J. CULROSS, D.D., M.A.

With Chromo-Lithographic Frontispiece.

Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"Instructive, suggestive, full of spiritual force, and at the same time strong and manly; these latter adjectives we find it impossible to use concerning many of the devotional books produced in our day. Because we may honestly use them in this case, we heartily commend this book for the refreshment of our busy teachers."
Sunday School Chronicle.

THE KING'S PALACE.

Or LARGE EDITION (cloth) for 1s. 3d.

THIRTEENTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "The Christian," WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this Journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

BRONCHIAL AND THROAT AFFECTION for 15 YEARS.

Mrs. E. C., of Birkenhead, and her friend Major B., have been distributing medicine largely to the poor (in such cases I supply it at little above actual cost—for charitable purposes only).

Writing me recently, Mrs. E. C. says:—"I had for fifteen years been subject to throat attacks, which have been treated as 'bronchial' by some, and 'nervous' by others.* It did not seem that any remedy reached them until I used this medicine of yours. I feel so grateful for what it has done for me that I send your book, and recommend your treatment, to everyone who suffers from throat or chest complaint. I have such faith that I feel I must give the medicine to the poor women suffering from bronchitis, asthma, and the like. It is such a privilege to relieve suffering of that kind."

Attacks, no doubt, partaking of both characters.*—G. T. C.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.

Instituted 1772.

Patron: THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.G.
President: G. WILLIAMS, ESQ.
Vice-Presidents: A. PEASE, ESQ., M.P., S. D. WADDY, ESQ., M.P., Q.C., and J. H. GLADSTONE, ESQ., Ph.D., F.R.S., &c.
Treasurer: F. A. BEVAN, ESQ. Honorary Secretary: THE REV. W. TYLER.

This, the oldest of all the evangelistic societies in London, is largely engaged in taking the Gospel to two classes, viz., those who cannot, and those who will not, attend ordinary places of worship. The former are met with in workhouses, infirmaries, and suchlike places; the latter in the open air, common lodging-houses, &c., besides in rooms and mission halls, where every sort of religious, social, and benevolent efforts are in daily operation, by 150 volunteer workers and a large contingent of lady helpers, who visit 12 workhouses and infirmaries, with 12,000 or more inmates.

During the winter, an earnest and most successful effort has been made to reach the "Outcast" from whom the "Bitter Cry" has come. Thousands of them have been sheltered all night, and fed in the Mission Hall, Thrawl-street, Spitalfields. Many have been secured work, and assisted in other ways. To sustain this and the general work, Funds are urgently needed.

Subscriptions and Donations will be most gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., at the Bank; by the Secretary, Mr. James Atkinson, 10, Enfield-road South, Kingsland, N.; by the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or the Editors of The Christian.

JAMES ATKINSON, Secretary.

BIBLE AND COLPORTAGE SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

An undenominational Society, with Agents in all parts of Ireland. Carefully selected and trained Colporteurs are spreading the knowledge of Jesus by the living voice and the printed page. They have access to the people everywhere, and are not interfered with in their work. A contribution of £40 will secure a Colporteur for a year in any part of Ireland. Several additional Colporteurs have been recently appointed. Funds greatly needed.—Rev. H. M. Williamson, Belfast, and Rev. John Elliott, Armagh, Secretaries, by whom contributions will be gratefully received; or they may be paid at the Office of this Paper.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.

THE THIRTY-NINTH ANNUAL MEETING will be held at the INSTITUTION, St. George-street, opposite London Dock Wall, on TUESDAY Evening, May 19, at 7 p.m. GEORGE WILLIAMS, Esq., V.P., will Preside, and the Revs. Dr. H. S. Paterson, F. A. C. Lillingston, M.A., Joseph Fletcher, and H. W. Maynard, Esq., and others, will speak. No Tickets required. The Rev. ARCHIBALD G. BROWN will preach in aid of the Society, on Thursday, May 21, at 7.30 p.m., in the East London Tabernacle, Burdett-road, Bow. Owing to extension of work this Society is in debt, and Contributions from friends unable to attend the Anniversary, will be gratefully received by the Secretary, at the Offices, 237, Commercial-road, London, E.

ANXIETY OF SOUL.—Any to whom the way of salvation is not clear, are invited to communicate, either personally or by letter, to W. S., care of Evangelistic Secretary, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

THE COMMITTEE of the Ladies' Samaritan Society of the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, 25, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, earnestly plead for contributions in aid of the poorer patients and their families. The smallest gifts in money or clothing will be thankfully acknowledged by the Committee.

RAMSGATE.—Who will help in getting a small pony for the Invalids of St. Luke's Home? Grateful for the smallest contributions.—A. D. R., Finsbury House, Ramsgate.

PRIVATE HOME-HOSPITAL, 9, Lupus-street, St. George's-square, South Belgravia, for Ladies and Children (medical, surgical, and obstetrical cases). Situation most healthful. —For terms, apply to the Lady Superintendent at the Hospital, enclosing stamped envelope.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

President, The Rt. Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury, K.G.
Established 1822.

For the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible from house to house throughout the country. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities, such as Dublin, Belfast, Waterford, &c., as City Missionaries, and visit all classes and denominations, where permitted so to do. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom or ever asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES:

27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN;
AND 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. James Kearney White, or by the Proprietors of this paper.

Note.—Subscriptions or Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "The Christian."

Friends will please notice the exact title "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

Devotional Meeting, 10 a.m. General Meeting, 11 a.m. Bible Reading, 3 p.m. Evening Meeting, 7 p.m. each day.

The Revs. C. Skrine, F Whitfield, A. Fausset, C. Stirling, C. Graham, J. C. S. Kœnig, and Fuller Gooch; Dr. Anderson; and C. Pember, Esq., will address the Meetings.

Tramcars from Westminster and Blackfriars Bridge pass the door constantly. Clapham Road Station is near, and Tramcars to and from the station pass frequently.

Light refreshments will be provided at moderate charges. Tickets for a few Reserved Seats, 2s. 6d. each, and Free Tickets and Programmes to be had on application to the Rev. C. MELVILLE PYM, Hon. Secretary, The Conference Hall.

"Moon's" Society for Embossing the Scriptures and other Books for the Blind.

Dr. Moon's simplified type, suitable for all ages and capacities of the blind, is of universal application. It has been adapted by him to 250 languages and dialects. More than 150,000 volumes of the Word of God, and other books, have been supplied to the blind of numerous countries.

Subscriptions and donations are urgently needed to carry on this daily increasing work, and will be gratefully received by Dr. W. Moon, 104, Queen's-road, Brighton (Acting Trustee); also by the Editors of The Christian.

CANON LIDDON'S EPISCOPAL THEORY.

THE recent sermon by Canon Liddon, at St. Paul's Cathedral, on the occasion of the consecration of the Bishops of Exeter and of Lincoln, has attracted a good deal of attention in the religious Press. The Record criticises strongly the bad taste of inflicting upon a congregation, one-half of which might be expected to be friends of, or at least in sympathy with, the evangelical Bishop of Exeter, a discourse bristling with controversy and wholly one-sided in its exaggerated assertion of High Church dogmas and assumptions.

There is no doubt some ground for this charge, but, on the other hand, if Canon Liddon believes what is called Apostolic Succession—that is, the transmission of grace solely through Episcopal hands—to be essential to Christianity, he cannot be fairly blamed for insisting upon it on such an occasion. It is to be hoped that had an evangelical preacher been chosen he would not have kept back what he might deem to be an essential feature of the truth of God through any fear of offending the susceptibilities of High Churchmen present.

What constitutes a more real ground of complaint is that—as The Record also puts it—a professedly Protestant preacher, in a Protestant Cathedral, should preach such unscriptural and intolerant Romish error, which, to do the Church of England justice, has always been repudiated by her greatest and most spiritually-minded teachers, though of late it has become fashionable through the spread of the leaven of Romish doctrine arising from the unhappy Oxford movement of fifty years ago.

Canon Liddon's Episcopal theory would unchurch not only all Dissenters in England, but all Presbyterians in Scotland, even those who there form the Established Church, a Church recognised by our gracious Queen, who, while living there, attends its ministrations. He would also excommunicate all foreign Protestants, though, as The Record well points out, even Bishop Cosin (a special favourite of the High Church School) expressly refused to do this, and our Reformers are well known to have drawn up those of the Thirty-nine Articles which treat on the subject, so as not to exclude but to recognise the ministry of foreign Protestants.

The root of Canon Liddon's error we take to be his assumption that our Lord's parting commission to his disciples (as St. John expressly calls them, John xx. 19) was given to Apostles only. Canon Westcott more truly says on the words "breathed on them and said, 'Receive ye the Holy Ghost,'" "There is nothing to limit the pronoun 'them' to 'the ten.' It appears from Luke xxiv. that there was a general gathering of the believers in Jerusalem. In verse 12, 'the twelve' are evidently distinguished from 'the disciples.' . . . The commission, therefore, must be regarded properly as the commission of the Christian Society, and not as that of the Christian ministry." Again, in his "The Revelation of the Risen Lord," Canon Westcott says: "The words were not addressed to all the Apostles, nor to the Apostles alone. Thomas was absent, and there were others assembled with the Apostles (Luke xxiv. 33). The commission and the promise, therefore, were given, like the Pentecostal blessing which they forefigured, to the Christian Society, and not to any special order in it."

Canon Liddon says: "It is indeed a very solemn question whether we hold the Episcopate to be a part of the revealed will of God, or like archdeacons or capitular bodies, only a feature of Church Government, who, however venerable, may conceivably be dispensed with without sacrificing anything organic in the conditions of our communion with Christ. If by suppressing all the deans and chapters we could reconcile all the separated Protestant bodies to the unity and doctrine of the Church, who of us but would not gladly make the sacrifice?"

It seems strange that one who can speak thus should not look more closely into the question, whether Episcopacy, however sanctioned in Scripture as a form of Church government, be indeed, as the Tractarian school teach, the means—and the only means—of transmitting spiritual privileges. No such notion can be extracted from the New Testament, but it will be found in abundance from the time of Cyprian and onwards, as part of the system of growing superstition which finally culminated in the Romish Apostacy. From such unscriptural errors the Reformation, through God's mercy, delivered England. It is sad to think that Canon Liddon and his friends would, if they could, enslave us again.

ONE ROOM.

SUCH striking prominence has of late been given to the question of the dwellings and lives of the abject poor in the slums of our great cities, that there is now some ground for fear, lest the lot of other classes of the people—classes not less entitled to sympathy and help—may be quite overlooked. The "respectable poor," who do not in any way war against society, have, in some measure, to pay the penalty of their comparative respectability, and of their lack of that element of picturesqueness and romance which is popularly supposed to accompany the vagrant and the criminal.

Yet it may well be considered doubtful whether the danger to society is greater from its neglect of the former than of the latter; for there are evils inseparable from some of the deplorable surroundings of the respectable poor, which are likely to develop widespread immorality. It is not necessary to visit the East-end of London, or the Liberties of Dublin, to find the gangrene which is eating its way into our national life; any parish in any populous city will furnish sufficient proof of the urgent need which exists for provision for those who are neither destitute, depraved, nor homeless, but whose home is included within a space of a few square feet.

Take, for instance, the Lower Division of Islington, a district by no means remarkable for the poverty of the residents, or the dilapidated condition of the houses, including, as it does, the healthy and better-class suburbs of Barnsbury, Highbury, and Kingsland. We find that in the district there are no less than 2965 families, some consisting of father and mother and eight children, living the one-room life, while there are 7794 families each living in two rooms. Mr. Marchant Williams, who, as inspector of schools for the London School Board, has the best available means of obtaining reliable information upon the subject, has stated that there are in London no less than sixty thousand families each living in one room; and it is not improbable that in several of our large cities the percentage of the population with such limited accommodation is equally high.

It needs no sickly sentimentality to find in these figures evidence of a grave and pressing danger to society. What can reasonably be hoped for in those who are trained within such environments? How can it be expected that children should grow up modest and virtuous in the inevitable surroundings of such a home, however anxious the parents may be to preserve them from contamination. With bodies enervated by the necessarily unhealthy atmosphere, and with minds tainted by experiences from which the children of more happily situated people are studiously kept free, the wonder is, not that some of them fall into the ever-yawning gulf of vice, but rather that so many of them escape, and become virtuous and God-fearing members of society. That young girls from such homes, when they go out to earn their bread in factories and shops, commence life heavily weighted, must be admitted, for the fact is only too evident in some of its terrible results, and is unmistakeably recorded in the stony pages of the midnight streets.

It behoves us to ask ourselves whether the responsibility of their lapse is their own, or that of society, which permits in its midst the existence of a crying evil. Far too often in philanthropic as in other work we have remedial instead of preventive measures, and deal with the effect instead of the cause. The reformatory is all very well, but that which would render the reformatory unnecessary is preferable; for it is better to prevent the fall than to raise the fallen. The work of providing more suitable homes for the upper section of the labouring poor surely is a fit and proper one for the Christian to engage in. It may not be so direct an assault upon the kingdom of Satan as purely Gospel work, is but it certainly will have the effect of preventing the extension in certain directions of the devil's boundaries. Whoever is labouring only in preventive movements assuredly is one of the Lord's army of pioneers, removing obstacles out of the way of the growth of the kingdom of God.

The example of Octavia Hill and others might profitably be imitated by many who are anxious to follow in the footsteps of the Master who went about doing good, and who, in his Divine mission to the souls of men, ever evidenced a deep practical sympathy with the physical sorrows and trials of humanity. Christ's assurance that "it is not the will of your Father that one of these little ones should perish" has a wider bearing than many of us are ready to admit, perhaps simply because its practical application in these days would involve personal and unpleasant labour rather than quiet meditation.

POLICE CHOIR.—The Police Choir in connection with the Christian Policemen's Association, are to give a Service of Sacred Song, entitled "The Prodigal Son," in Exeter Hall, on Saturday next (May 16) at 3.30 p.m., in aid of the Police Relief Fund. A choir has lately been formed, consisting of members of this Association, who have consecrated their voices to the service of the Lord. Tickets can be obtained at Exeter Hall, or of Miss C. Gurney, hon. sec., 11, Ladbrooke-terrace, Notting-hill, W.

A TRAVESTY OF JUSTICE.

WE have already referred to the appearance at the Police-court and the committal for trial of Mrs. Jeffries for keeping a number of infamous houses in Chelsea. After her commitment, the following note from a correspondent appeared in Truth :—

> "I see in the Jeffries case that counsel repeatedly urged witnesses not to mention the names of her male visitors. I could have understood counsel for the defence doing this in the interest of their client's business; but why counsel for a prosecution, which was instituted by a Society for the exposure and suppression of vice, should have taken the same course is not so easy to perceive. Either this Society should not have prosecuted, or it should not have thus sought to shield those without whom Mrs. Jeffries' business could not have been carried on."

It was not by any means the wish of the prosecuting Society, which (after a long series of difficulties thrown in their way by those who ought to have helped them) brought these abominable establishments to light, that their aristocratic patrons should be concealed.

The case was tried at the Clerkenwell Sessions on Tuesday, May 5. With three other friends we went to hear it. At the foot of the stairs we encountered a policeman, who stopped us with "Jurymen only." We insisted on our right as representatives of the Press. Some of our friends had the greatest difficulty in getting in, being told the court was crowded, whereas, when they entered, there was not a single person in the seats appropriated to the public.

The leading counsel on each side (Mr. Besley and Mr. Montagu Williams) retired, before the formal opening of the Court, apparently to consult together, and with the Assistant Judge, Mr. Edlin. On their return the defendant, Mrs. Jeffries, pleaded Guilty, and Mr. Besley proceeded to remark on the case against her, previous to judgment. If he had been retained by the defence to state it as mildly as possible, he could not have succeeded better. It was made to appear that Mrs. Jeffries' misdoings went no farther back than 1882, whereas in his brief was the deposition of a servant, dating back about twelve years. It was also made to appear that there was nothing of a specially disorderly character about this disorderly series of houses, whereas the deposition of this servant declares that she left Mrs. Jeffries' service on account of the cruelty perpetrated on a child who had been apparently kidnapped from the country, and was certainly outraged in this den of satyrs.

The following comments by the Press will show that we are not singular in our view of the case; although the silence of the Press generally is one of the most painful features in the question of Public Morals which is forcing itself to the front :—

CHRISTIAN COMMONWEALTH.

> "On Tuesday, May 5, Mrs. Jeffries, the notorious keeper of aristocratic brothels in Chelsea, appeared at the Clerkenwell Sessions House, to take her trial. She pleaded guilty, and thus prevented the prosecution bringing forward the evidence which they had in readiness, and which would have startled the nation. Mr. Montagu Williams, her counsel, glossed over the facts of the case; and Mr. Besley, who was supposed to be prosecuting counsel, displayed equal anxiety to minimise the crime and mitigate the punishment. Mrs. Jeffries was fined £200, and ordered to find sureties to the amount of £400 to be of good behaviour for two years. Practically, this is no punishment at all. The entire proceedings were little better than a burlesque on justice. It would be well for the prosecuting Society to get a fresh solicitor, and to employ other counsel, before they again bring a case into court."

MORNING MAIL.

> "The sentence passed on the woman Jeffries at the Middlesex Sessions was ridiculously inadequate to the offence with which she was charged, and was still more absurd when her antecedents were taken into consideration. A fine in such a case is a mere mockery of justice, and the way in which the whole matter was hushed up in deference to the position of Mother Jeffries and her male clients is simply a disgrace to all concerned. Had this abominable old woman kept a small coffee-shop in a back street, she would have been sent to prison without mercy; but a procuress who keeps a whole row of disorderly houses and a brougham, is let off with a fine!"

ECHO.

> "The trial is ended, but the investigation ought not to be at an end. At the preliminary examination an ex-Police Inspector deposed that he had reported this woman's house to his superiors and only been ridiculed and told to hold his tongue. Surely, now that the woman has pleaded guilty to the charges made against her, the Home Secretary will sift this statement to the bottom. If it be false, the man who made it ought to be punished; if it be true, the guilty ought not to escape. From first to last the case is very suggestive. Social reformers are often told that the law is strong enough already. Possibly it is, if it were only put in force. But the enforcement of the law depends largely upon the police and the local authorities. If they shut their eyes and neglect their duty, and private citizens invoke the law, those who act are subjected to persecution and forensic scurrility. Sir William Harcourt, at the instance of Mr. Baron Huddleston, has refused to institute a further investigation into the Poole perjury case; we wait with keen anxiety to see whether he will consider the Chelsea case finally closed after the statement made on oath in open court with regard to the conduct of the police authorities."

If the demand expressed by The Echo and other journals for a thorough and impartial investigation of the charge of Mr. Minahan, ex-inspector, against the police, is not acceded to, the inevitable assumption on the part of the public will be that the authorities are afraid of the result, and are therefore bolstering up the conspiracy of silence. We can conceive of nothing more fatal to public morals than any suspicion of complicity with wrong-doing on the part of our police officials, and we hope that for their own credit and vindication a strict inquiry will be instituted into the conduct of the Chelsea superintendent and his subordinates. We may remark as a singular indication of the interest that is evidently felt in this case by the authorities, that the Home Secretary sent a representative to watch the proceedings at the Westminster Police-court. At the trial in the Clerkenwell Sessions House an influential member of the Government, we understand, was present, and occupied a seat on the bench. We can only hope that such solicitude to be fully informed on the subject implies a determination on the part of the Home Office to probe the matter to the bottom and arrive at the truth.

The whole circumstances surrounding this miserable case, from first to last, prove that even in this free and enlightened country equal justice is hard to get when there is likely to be any reflection cast upon those in high social positions. Six months ago an attempt was made to bring this procuress to trial at the instance of a private prosecutor. The presiding magistrate at the Westminster Court on that occasion absolutely refused (after consultation with his brother magistrates) to grant a case, on the plea that it was the province of the vestry to prosecute, and that to encourage action by a private individual would open the door to extortion. Yet this magistrate had substantially the same sworn evidence before him as that on which the woman has since been convicted and punished—if, indeed, the sentence can be said to carry with it any punishment at all. After this magisterial refusal endeavours were made to induce two Chelsea ratepayers, of good position, to act as prosecutors, and thus compel a hearing of the case. Most of those applied to declined, because of the powerful backing enjoyed by Mrs. Jeffries: some of these householders went so far as to say that they feared personal violence if they were to appear as the complaining parties. What ground there was for their fears we know not, but the mere fact that such a plea was advanced indicates a deplorable state of matters indeed.

The sentence itself, as our contemporaries have well remarked, is most absurdly inadequate, and seems to us nothing less than a perfect mockery and travesty of justice. Considering the facts adduced at the police-court, and contained in the depositions before the Judge at Clerkenwell, the sentence is altogether unintelligible, except on the supposition that some strong influence, in favour of the accused woman, was brought to bear on the Court by her aristocratic patrons. The shameless favouritism and leniency shown towards her in both courts was most marked to any unbiassed observer. The police magistrate "did not want to send her to prison," and gave her ample opportunity as to securing bail, which would have been certainly denied to a poor and friendless prisoner. A man evidently in humble position was placed in the dock at Clerkenwell for a similar offence, on the conclusion of Mrs. Jeffries' case, he having been incarcerated for some time. The hearing of his case was postponed, but the man was without any compunction or consideration sent back to prison. It seems as clear as the noonday that even in so-called Christian England there is too often one law for the rich and another for the poor.

OUR "HIGHWAY" MEN.

THE Strangers' Rest, in Ratcliff-highway, has been the scene of many interesting sights; not the least interesting was one that took place last Thursday. For about two hours before the appointed time the doors were thronged with hungry, poverty-stricken men, anxiously waiting for admittance to the promised feast. As soon as the doors were opened the rooms were speedily filled. One's heart was filled with pity and yearning compassion, to think that these 250 men knew nothing of fireside and home comforts or joys. The rough, coarse, lodging-house kitchen was their only earthly dwelling-place. Some bore the traces of "better days"—some, for whom we felt especial pity, trembled with age.

All received and devoured with eager thankfulness the ample supply of provisions and mugs of hot tea. In due time the "Mizpah" band arrived; their thrilling Gospel songs and earnest words of testimony rivetted the attention of the men, and at the close twenty rose for prayer. We trust some, if not all, found true rest in Christ ere they left the hall. The men each received a bunch of fresh, beautiful flowers as they went out. As the workers wished them "Good-night," hearing such remarks as these; "Oh, if we could only have this treat every night!" and "I could sit all night to hear such singing and preaching," they could in some small measure realise the blessedness of the Master's words, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these, my brethren, ye did it unto Me."

A VENERABLE COLONIAL BISHOP.—A correspondent writes as follows to The Queensland Times respecting the retirement of Bishop Hale: "A good man, old in years, and grey in the service of the Gospel ministry, is about to leave his Queensland home. The best of his life has been spent in Australia. His care and zeal for the welfare of the aborigines in Western Australia is well known. He recognised a brother in every minister seeking souls for Christ, no matter of what denomination, and on the platform of the Bible Society, and at the gatherings of the Sunday-school Union, showed his great unsectarian spirit and his hearty desire to co-operate in every good work. His charity, and the disposal of a large portion of his emolument for religious purposes, to say nothing of his munificent gift of £700 two years ago towards the debt of the Anglican General Church Fund, have proved his great unselfishness."

A TRIBUTE TO THE BIBLE.

By Professor ELMSLIE,

At the Annual Meeting of the Bible Society.

I WANT to remind you why you give your money to send the Bible to heathen lands. It is because the Bible has been your best friend. It is because the Bible in your personal life has gone by your side; has been a sweet summer sunshine of God in your life, making all that was pleasant and bright in it more beautiful, and saving you a hundred times over from hidden dangers. I put it to you, men and women, who learned to love the Bible at your mother's knee, when she took you in her lap on a Sabbath evening and told you the story of the gentle Jesus coming among sinful men, bringing tears of penitence into the eyes of sinful women, and then going to the Cross and offering up there his mighty heart as a sacrifice for the world's sins—I put it to you whether the love of Jesus did not then enter into your child's heart? You loved the Bible, and its strains have been in your ears like music; and when you left your father's home and went into the world, and came into contact with the real pressure and hardship and cruelty of life, and you bore the marks of the struggle upon you; when your heart rose up in rancour against it, and deep tides of passion swelled up, and you were on the brink of doing things that would have covered your soul with lasting shame—what held you back, and comforted you, and elevated you, and lifted you up when you fell, and set you on your feet again, so that here you are, men and women who can hold up their faces unappalled, looking to God in heaven, and drawing your little children to love the Lord Jesus and believe in that dear Bible? What did this for you? Why, this sacred Book, out of which the great heart of Christ flows forth.

Once more, I wish to say, that I have a very firm belief that England owes all that is best and most bright in her prosperity, in the stability of her laws and government, in the equal and just balance of the relations of every class of society to one another, to the Bible. I catch a sentence in this report that pictures for our eyes a very different state of things abroad—countries where the population is divided into two antagonistic armies, hating each other; one dominated by a superstition that has shut out the Bible, the other dominated by an unbelief that does not know the Bible. Now, I believe that a terrible retribution has come upon those countries that at the Reformation drove the Bible out of their borders, and drove out the men and women whose hearts had learned human rights and obedience to God out of that sacred Book. There is a difference between those countries, with the hostility and struggles and contentions of their political life, and our own land. Why is it that in England we have none of those dreadful scenes of anarchy, when all government is overturned and the tyranny of the few is replaced by the worse tyranny of the mob? Why is it that these contentions and rival claims of wealth and privilege against poverty and despair and ignorance have often and always been decided on principles of equity in our land, with a growing progress to that perfect balance of all human rights which marks the perfection of all human government? Why is this? Because the spirit of the Bible has been infused into the very minds of the English people—the Bible, that surpasses all other books in its denunciations of tyranny, oppression, and wrong; the Bible, that is the book of the poor and enslaved, and that stands up and proclaims justice, and love, and truth. Yes; but it equally denounces the attempt to right wrongs by fresh wrongs. It has no faith in curing those evils that spring out of the sin and selfishness of men's hearts by any mere mechanical adjustments of goods and transposition of laws and customs. It teaches that nothing but penitence and regeneration, and a new outpouring of the pure, sweet, holy Spirit of God can purify a nation's life; and that Bible, with its calming and kindling power and influence, is deep-rooted in English character.

And observe that when great changes did take place in our country, they took place not with a shut Bible, but with an open Bible. We may have our own opinions as to which man was right and which was wrong, but the point is that the Bible was kept open and appealed to; that it had lived and been loved in England. And the Bible, I say, has done more to make all that is pure, stable, just, generous, free, and living in the English character than any other influence whatever. I listened with exceeding pleasure to the words that fell from the noble Chairman's lips when he told us how the heart of the poor in England is going out to the Bible. I believe them, for from the little I have seen in my work when I was a minister among the poor, I came to this conclusion, that it is false to say the heart of the working classes is turned against the Bible. (The Earl of Shaftesbury emphatically and repeatedly exclaimed Hear, hear.) The hearts of poor men are embittered by many real wrongs and by a great many fancied wrongs that they have suffered from ecclesiastical bodies and political legislation that perchance has too much selfishness and care for the privileged in its making; but the working men have always distinguished between the sweet teaching and the pure and noble heart of Jesus Christ, and the errors and selfishness and sins of those who bear his name. And I say this, that men's voices will grow more gentle, and their words will lose all their harshness, and mere controversy will become silenced when men are shown once again that sacred form of a crucified Christ, dominating the centuries with his dying love, determining the destinies of men with his undying pity for sinners.

Infidelity itself has tears come into its eyes when you bring it face to face with Christ. We count criticism an enemy. I think that is a mistake. We often think of temptations in life as if they were almost an evil, and come from the devil. But the Bible says, "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation." I think God puts temptation in life for a discipline. Perchance the very finest gifts my God-given life has bestowed upon me—as will appear at the last great day—have come, not out of its happiness and success, but out of its struggles, and conflicts, and battles—out of the blessed temptation. And I dare to say this: I count it a sign, not of a dying Bible, but of a living, rising Bible, that it is spoken against. I count it a proof that men's hearts are not at rest when they cannot stick to their science and philosophy, but must come and strike at Christ. He is moving them and is attacking them, and the heart of the age is stirred. The ages of faith, as they are called, I think, were often ages of stagnation and death. Where there is life and movement, and where religion is stepping forward, there you may have criticism and antagonism.

What has criticism done in these last years? I tell you it has executed judgment on itself. I will tell you what critics are doing—they are, step by step, as each new unbelieving theory comes out, making one more pathway of escape from Christ impossible. Where is the Christ of Paulus? where is the Christ of Strauss? where is the Christ of Schenkel? where is the Christ of Renan? There is not a cultivated German or critic who believes in one of them. And what have these critics done? Why, by a method of elimination they are shutting up the heart of humanity and the intelligence of the age to this: there is no other explanation of Christ's power than the old, old one, that He was perfect Man and perfect God, the world's Saviour, the Son of God. This good thing has been done for our Churches and for ourselves—the attack on Christ has driven us back on Christ. Our churches are too apt to live with the Christ in their Creeds; and the Christ of the best creed is not quite the living, loving Son of God whom we see in the Gospels. It is like that old Greek story of the giant son of the earth in his wrestle for life. Every time he was thrown on his mother earth he rose again with renewed strength, but when held aloft he was killed. You will never kill Christianity till you succeed in deluding Christians that they can defend it out of the Bible away from Christ. But every time one is, in the conflict of criticism, flung back on Christ, I ask him if, indeed, he is not renewed; and so in these shocks the Church rises again with a new life, because she relies anew on a risen Christ, who is exalted on high, and is going to be the world's Saviour, and the world's Conqueror. Because the Bible Society is bringing men's hearts into contact with the heart of the Christ of the Gospels, I bid it God-speed, and ask for it all the support you can give in money and prayer; and we will all join together in wishing that God may increase its resources and multiply its means of usefulness, and hasten the time when no human home shall not find its supreme pride and boast in the Holy Book of God.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

"THE OXFORD" MUSIC HALL.

A SOCIAL meeting of workers and converts was recently held at Stafford Rooms, when many pleasing testimonies were given as to the blessing which had accompanied the services here throughout the winter. Every week numbers of inquirers remained to the after-meetings, and not a few of them confessed to have found the great salvation. All the workers expressed their regret that the time had arrived for closing the services, to the heavy expenses of which they have themselves contributed according to their ability. Many converted there this winter are now, in their several neighbourhoods, bearing testimony to the power of God's preserving grace.

A REST HOUSE AT HASTINGS.

Wilton House is the name of a new House of Rest opened at Hastings, on Friday, May 1, for wearied workers in the Lord's vineyard, both from home and foreign fields. It is pleasantly situated, and within five minutes' walk of the sea. The house is named after the estate of the generous donor, through whose liberality it is completely furnished. The Home will be conducted on purely unsectarian principles. Any of the Lord's servants needing rest will be received according to rooms that may be vacant at the time, the terms being suitable to those in receipt only of small incomes, while none for whom its benefits are intended will be refused through inability to pay at all. The balance between receipts and expenditure will, we hope, be supplied by the voluntary offerings of Christians who may be led to show sympathy with the work.

Many friends assembled on May 1, at the meetings, several coming from London, Tunbridge Wells, and other places, to show fellowship in thanksgiving and prayer. They proved delightful times of communion with God, and weighty words of spiritual instruction and comfort were spoken by several during the day.

TENT MEETINGS.

The time has fully arrived for us to recommence tent work. Fourteen tents were employed last year (besides one or two old ones in occasional service), and the work was of the most deeply interesting kind. The meetings have since resulted in permanent missions being established by local friends. Most of the marquees are now ready to be again sent forth for the summer campaign. We are waiting for supplies before we go forward. Tent meetings involve considerable outlay for carriage, ground, workers, and general expenses. We ask earnest prayer that God may give us a glorious soul-gathering time wherever the tents may be erected. Throughout the halls—almost without exception—of the Evangelistic Mission, we are witnessing very much to cheer our hearts and call forth our thanksgiving to God.

PORTSMOUTH & GOSPORT SEAMAN'S MISSION

—The thirty-third year of this work was celebrated on Friday week by a tea for fishermen from the mackerel boats now at Portsmouth. Gospel addresses were given, and it was a very solemn time. Good news comes from Cherbourg; continual blessing is manifest. MM. Sinel and Lerendu beg that the vessel may remain longer. It was really due at another port in France, but I have gladly consented to lend it until Sunday, May 10. After this we shall sail to some other port in France for evangelistic work; voluntary evangelists for the French ministry of the Word are invited. MM. Sinel and Lerendu have resolved to continue the work at Cherbourg.

RELIGIOUS AWAKENING IN SHANGHAI.

AT the Temperance Hall last evening, says The Shanghai Mercury of March 24, the gentlemen who lately came out for the China Inland Mission held another of their special meetings. The hall was filled, and the speakers were listened to with marked attention.

Mr. Stanley P. Smith read the parable of the Prodigal Son, and after singing a hymn, Mr. Hoste spoke from the text: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." After Rev. W. W. Cassells had prayed, Mr. Stanley Smith sang a solo: "Christ receiveth sinful men." Mr. C. T. Studd then spoke from the words: "For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" He delivered a very quiet but earnest address, in which he enlarged on the littleness of this world in comparison with the things of eternity, appealing especially to the young men present not to sacrifice their everlasting welfare for the fleeting pleasures of time and sense. There was no monkish austerity about his style: he freely admitted that there was pleasure to be had in this world, but urged that such enjoyment was as nothing compared with the higher and more lasting joy afforded by Christ. In conclusion, he spoke of the duty of confessing Christ, and urged any who had lately found Him to be a Saviour to them to confess Him boldly before men.

A BOLD CONFESSION.

In response to this appeal, Rev. F. R. Smith, incumbent of the Cathedral [late curate of West Ham Parish Church], stepped on to the platform and delivered what must be, we imagine, one of the most startling addresses that have ever been heard in Shanghai. He said that many of those present would be astonished at his presence on that platform, and many more would be astonished at what he had to say. Though he had been known by many of them as their minister, he grieved to say that until that very day he had never found the peace and joy that Mr. Studd had spoken of. Had God required his (Mr. Smith's) soul on Sunday night, he would have been a lost man; but he thanked God that if his soul were required that (Monday) night, he was a saved one, for he had that day found salvation. He trusted that none present would ever spend such an unhappy night as he had spent on Sunday night. He could not sleep, and in the morning he had been to see a friend of his, a brother clergyman (a missionary), who was then sitting in the audience. They had had a long conversation, and had visited the cemetery where his little one was buried, and the result of it all was that he had found peace with God by simply taking the Lord Jesus Christ at his word. He promised to save those who came to Him. "Him that cometh unto Me, I will in no wise cast out" were his words, and he could testify that He was as good as his word.

Mr. Smith then went on to give a brief sketch of his life. He said he had been brought up by very godly parents, and at the age of sixteen he was confirmed. That was a season of great joy to him. That joy, however, passed away. Afterwards he went to Cambridge, and then came his ordination. He felt a kind of solemn joy at that; but it soon passed away, and he knew now that the joy that he had experienced up to that time was not of the right kind. Then he came out to China, and he determined in his own strength to work for God as far as he possibly could. Afterwards he went home, and was married, and he well remembered the night before his marriage—how he had solemnly knelt and asked God that this might be a new departure in his life. Then he came out here, and, as many of them were aware, he had been preaching to them as faithfully as he knew how; and he had reason to believe that, through his preaching, some had found the way of life; yet all this time he himself had not been walking in that way. Having at length, through the grace of God, just taken the Lord Jesus at his word, he had now found peace with God—a peace he never had before—and the joy he now felt was one to which he had hitherto been an entire stranger. He said that the devil had been trying hard all day to keep him from coming to make this open confession of Christ; but, thank God, he had been helped by Divine power to do it, though no one, he thought, could understand the ordeal it was. In conclusion, he said that many present—fellow Christians—would rejoice with him; some who heard would be incredulous, and some would scoff. He expected much criticism, but he cared nothing for what man could say or do to him. He was determined to confess his Lord and Master.

This is but a brief summary of what can only be characterised as a most astonishing and interesting address. The meeting was brought to a close with a hymn, "O Lamb of God, to Thee I come," sung in an attitude of prayer. The last verse was read and commented upon by Mr. Stanley P. Smith, who announced that an after-meeting would be held. After the Benediction another hymn was sung, during which about half the audience went out. The remainder listened to a brief but earnest and loving address from Mr. Stanley P. Smith.

MR. HAMMOND IN GLASGOW.

AT the noon prayer-meeting of the Glasgow Evangelistic Association, on Tuesday, last week, a number of reports were given of Mr. Hammond's meetings, held the evening before in Paisley-road Free Church (Rev. Mr. Riddell). All who had been present seemed greatly impressed by the power of the Holy Spirit which rested upon that gathering. It was evident that during Mr. Hammond's address, and the closing prayer in which all were asked to join, very many were led to trust in the Lord Jesus Christ for salvation. In some of these meetings, perhaps more are led to Christ in the inquiry-meeting than during Mr. Hammond's address, but from the testimony of all, it could not have been so on Monday night.

Just at the close, one of the speakers said: "This meeting was the first of a series in the church to which I belong. The gathering of the children was very large. There could not have been less than 1200 in the building, and scattered through the audience were the Christian workers. God was working mightily through his servant. As he went on, giving one happy illustration after another, the interest deepened and grew intense. When the after-meeting began, no one left the building for a considerable time. I found a number of deeply interesting cases. First a number of girls were spoken to, and all, I fully believe, intelligently trusted in Christ. The next seat was just in front of the platform, and was filled with boys. At first they had been restless during the service, but towards the close of Mr. Hammond's address they had grown very quiet, and a number were in tears. It was easy work to talk and pray with them. I believe they decided for Christ. I spoke to many more in different parts of the hall. Two young women, whom I had long prayed for, came to tell me they had given themselves to Jesus during the service. Five little girls, well dressed, were sitting together, bathed in tears. When questioned, they said they were crying for joy that Christ had saved them. The workers in the gallery, and all over the building, were fully employed. Probably no one left the church without being spoken to."

A number of Mr. Quarrier's children, about to sail for Canada, were at the noon meeting on Thursday. Many tears were shed; it is believed that good and lasting impressions were made on their young hearts.

Rev. A. C. Fullerton, of the Buchanan Memorial Free Church, Glasgow, writes to us that, as a result of the week's meetings there by Mr. Hammond, nearly 380 young people have professed faith in Christ, after careful personal dealing.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.—Three young men sailed from London last week, to augment the staff of the China Inland Mission.

HOLLOWAY.—The fifth anniversary of the Evangelistic Mission, superintended by Mr. H. Putterill, was held on Monday, May 4, presided over by Captain Dennis. Mr. H. Topple, secretary, reported that during the year over 400 indoor and 225 open-air meetings had been held. Temperance and Band of Hope meetings were held every Sunday during the winter. Over 600 persons received free breakfasts on Sunday mornings, after which they heard the Gospel. The balance sheet showed £25 pounds deficiency. Funds are greatly needed in carrying on this good work.

HOW TO FLY.

Deut. xxxii. 11, 12.

IN a nest of God's providing,
Long I lingered, care deriding,
(For I thought the house abiding,)
Nor would fly away.

What was this my bosom thrilling?
Why were Autumn's blasts so chilling?
Sorrow soon my nest was filling.
Could I fly away?

Yes, for over me were staying
Pinions, with emotion swaying,
Love was hovering near me, saying,
"Come and fly away.

"I have left a scene of glory,
Here to come and hover o'er thee,
See, I cleave the air before thee,
Wilt thou fly away?"

Then my lot I mourned, bewailing,
For my wings proved unavailing,
But He took me, all-prevailing,
Thus to fly away.

Now, I rise, though often shrinking,
Fearing, failing, falling, sinking,
But my weakness to him linking,
I can fly away.

And methinks the heavens are clearer,
Things above seem brighter, dearer,
Yes, each day, the home grows nearer,
There, to fly away.

Hy. Joy Browne.

OBITUARY.

MRS. WILLIAM E. NEEDHAM.

THE beloved wife of the artist-evangelist, William E. Needham, departed to be with Christ, on April 4, having died in her mother's home, in Brantford, Canada, after a lingering illness of twelve months. Mrs. Needham had travelled with her husband in the Southern States, hoping to ward off the threatening consumption which had attacked her. When it became apparent that the disease had made inroads in her constitution, they repaired to Canada, where she now sleeps till the Crowning Day. Our sister was, indeed, ready. Though young and beautiful, her life had been consecrated, and gladly she laboured side by side with her husband in seeking to win souls to Christ. Only sixteen months ago, evangelist Thomas Needham buried his young wife; now both these brothers, taught by a severe discipline, are preaching with a mellowness and a tenderness given only to those who know the bitterness of sorrow, and the sweets of Divine comfort. They are commended to the loving prayers of your many readers. G. C.

THE LIVERPOOL STRANGERS' RESTS.

DEAR SIR,—Many of your readers will be glad to know of the good work going on at the branch Rest in Lime-street (under the St. James' Hall). Being in such a crowded thoroughfare, hundreds of all classes of people are day by day induced to enter, some to hear the Gospel, others to sign the Temperance pledge, and others to learn to read or write. For three months the work has been prosecuted with considerable vigour by an earnest band of voluntary workers, who have met with much encouragement.

The work is also going on well at the Park-lane Rest, especially among the foreign seamen and emigrants. Both Rests are so well situated —the one near the Custom House and the other in one of our busiest streets—that it would be a pity to see either closed through want of the necessary means to carry them on. Though we have so much to encourage us in the work itself our funds are very low, and as our expenses are nearly double what they were last year, we shall need a corresponding amount of support. Will any of your readers help us?

Yours faithfully,
Thomas A. Leigh, Treasurer.

Mr. SPURGEON'S COLLEGE CONFERENCE

THE twenty-first annual Conference in connection with the Pastor's College was held during the past week. The usual preliminary meeting, held this year at Cross-street Chapel, Islington, was felt to be one of much blessing, and a sure earnest of God's presence during the week.

The Conference proper commenced on Tuesday morning. On rising to deliver the inaugura address, the beloved President said their grand aim must be the glory of God, and the question was, "How may this supreme end be attained?" Seven main points propounded in reply were as follows:—By preaching the Gospel of God's truth; by filling our sermons very full of Christ; by preaching and working in the power of the Holy Ghost; by personal consecration; by distinctly aiming at conversions; by the perfecting of the saints; and by personal faith in God. These heads were illustrated and pressed home with all the originality and fervour for which the pastor of the Tabernacle is distinguished. The preacher's faculties were all to be laid at the Master's feet; himself must deem no moment ever lost that is spent in communion with God; the message he proclaims must have the ring of certainty about it, and his consecration must be maintained with intense resolution.

In the evening the brethren gathered at Stockwell Orphanage, where tea was provided, and a soiree held. Pastor C. Spurgeon, of Greenwich, followed with an entertaining illustrated lecture, entitled, "Street Characters and Cries."

Wednesday morning was devoted to the consideration of "The work before us, and what we need for it." In response to a call by Mr. Spurgeon a cheering testimony was borne by Rev. George Rogers (late Principal Tutor in the College), who is now in his eighty-sixth year, to the sustaining power of the grace and goodness of God. A paper was read by Pastor E. Gange, of Bristol, on "An Unction from the Holy One," and another by Pastor H. Wilkins, of Cheltenham, on "Meetness for our Ministry." It would be impossible to convey an adequate idea of the "unction" that manifestly rested on these brethren; it is understood that both papers appear in the June number of The Sword and Trowel. Following up the subject, but giving it a bearing on "the regions beyond," Mr. Comber, of the Congo Mission, delivered a stirring address on the work being done in Central Africa, and the men who are needed for its continuance and development. The fact that the speaker's brother, as well as another student, had already laid down their lives in this work, gave an added weight and pathos to Mr. Comber's recital. A more impressive missionary address has seldom been listened to. The appeal for more helpers was made with such power that six men came forward at the close, and willingly offered themselves as candidates for the Congo Mission.

The annual supper meeting of friends and subscribers of the College took place in the evening. The Chairman this year was Mr. R. V. Barrow, J.P., who reviewed the history of the College, and accorded it the highest praise both for the foreign and the home work. Mr. Spurgeon said he had no object in starting the College but the keeping alive of the old Gospel and extending it. About 700 men had gone forth from the College since its commencement, and he believed that all of them who were now preaching held fast to the doctrine of Christ, while a large number of Churches had been formed. The meeting was further addressed by several of the evangelists who have gone from the Institution. Mr. Harmer astonished many by the instances of superstition and witchcraft he had met with in rural districts. Mr. Manton Smith had experienced a flood tide of blessing all the year round, and entreated parents to yearn for the conversion of their children. At one place nearly 300 persons testified to having found Christ. Mr. Weeks, another Congo missionary, spoke of the difficulties and triumphs of the work. He had experienced twenty-eight fevers more or less virulent, while in Africa, but when most sick Christ has been most consciously present. Pastor C. A. Davis bore testimony to the good work being done by many of the pastors in Yorkshire. Rev. Newman Hall, Mr. J. S. Balfour, Rev. J. A. Spurgeon, and Mr. Ewing also spoke. The sum of £2450 was raised.

The two concluding days were replete with blessing. At no Conference, it may safely be said, were the power and presence of God more manifestly felt, or the unction of the Holy One more richly bestowed, than at the Thursday morning gathering. Moved by the Spirit, one after another rose in succession, having a word of exhortation or of prayer. The remarkable unity of the whole was most striking and observable. The starting-point of blessing was a solemn and searching address by the vice-president of the college, Rev. J. A. Spurgeon, on the words, "Quench not the Spirit." Each minister must be led first to know that it is his privilege to be filled with the Spirit, and then say, by God's help, "I can, I must, I will, I am." In the time of refreshing that followed, Pastor Frank White added a precious word, observing that we must be very near to Christ in order that we may feel Him breathing upon us the Holy Ghost. Other exhortations followed by Professor Gracey, Pastors Wood, of Ramsgate, and Foster, of Sydenham. Mr. Spurgeon prayed that all present might be found living in the constant expectation of the Saviour's coming.

The usual tea and College public meeting took place in the evening, when the spacious tabernacle was nearly filled. The speaking and singing was mostly done by the college evangelists. In addition to Messrs. Fullerton and Smith, Burnham, F. Russel, and Parker, Mr. Mateer gave an account of the past year's work in Kent and elsewhere. Other addresses followed, and the ministers adjourned to their annual supper in the Lecture Hall.

The closing session on Friday morning was one of unusual calm and refreshing. Not a few were feeling the need of retaining the blessing already received, and cherished fears lest they might let it slip. More, however, was in store. The sight of the six brethren called to the platform, still firmly adhering to their purpose to go to the Congo, even though it might cost life itself, not only moved the hearts of the ministers present, but served as a fitting prelude to the sermon that followed, by Mr. Spurgeon, based on the words, "I have set my face like a flint," joined with that other text, "He set his face steadfastly to go to Jerusalem." To partake of the emblems of the Saviour's broken body and shed blood was now most appropriate, while the clasping of hands and the singing of the Conference Hymn, according to the Scotch version,—

"Pray that Jerusalem may have Peace and prosperity," was a fitting finish to the enjoyments of the week, and seemed a sure prophecy of similar experiences in the years to come.

YOUNG MEN IN THE CITY.

ON Friday evening a joint meeting of the Gracechurch-street Branch of the Y.M.C.A. and the London Banks Prayer Union was held at the New Metal Exchange, Whittington Avenue, Leadenhall-street. The chair was occupied by Mr. J. Herbert Tritton. An address was delivered by the Bishop of Pretoria, seeking help on behalf of his Colonial work. By diagrams hung upon the walls of the room the audience were shown the geographical position of the Transvaal, as well as the new churches he had built, and the kraals, parsonages, and various towns connected with the district.

Following this, the annual members' meeting of the East Central Y.M.C.A. was proceeded with, the Chairman observing that it was the first meeting of a religious character ever held in the room. The report read by the secretary, Mr. N. R. Hughman, showed that the various means employed by the Association among young men had been kept in steady and continuous operation, and were attended with encouraging results. There are now 165 members, and 125 associates. Guy's Hospital has been regularly visited, the German Branch of the Association has been re-organised, services for youths in city offices have been held with encouraging results, and the evangelistic labours have been maintained with increased energy.

The Chairman explained that the Committee are contemplating securing this room with the adjoining smaller ones as the future head-quarters of the Branch. The meeting was held there that evening with a view of ascertaining the acoustic properties of the building, and also to discover how far they might count on the support of the members, should that course be adopted. Several gentlemen present also spoke, including Mr. J. H. Duncan, Mr. A. A. Head, Mr. Hind Smith, and Mr. R. M. Moir. Mr. Hind Smith said he had no doubt of success so long as the first principles of the Y.M.C.A. were adhered to.

M. MARC-MOUNIER, Professor of Comparative Literature at the University of Geneva, died in April at the age of fifty-five. To Geneva and France his death will be a very sensible loss as regards high-class and healthy literature.

THE RATCLIFF "BRIDGE OF HOPE."

LITTLE GIRL ROUGHS.

ATTENTION has lately been very forcibly drawn to the necessity of caring for young girls between the ages of twelve and sixteen. From the very commencement of the "Bridge of Hope" Mission this has been recognised. None can feel so keenly as those who work among the fallen, that to prevent evil is so much better than to attempt the remedy. Perhaps it is scarcely known that we carry on a considerable work amongst the rough young girls at the age when they leave the Board Schools.

Notwithstanding all that has been written or said, I do not think that we are half alive to the importance of taking hold of the children, boys and girls, at this critical age. It seems to me that if we are in any measure to cope with the evils of "Outcast London," we must prevent this flood of young life from pouring itself into the reservoir of wretchedness.

It is the saddest sight of all to see young boys loafing about unable to get situations, in many cases for want of clothes; and the girls, unable to get factory work, ragged, unkempt, and utterly careless of their future. It has been nothing short of agony to me to watch a young face, naughty and dirty though it might be when first I knew it, growing up to be hardened in the knowledge of evil, and the first care for an attractive personal appearance only developed to lead a life of sin.

There may be many questions as to how far it is right to relieve drunken or vicious parents of the care and responsibility of bringing up their children; but when the age of twelve or thirteen is reached, and the girl is left almost entirely to her own resources, there can be no question of our duty to step in, and bring all our influence to bear upon the child's well-being. With the girls who come to us the work is certainly very trying and difficult. Perhaps the most distressing feature is their ignorance of the commonest and yet most necessary household duties, and the entire lack of ambition to do things well.

It is useless to talk of what ought to be done by the mothers at home, they are almost as ignorant as the children.

I trust the time is near when some such scheme as that proposed by Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., will be carried out, and many of the Board Schools be turned for half the day into centres for industrial training, and where the children will be taught in some serviceable way the use of their hands.

But because things might be done, and we trust will be done soon, on a larger scale and in a better way, we must not let the time slip by without doing our utmost just now, and with the children who are now growing up. This is what we are striving to do in our Training Home. In a rough and ready way we have been able to give a start in life to many girls, and several of our most hopeful ones are doing well in Canada.

I want to make the very strongest appeal I can for help with these young girls. We have already a considerable influence over a large number, but I am sure that it is capable of much greater development, and we sadly want more workers in this particular branch of our work.

We have now four households—the Mission House, the Refuge, the little Hospital, and the Training Home, besides a considerable amount of work amongst the poor and degraded around us.

I believe that on the workers and on the work we have distinct signs of God's blessing, perhaps more so than at any previous time, and I cannot think that we shall be suffered to lack what is needful to carry on this very difficult work.

SOCIAL PURITY CRUSADE.—On Thursday last Mr. J. B. Wookey lectured to a large audience of men assembled in the Friends' Meeting House, Norwich. Rev. W. A. McAllen, who occupied the chair, said he did not think the purity movement was at all indicative of growing evil in the nation, but was rather a sign of healthy opinion which prevailed to a great extent on this question, it was also a growth of Christianity amongst the working classes. Mr. Wookey in a thrilling address, which lasted nearly two hours, implored the working men to band themselves together and to declare war against the traffic in their daughters by men whose seducing gold enabled them to escape the penalty of the law.

THE PROTECTION OF MINORS.

THERE is in this country a rising tide of indignation and dismay, at the growing exhibitions of public vice and the strange indifference of the police authorities, that our Government will have to consider, and that speedily, if they would command the confidence of the people. One striking indication of this feeling was the large assembly in Princes' Hall, Piccadilly, last Thursday evening, convened in order to protest against the lowering of the age limit for the legal protection of minors, in cases of moral delinquency. Many well-known public men wrote expressing regret at their absence and sympathy with the object of the gathering.

Mr. S. Morley (Chairman) said he was glad to join in the protest against lowering the age, but that was only a part of a very large question. The growing danger of immorality through incitements to evil in the streets, especially in the case of very young persons, is an evil which must be combatted. The condition of things is so terrible and infamous that we shall have to habituate ourselves to a knowledge of facts that are not at all palatable and pleasant. He referred to the work of the Central Vigilance Society which had been formed, and said that both men and women who are in danger must be protected. He felt sure that whatever legislation might be obtained from this Parliament, the next Parliament would see to it that the great masses of the people were fairly and equally dealt with.

Cardinal Manning, after expressing strong sympathy with the object that had brought the meeting together, moved a resolution calling for immediate legislation on the lines recommended by the House of Lords Committee. He regretted that this cause should have been deprived of so noble and able a leader as Earl Cairns, the Chairman of that Committee. It was a shameful thing that our legislation with respect to protected age should be much weaker in this country than in other countries. There were three points in the pending Bill that must be watched. The age is one point, and he hoped the vigorous moral sense of the House of Commons would restore the limit to sixteen. There is also a great inequality in the law as between the two sexes, and that must be removed. He asserted that young and innocent women in factory towns as well as in London were subjected to great and persistent torment and persecution from designing men in the streets; for this there is now no legal remedy, but it must be secured. The plea that innocent men might be unjustly accused, by placing the age at a higher limit, was groundless. The horrible foreign traffic, too, had hitherto been allowed to flourish; we must demand that all who take any part in it, either as principals or accomplices, shall be severely dealt with. He had been in many cities abroad, but he had never seen such a scandalous state of things as existed in London. He wished God-speed to all who were endeavouring to cope with the evil. There had been far too much delay in legislation on this question; but the Christian sense of the nation must so express itself as to make further delay impossible.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe said it had been his painful duty to read the evidence given before the House of Lords Committee, and he could only call it appalling. He invoked the people to agitate the subject so as to compel the Government to deliver us—as far as legal restraint can deliver us—from our deep degradation. A Liverpool Committee had recently reported that the great majority of depraved women in that city came from the lower classes of the community, and many of them were of very tender age. Mr. Peploe referred to the local enactments for Edinburgh and Glasgow, which had been most successful in banishing open vice. As to the lowering of the age, he ridiculed the idea that we should leave the young women unprotected for the mere risk that might befall a few of the other sex through unjust accusation. We must, at any rate, rid ourselves of present evil and leave the future with God, who will see that some way of deliverance is provided for any evils that may afterwards arise.

As one of the rank and file of the working classes, Mr. W. A. Coote described the pain and sorrow that were the portion of such as he, in seeking to warn and protect their daughters from the wiles of the seducer. Stringent steps must be taken to help these unprotected girls from the dangers that surround them. In eloquent and scathing terms he denounced the infamy and the injustice and the cruel irony of a system that would give him back his dog if it were stolen from him, but would not restore his daughter if she had been decoyed into a house of infamy.

The Chairman at this stage read a letter from Mr. Benjamin Scott, City Chamberlain, who said there was at present absolutely no legal protection for the chastity of a girl over thirteen. He asserted that the traffic in girls was going on daily and for that also there was no legal remedy. The ruin wrought on young women was not confined to those of the working classes. He instanced the cases of the daughter of a colonel, and others in good society, whose orphan or unprotected daughters had fallen by force or fraud.

Miss Ellice Hopkins moved a resolution expressing profound regret at the lowering of the age of legal protection to fifteen. She asserted that if the people knew what was actually going on throughout the country they would rise up and demand instant redress. She cited some dreadful and unspeakable facts as to the outrages that are being perpetrated on very young girls, without any legal remedy being available against the monsters who are the instruments of their ruin. She herself had found a child of seven years old in a public penitentiary in Leith, who had been ruined in a den of infamy there; one of the instruments of her ruin, who was found, got off scot free, because, said the magistrate, he was not the only one! Are we tamely going to submit to such a state of things, and to have our statute book degraded by such a law? An eminent M.P. had written to her saying that there were two sides to this question, and that he did not agree with her as to the raising of the age. For her part she hoped she should die a flat fish, with two eyes on one side of her head, and none on the other, before she could acquiesce in the moral obliquity of such devil's reasons as she had heard advanced on this point. If we are to meet the evil effectually, we shall have to make harbouring young girls a penal offence, at least up to the ordinary guardianship age of sixteen. She contended that English public opinion was ripe for a radical amendment of the law. Her experience of working men up and down the country convinced her that if they had their way they would put the protected age at a much higher figure. The difficulty lies not with public opinion, but with the protected classes, who will not run any risk themselves, even for the saving of the defenceless young. She looked with hope to the many righteous men in the House of Commons, whose hearts are sound on this subject. Let everyone do what they could to strengthen the hands of these gentlemen when the measure comes before that assembly.

Mr. W. Fowler, M.P., said the more he thought of this matter the more disgusted he was at the lowering of the age. He meant to move an amendment, raising the age to sixteen, though he believed there was to be opposition from quarters he scarcely expected. He scouted the idea of young girls under the protected age becoming the cause of the ruin of the other sex. He was even dissatisfied with the placing of the age at sixteen, and he hoped public opinion would be so educated that a further amendment would be demanded. As to the condition of the streets, they were simply a disgrace to civilisation, and we must insist on the police doing their duty in the matter. Mr. Fowler referred to the overcrowding of the poor as being one great cause of immorality, and he contended that the improvement of the habits of the people was a matter that must be gravely considered. He protested against the spending of so much time in the Houses of Parliament over the ends of the earth, while the welfare of our people at home was so shamefully neglected.

Mr. Percy Bunting referred to the fact that the report on the evidence taken before the House of Lords Committee placed the minimum limit of age at sixteen. Nothing had since happened to give the Government any feasible excuse for lowering it. The only shadow of an excuse was the opinion held by Lord Bramwell. The known and publicly-expressed attitude of that nobleman on social and moral questions precluded him from being accepted as an authority. The danger of men being unjustly accused was, Mr. Bunting contended, a mere bugbear and hallucination. A man can easily protect himself. He cited a long array of existing legal enactments relating to the care and custody of minors, all of which make the age of sixteen the lowest limit at which the consent of a young person is of any validity. All the more need of maintaining this limit in the important matter of morality.

The last resolution, memorialising the Government on the subject, was moved by Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P. He said it had become a sad and terrible necessity to exhume this question from its native darkness, in order to enlighten and arouse public opinion about it. Not so much legal precedent, as common sense and conscience, must decide the question, and it was incredible how any right-thinking man could be weak-kneed in the cause.

Rev. J. W. Horsley expressed the view that, unless strong language were used on this question, there would be no strong action. He was thoroughly ashamed at the state of the law as compared with that of other countries. He protested, amidst the approving cheers of the audience, against the time of the national legislature being wasted by political jabberers and party strife, while pressing social questions were neglected. Let all who have any political influence see to it that such men are returned to Parliament at the coming election as will attend to the moral safety and well-being of the people.

After some vigorous and telling words of protest from Rev. G. Brooks and Mr. Cobeldick, as representing the Lambeth Board of Guardians, which had unanimously deprecated the lowering of the age of protection, and sent them as a deputation to that meeting, the thanks of the assembly were accorded to the Chairman, who, in response, reiterated his earnest appeal for an awakened public conscience in this matter.

TIDINGS FROM COLAR.

A LETTER received by last mail from India gives a sad account of the unusual heat which is at present experienced in Colar, a station so well known to many, as the sphere of our sister Miss Anstey's labours in the Mysore territory. One of her faithful helpers in the Orphanage, writing to her on the 7th ult. says:—"The weather is something very awful, and daily it is becoming hotter. Cholera too has appeared in the town, and sixteen deaths from it have already been reported. In consequence of this sad epidemic the Government put a stop to the usual great gatherings at the annual fairs."

The intense heat has also completely laid aside Mr. Redwood, the young brother who two years ago went out to aid Miss Anstey, in her deeply important and onerous charge; indeed, we regret to learn from the last accounts, that his state just now seems very critical. The present general unhealthy state of the climate has told upon his far from robust constitution; and the extreme heat, more especially, has much tried his naturally weak heart, which now, it is feared, is seriously affected. The doctors have advised his immediate return home, and meanwhile friends have kindly received him at Bangalore, which is several degrees cooler. This change of course necessitated his wife accompanying him.

The withdrawal of Mrs. Redwood's personal supervision is felt to be a serious trial at this time, during the absence of Miss Anstey in England for much-needed rest. Prayer is asked that she may be guided with respect to her course in the matter. Having suffered much from nervous prostration previous to her return home, owing to the effects of the climate, Miss Anstey thought to go back later on in the year, taking with her two or three helpers. Now the existing state of things seems to indicate the necessity of her immediate return, which would in that case hinder her from holding, as she wished, several meetings for which friends had kindly arranged.

The agricultural aspect of the place at the opening of the year was very far from being favourable: indeed the grains, paddy and dhol, which are the staple food of the children of the Orphanage, are now being purchased at almost famine sums, or about two-thirds more in price than formerly. The lack also of the necessary rainfall is being seriously felt, and the land in consequence in some parts cannot be cultivated. Well is it, that our God is "A very present help in the time of trouble," or our sister's hands would indeed hang down. She greatly needs complete rest, yet difficulties have increased of late, and that from unexpected quarters, but her trust in God's faithfulness is unshaken. The letters from some of the children, speaking of their longing for "mother to be with them again," are very touching. Amidst many anxieties there is much cause for praise that in spite of extreme heat, general malaria, and the epidemic of cholera, the children of the Orphange have hitherto been graciously spared. Miss Anstey's address is, 23, Ely-place, Holborn, W.C.

NOTES ON THE SCRIPTURE UNION READINGS.

MAY 14.—EPHESIANS IV. 1–16.

v. 2.—"Forbearing one another in love."—Dear children, I want you to learn always to love one another, and never to quarrel. You should try to be kind and good-natured to other boys and girls. You should make it a rule never to be spiteful, never to be selfish, never to get into a passion, never to fight with one another. Boys and girls who do such things are not wise. Quarrelling is wicked; it pleases the devil, for he is always trying to make people wicked, like himself. It does not please God, for God is Love. Selfishness and quarrelling are most improper in Christian children. They should try to be like Christ, who was not selfish, and who pleased not Himself. As long as you live, dear children, love one another.—Bishop Ryle.

MAY 15.—EPHESIANS IV. 17–32.

v. 29.—"Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth."—Evil speaking is a sin against which young people need to be always on their guard. There are many forms of it to which they are tempted; as, for instance, untruthfulness, taking the name of God in vain, swearing, passionate words, and unclean expressions. All these are very sinful in God's sight, and will have to be given account of (Matt. xii. 36, 37). Let us make the resolve David did in Ps. xxxix. 1, and let us pray as he did (cxli. 3); and again in Ps. lxxi. 8.

MAY 16.—EPHESIANS V. 1–14.

v. 2.—"Walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us."—There was a little boy once who lived away in Switzerland, amongst the mountains that are covered with snow all the year round. One day he quarrelled with his brothers and sisters, and got very angry. He was in such a bad temper that even at bedtime he was sullen, and when they told him how wrong it was, he did not seem to mind at all. But when he got into bed he was too unhappy to sleep. He turned from side to side, feeling very miserable. At last he got out of bed, and kneeled down and said: "O God, I am very unhappy. I have done wrong in being so cross; I am very sorry. O God, forgive me, and help me, for Jesus Christ's sake." Then he got into bed again, feeling so happy because, as he said, his heart was filled with sweet peace. Who do you think it was? The great and good John Fletcher of Madeley, whose life you must all read when you are old enough.—Mark Guy Pearse.

MAY 17.—EPHESIANS V. 15–33.

v. 17.—"Be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is."—Those are wise boys and girls who read their Bibles, and learn many texts by heart. Those are wise boys and girls who pray God every day to give them his Holy Spirit. Those are wise who mind what their parents and teachers tell them, and take pains to be good. Those are wise who dislike all bad ways and bad words, and always speak the truth. Those boys and girls are wise who put their trust in Jesus Christ, and ask Him to take care of their souls. Such boys and girls will be kept safe. Jesus Christ loves them. He will not let them come to harm. Dear children, do not put off asking the Lord Jesus to take charge of you. Do not say to yourselves, "Oh, we shall have plenty of time by and by!" Who knows what may happen to you before long? Perhaps you may be sick and ill; perhaps you may lose all your kind friends, and be left alone. Oh, go and pray to Jesus now!—Bishop Ryle.

MAY 18.—EPHESIANS VI. 1–12.

v. 2.—"Honour thy father and mother; which is. . . ."—"This is the only commandment which has a special promise attached to it, which shows how specially God would have us attend to it. A beautiful example of this duty is found in the story of a boy who was once tempted by some of his companions to pluck some ripe cherries from a tree which his father had forbidden him to touch. "You need not be afraid," said they, "for if your father should find out that you had them, he is so kind that he will not hurt you." "That is the very reason," replied the boy, "why I would not touch them. It is true, my father may not hurt me; yet my disobedience, I know, would hurt my father, and that would be worse to me than anything else."

MAY 19.—EPHESIANS VI. 13–24.

v. 17.—"Take the sword of the Spirit."—At the coronation of the young King Edward VI., three swords were brought to be carried before him, as signs of his being head of three kingdoms. "There is one sword yet lacking," said the king, "the Bible. That book is the sword of the Spirit, and to be preferred before any other. Without that sword we can do nothing, we have no power." And so, it is said, at his command, the Bible was also carried before him in the procession. Read Matt. iv. 1—10, to see how Jesus used this weapon to overcome the tempter. We may all say of this, as David did of Goliath's sword, "There is none like it." See also Heb. iv. 12.

MAY 20.—PSALM LXV. 1–13.

v. 2.—"O Thou that hearest prayer, unto Thee shall all flesh come."

"The Lord upbraideth not the child of prayer,
Who pleads for lacking wisdom, and for grace;
From such He never takes his loving care,
Nor turns his face.

The prayer unwavering in the Saviour's name,
The plea for mercy, and the earnest cry
Ascend, as erst arose the incense flame
To God on high.

O Prayer, the saints' delight, the golden key
That doth unlock the treasury of the Lord,
Would that our hearts were ever given to thee,
With one accord!"

A MISSIONARY LETTER.

(From "The Sabbath School Magazine.")

To me, now that I know much about the ignorance and sin which are in heathen lands, there is not a grander sight anywhere than a Sabbath-school. You children have privileges that are priceless, and that are denied to the heathen. Therefore, you should prize your hours spent on Sabbath afternoons in the study of the Bible, and be attentive to your teachers, since God has put you in the way of receiving Christian instruction. What is the case in respect to heathen children? There is not one in a hundred who is learning to read in day-schools in South India; there is not one in two thousand in all India attending Sabbath-schools. Out of about 150 million young people in this great land, only 61,668 are attending Sabbath-schools. We are glad that they are so many, but how few they are as compared with those who never hear, and who may never once have heard about the name of Jesus! Wherever we go to preach we meet young people running about doing nothing. The caste-people—that is, the Hindus proper, the people who think they are so high, so learned, so pure in blood—do teach their children a little to read; but if we look at the Pariahs we find that very few, I might say only five hundred out of about ninety thousand who live in our mission district, can read. This is very sad.

Since I came here we have opened four schools for this very neglected class. They are really the slaves of the Hindus, and are very poor—so poor that they each get only about £3 a year to live on. That sum would not suffice to keep any of you for a whole year; but here a married man has to live on it somehow, and work hard too.

Besides these schools, we are daily preaching in the villages to the Hindus and Pariahs. But we have to take care to go to the caste-people first, and next to the out-castes, lest we offend the former. The Pariahs are much despised. If one were to touch a caste man he would be instantly defiled, and must bathe to remove the impurity. I have seen poor Pariahs going a long way off the road when they saw caste people coming. On the Western coast no Pariahs are allowed into the caste villages. Even here in some places it is the same. Some years ago no Pariah was allowed to enter a certain city except at mid-day, since there are no shadows then, the sun being overhead. As they would have long shadows in the mornings or evenings, they were debarred from coming then, lest such shadows fell on any caste man, thereby defiling him.

Hindus do not observe that custom now, but they have still many foolish ones. Hence we have to take care not to offend them, lest they shut their ears to us and move away.

In preaching we have men only to listen to us, though occasionally women may be seen peeping out of their doors to hear us singing Christian songs, and our preaching, too; but it is not understood that they should hear. Women and girls are not respected much in this country. It is very improper for any man to speak with any woman in the street. If a man, accompanied by his wife, has to go anywhere, he always makes her walk behind him at a respectable distance in Indian-file fashion. It is because of this custom that we have no female audiences, or audiences with females in them. The only females we have are those who may, through curiosity, peep out of their doors at us.

We have eight native preachers, who have each a small district to work in, containing a certain number of villages. These districts have each from 90 to 130 villages in them. Our custom is to go about, like our Saviour, from village to village to tell of the love of God. But it is very hard to reach the hearts of young and old; they are so ignorant, and worship so many gods and idols. For example, in Conjeveram there are more than 500 temples, each having an idol. There are stone idols in abundance in the open air, some of hideous shape, which might frighten some of you young people if you were to see them for the first time. Some of the people place a common stone and worship it; others have figures of serpents, of men, of women, and of monsters, which they worship. Altogether there is nothing so degrading as idolatry. Boys and girls will tell lies by the dozen without any concern. I hope that you will all be stirred up to take a deeper interest in mission work, and to love Jesus more for his kindness to you in casting your lot in Christian Scotland, where you can so easily learn of Him and his love.

MR. OSCAR OWERS AND MR. HERBERT R. FRANCIS are conducting a mission during May at the Conference Hall, Clapham-road. The afternoon Bible-readings are by Mr. Owers, and the evening evangelistic addresses by Mr. Francis. Many conversions have taken place.

WORKING BOYS IN LONDON.—On Saturday week the Earl of Aberdeen presided at the opening of a Home for Working Boys, at Tyndale House, Whitehead's-grove, Chelsea. Hon. T. H. W. Pelham stated that with the opening of this there were now eight of these Homes in different parts of London, accommodating about 300 boys. A large number of boys were continually coming up from the country to London, many of them without sixpence in their pocket. Another class came from industrial institutions, reformatories, and workhouse schools; and it was to save them from the moral degradation and sin which often ruined boys who were without proper supervision in London, that these Homes were established. To adapt and to furnish this Home cost £700, towards which £400 had been paid or promised. The Chairman said the present occasion was one of exceptional interest. The contributions which had been made towards the expense of that Home were in effect a wedding present, having been made by friends of Mr. Pelham on his marriage as a token of their goodwill and interest in a work in which he took so much interest. He was sure great benefit would result, not only to the boys, but to the community at large from this institution. Hon. Conrad Dillon, Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, Rev. L. Forster, and Rev. G. Barrington also addressed the meeting.

Notes and Comments.

WE are receiving many applications from Christian workers for supplies of tracts. Our fund for this purpose is much more than exhausted. We shall be glad to receive any sums that our readers may desire to devote to such an excellent object.

There has been a "royal progress" down at the East-end, which was all the more royal for the moral dignity that appertained to it. The Princess Louise made her tour through Whitechapel, Mile End, and Bethnal Green, not merely to make a display and attract a host of wondering spectators, but to perform a pleasant and worthy task—first, to open an Industrial Exhibition; secondly, to open a public garden; and, thirdly, to preside at the inaugural ceremony of the conversion of a churchyard into a healthful and enjoyable open space.

There was something specially remarkable about the public garden. It was formed out of land owned by a lady who had intended to let the spot on a building lease, but was induced to offer it to Lord Brabazon's Association. The local authorities were asked to take the place into their care, but, we are told, "they refused the duty." Two ladies then paid for a fountain, and a third defrayed the cost of laying out the grounds. So the work was done without "the authorities," and the Princess came to celebrate the conclusion. The people were delighted, and East London gave the Royal lady and her friends a joyful welcome. It is far from the East to the West; but where both are in one city, the distance is not too great for the rich to go forth and visit their humble neighbours.

Three hundred dock labourers, whom that morning even the docks could not employ, were entertained at a breakfast, "at which Lord Lorne, Miss Gladstone, and many others rendered good service in waiting upon the guests." "Thou shalt be blessed," said the Master, "for they cannot recompense thee." We doubt not there was a blessing down at Wapping that May morning, such as is often wanting in the gay and dazzling assemblies of the West-end. Such gatherings as these have heaven's smile upon them, and who shall say how far such intercourse may avail to unite the hearts of rich and poor, so that the latter shall bless the former, instead of launching forth that bitter curse which comes of despairing poverty. Human beings have hearts which respond to the touch of sympathy, just as surely as they resent the want of it. From the poor there may not proceed an immediate recompense; but the history of the French Revolution shows how the wretched can retaliate. If the rich and royal will not go to the poor, the poor may some day come to them in a form which will admit of no denial. The graceful and sympathising words of Mrs. Gladstone were a fitting pendant to the feast, and will not be forgotten.

Whatever be the ultimate issue of the negotiations between Great Britain and Russia, the Governments of the two empires have done a deed for which posterity will thank them. It is no small thing to find great nations, with immense armaments at their disposal, reverting to the humane and Christian plan of arbitration, instead of rushing in hot haste to the bloody and fearful fray. Surely such a step, whether or not it may have a satisfactory ending in this particular case, will tend more than ever to make wars between civilised countries impossible in the future. When will rulers come to see that red and ruinous war cannot settle any quarrel in accordance with the claims of justice; that might may be anything but right; and that God is by no means always on the side of the strongest battalions?

We are glad to know that Christians have united in many places to petition the God of the whole earth for such an overruling of the present political crisis as shall not only bring about a peaceful settlement now, but lay a firm foundation for a good understanding between the nations in the future. In the brighter prospects that are now to be discerned we cannot but recognise a gracious answer to these many earnest prayers. Why should a conflict between this country and Russia be deemed an inevitable thing, as some earnest Christians deem it, we regret to say? Cannot God turn the hearts of the rulers of Russia whithersoever He will?

The beer and spirit merchants are naturally enough indignant at the additional impost which the Government proposes to place on the articles they are licensed to manufacture and retail. We observe that an M.P., who has earned for himself a certain notoriety, has been counselling the liquor dealers to combine and to agitate, but he most discreetly advises them not to make any fuss about it if they hope to succeed. The friends of Temperance reform are not, in these days, likely to be caught napping; but it behoves every man to strengthen the hands of the Government by all possible means in their endeavours at the further restriction of this evil business.

We lately published an earnest plea by Lady Beauchamp on behalf of a Sailors' Rest in Havre, where so many incitements to intemperance and vice abound. The recent police-court revelations as to the traffic in human flesh and blood between this country and the port of Havre are some index of the snares that are laid on every hand for the unwary seafarer, and are one of the strongest possible arguments for providing him with a place of refuge. We earnestly trust that all who desire to maintain our fair fame as a Christian nation will lend a helping hand in this matter. We shall gladly receive, on behalf of Lady Beauchamp, donations towards the cost of erecting the Havre Rest.

We often hear statements as to the virtues of Buddhism, which has the largest following of any of the religions of the East, and it is in so many words asserted that there is no call for the preaching of Christ among the disciples of Buddha. Mr. Archibald Ross Colquhoun has spent some years in Asia, and has studied its religious systems. In his book "Among the Shans" (Field & Tuer), he thus sums up Buddhism:—

> "It is, in fact, a religion of unthankfulness and of utter selfishness. It is a system of fear and hope, but without the divine attribute of religion—love."

This is serious enough respecting two or three hundred millions of the fallen children of Adam.

The strong language of Dean Burgon, in The Guardian, against binding the revised New Testament with the Old about to be published, has been taken up by others, and many complaints are heard. There may be justice in the demand that those who have already the Revised New Testament should not be compelled to buy it again in the one-volumed edition. On the other hand, to issue the Old Testament by itself would be a new thing, and might introduce a separation of the Testaments, which would lead to much error.

"One of the Revisers" commences in last week's Rock a short series of articles on the Revised Version of the Old Testament. He gives the following interesting outline of the method of revision:—

> "The labour has been enormous. Beginning their task in June, 1870, the revisers have met for virtually a fortnight's labour no less than eighty-five times, and have given 792 days of six hours each to their work. After prayers the Bible was read in the original Hebrew, verse by verse; the suggestions of absent members were notified, and in case any suggestion was seconded, the discussion began. This usually was the case; if not, some member present would propose a change, and give his reasons. If this was seconded, it was, after discussion, put to the vote. On the first occasion a bare majority sufficed to carry the alteration. The changes thus approved were printed, and formed the first revise, which was circulated among the members, but considered as private and confidential. This revise formed the basis of the Company's work when going through the Bible a second time, and on this occasion a majority of two-thirds was required for the retention of any change. On this occasion, too, the Company had the benefit of the remarks of the American Revisers, to whom the first revise was always communicated. Finally, there was a third series of sessions for the consideration of objections and of points which had been reserved."

The writer says the revisers have been very careful not to debase the noble diction and stately rhythm which has made the version of 1611 so dear to its myriad readers. One thing they could not help. Much of the Old Testament has passed into the memory, and many phrases treasured there are of great beauty, but indefensible as a representation of the original. "Each change in a treasure so precious will call forth strong opposition." Doubtless all these changes will be closely criticised, but where the change is an undoubted gain in the sense, we should hope there will be no undue conservatism as to the mere form of words.

A correspondent interested in Mr. Fegan's work, and who has been resident in Toronto for over fifty-two years, sends to us a map of the north-western portion of the great Canadian Dominion, showing that the so-called rebellion amongst the Half-breeds and Indians is over 250 miles away from the line of the Canada Pacific Railway and the settlements where Mr. Fegan's boys are placed; so that there need be no apprehension about sending another band out this spring and coming summer. He speaks in high terms of the boys who were sent out last year. The north-west, he adds, offers happy homes to the surplus population of the old world, and to everybody who is capable and willing to work.

The following paragraph from The Church Missionary Intelligencer may elicit from many of our readers a fitting response:—

> "We would ask the prayers of our friends for our missionaries in the Saskatchewan districts, the scenes of the insurrection which has been causing so much anxiety in Canada. At the time of writing we have heard nothing of them."

A correspondent at Acton sends a remonstrance against the habit of offering intoxicants to gardeners and other workmen employed at this season. He cites the case, within his own knowledge, of a reclaimed drunkard who relapsed through being offered some ale by the lady of the house.

With the limited space at our command, and the pressure of intelligence and reports, we are not able to find room for detailed accounts of the great annual missionary gatherings that have just been held in connection with the Baptist, Wesleyan, and Episcopal bodies. There is less need for this, however, since the respective denominational organs give complete reports of these interesting assemblies. With respect to the morning meeting in Exeter Hall of the Church Missionary Society, the excellent summarised report in The Record says :—

> "The meeting was one that was not so much calculated to kindle interest in any particular mission field as to leave upon many a heart the feeling, 'I have not hitherto realised my responsibility in the great missionary work as I ought,' and it is not too much to hope that the result of the meeting will be not so much added guineas as more fully-consecrated lives."

The appeal by Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe was singularly stirring and solemn. At the evening meeting, some deeply interesting reminiscences of General Gordon were given by Rev. J. R. Hall, from Palestine.

The chief outstanding features of interest at the Baptist Missionary meeting were Mr. Comber's graphic delineation of work on the Congo, and Mr. Richards' statement with respect to the vast empire of China. At the Wesleyan meeting, the Chairman, Mr. H. H. Fowler, M.P., had the unusual courage to impeach the enterprise of the Society; his outspoken words will doubtless spur on his brethren to attempt greater things for the evangelisation of the world :—

> "The income of the Society (said Mr. Fowler) had not exhibited that elasticity which the prosperity of the churches at home indicated should have taken place. During the last twenty-five years—perhaps less—Japan and Central Africa had been opened to missionary enterprise, but Wesleyans were not there. He did not consider this worthy of the footsteps of men who, prior to 1850, had founded mission after mission in every quarter of the globe. He doubted whether they were holding their own to-day. The lagging-behind principle was not the material of which great men and great churches were made. The churches of England had not done their duty towards Japan, and if they wished to rescue the Society from the trough in which it was floundering at the present time, they would have to put before the people a new enterprise. When they had the men to take up work in Japan and Central Africa, he was sure that the Church would follow them with an avalanche of pecuniary support."

In his speech at the anniversary of the Bible Society in Exeter Hall, the Archbishop of Canterbury used these words :—

> "We should deceive ourselves if we think that this nation is yet permeated with Christian principles or truths, or the knowledge of the Bible. Far from it, when within a few days a Government which is anxious to do right in such a matter, tells you it cannot undertake to protect girls between fifteen and sixteen years of age, because the sentiment of the nation is not yet ripe for their protection. There is a great deal yet to be learnt in England from the Bible. I ask no further proof, if that judgment is true—and I know it has been given in anxiety—of how much there is yet to be done in England to raise our morals to a Christian standard."

If his Grace could have been present at the meeting in Princes' Hall two days later, and heard Miss Ellice Hopkins' address before he gave utterance to the second sentence we have quoted, we scarcely think it would have passed his lips. This nation stands in sore need of being permeated with Christian principles without a doubt; but if they have really made the unripeness of public opinion on this question a plea for the mutilation of their bill, the Government have been grossly deceived. We think it probable that some of their own habitual supporters in the Lower House will undeceive them as soon as the opportunity offers. Then we shall discover whether or not they are, as the Archbishop says, "anxious to do right in such a matter."

At the meeting at Princes' Hall (see p. 10), nothing was more evident than the conviction expressed by the Chairman and nearly every speaker, that the reticence hitherto observed on these subjects must be abandoned; and that, however painful it may be, if we wish to preserve our country from falling, as did Greece and Rome, from internal corruption, we must not shrink from speaking plainly of the sins against pureness of life which are becoming so alarmingly prevalent, and causing the degradation of girls and children of a constantly diminishing age.

In Christian Progress for May, the editor complains that there are Sectarian or Denominational Scripture Reading Unions springing up, and that some of the members of his Scripture Reading Union have ceased to be members, and have joined a merely Sectarian Scripture Reading Union. And he remarks that it is better to belong to a Scripture Reading Union composed of all sects. The correspondent who calls our attention to this complaint quite agrees with the editor, and adds: "But if it is better for Christians of all denominations to unite in reading the Word of God, it would be better for them all to unite in worship and communion, and obey the command of the Lord and Master, 'That they all may be one, that the world may believe,' &c. I feel more at home in a meeting with Christians of all denominations than in a meeting of only one denomination. I feel certain that sects and denominations are wrong." So did the Apostle Paul: See 1 Cor. i. 10—13; xi. 18, 19; xii. 25. Eph. iv. 3—16.

In his sermon on "Lot's Choice," to senior scholars in the City Temple last week, Rev. H. Price Hughes said some strong and striking things on the importance of Christian consistency; e.g. :—

> "The Lots are the scandal and the curse of Christendom. They are the men who expose us to the sneers and the ridicule of the children of this world, and of atheists who tell us that Christian men are no better than others, sometimes not so good. How terrible is the fact implied in an evangelistic discourse delivered recently by Professor Drummond. He said he was walking through Edinburgh with a friend of his, distinguished in learning and in culture; but, alas! like too many of that class, he was an Agnostic, and he was a member of an atheist club. As they passed a gentleman in the street, this atheist turned to Professor Drummond, and said: 'That is the gentleman who has induced the majority of the members of our club to join us.' 'But,' said Professor Drummond, 'he is a deacon of the Presbyterian Church.' 'Yes,' was the reply; 'but his life is so inconsistent with his profession, that he has driven more men into our club than anything else I know.' I do not admit the logic of the argument, for however inconsistent that man may have been, it does not touch the claims of Christ. But it is an awful thing to see a man whose life is a contradiction of his religious profession."

There have been days when the need of the Church and of the world was the teaching of the doctrine of the Gospel. What is now needed is its practice. Since the Apostles' days the way of salvation has never been so clearly preached or so generally understood; what is now needed is that the intellectual knowledge should become conscientious conviction, and that the truth should be done as well as known.

With regard to housing and feeding the poor, and leading them to temperate habits, much is being done. But there needs more courage, more backbone, more unflinching purpose to insist upon justice and righteousness. There are subjects which, like nettles, must be firmly grasped, but from which preachers and others shrink for fear of being stung. For example, what a humiliating thing it is that a correspondent of a secular paper should be able to bring this accusation of silence against the professed ministers of Christ :—

>
> DEAR SIR,—You have manifested much interest in the case of the poor girl Hearnden, spirited away, no one knows where, by the woman Johnston, who, in about three weeks, will come out of prison, carrying the secret with her—whether the child be dead or leading a life of ignominy.
>
> Most people in Folkestone appear inclined to think, especially in the light of recent revelations, that the child has been sent abroad for immoral purposes. I adhere to my former views, expressed in your columns, and believe that the poor victim has been murdered.
>
> But what can be said for the clergy and the Nonconformist ministers of Folkestone, none of whom has evinced the slightest interest in the fate of this poor child? . . . According to general belief, a little white slave from Folkestone is undergoing the worst of all kinds of slavery, and ever since this idea has become to be generally credited not a minister of religion in the town has interested himself in the matter. . . . This unexplained abduction or murder means for the poor a vital question of liberty. The guilty woman, after passing twelve months in gaol, leaves, carrying her secret with her.
>
> . . . . The basis of my political creed is that the liberty and the safety of the least of her Majesty's subjects should be as sacred, and as much hedged about by protection, as that of the peer of the realm. In the year, however, 1885, it seems that belief in such an old-fashioned doctrine has given place to energy to secure freedom for the blacks, with the result, at least in Folkestone, of complete indifference to the slavery of such unfortunate children of peasants as the victim Hearnden.

If not murdered, where is this child? Is not that a question to which it is the business of every right-thinking man and woman in Folkestone to seek for an answer?

We understand that Mr. Spencer Walton is open to take tent or seaside work during the months of June and July. His address is 4, Alderbrook-road, Clapham Common. We have recently reported his highly successful missions at Brighton.

In the current number of THE SUNDAY AT HOME (Religious Tract Society), we are glad to find a most appreciative sketch of Miss Gough's admirable work among young women employed in refreshment bars and restaurants. We trust that many of those who read the sketch will be led to take a deep and practical interest in this important branch of the work of the London Y.W.C.A.

M. LELIEVRE, who is now in Algeria collecting information as to the best basis and methods for evangelistic work there, has written to L'Evangéliste, of which he is the editor. He was in Constantine, a town built on a large high rock, containing more than 40,000 inhabitants, and 5000 soldiers in garrison. A Roman Catholic Church is installed in one of the finest mosques, where the crescent and the cross appear side by side. Protestant worship is carried on in a modest little building in a side street, where only Mussulmans live. M. Lelièvre, in taking note of the places he has so far visited, thinks that the Protestants have too little religious life themselves to undertake any missionary work among the natives, Arabs, Kabyles, Mozabites, or Jews. The French in general despise or hate these races, who have, however, grand qualities, especially the Kabyles, who for morality and industry are very superior to the rest.

TIMES OF REFRESHING.

By Dr. MOXEY.

MR. J. M. SCROGGIE.

HAVING returned from Blackheath, and a vacant Sabbath intervening between one engagement and another, Mr. John M. Scroggie ran through to Dunfermline. The fire burns in our brother's bones with Jeremiah-like intensity, but, alas! in spite of his naturally strong constitution, such a wear and tear of physical and moral force will tell in the long run, and I was sorry to see his erewhile ruddy countenance now pale and haggard. I doubt not, however, that the fine air of Campbeltown, his next sphere of labour, will set him up again. I bespeak the prayers of your readers for that little town of 3000 inhabitants, cursed as it is with no fewer than twenty-six distilleries.

The soul-winning work in Dunfermline still goes on, and a week's meetings are arranged for North-Queensferry, close to the great Forth Railway Bridge now in progress of construction. It is hoped that some of the men employed on the works may be reached. At the same time it must be recorded as a matter of thankfulness to God that many Christian agencies are at work, for the moral, intellectual, and spiritual amelioration of the large nondescript population that this stupendous undertaking has attracted to the neighbourhood.

REV. E. P. HAMMOND

continues the blessed work among the children in Glasgow, and The North British Daily Mail still gives excellent reports of the meetings. I only wish that Christians in other places would wake up to the fact that God can save little children as well as grown-up people. I heard it stated some time ago by a prominent Christian worker that in the country towns of Scotland the average, among young men, of avowed Christians was only four per cent. I do not know whence he derived his statistics, but if true, it is appalling to think of 96 per cent. of our young men without Christ, and Christian parents in the face of it opposing, because sceptical of the conversion of those lads when children. I wish Mr. Hammond could start in every large town in our land a Conference for the discussion of this very point.

THE STUDENTS' HOLIDAY MISSION.

With the Summer University Course, beginning in May, and continuing for three months, the Students' deputation work over the country comes to an end for the present, but such an impetus has been given to Christian life and work all over Scotland, that in August we anticipate a recommencement of the mission. Professor Drummond is at present in London, after a flying visit to Brighton, where he found a deputation of students engaged in a series of most successful meetings. There, as in Glasgow, the secular Press have given several sympathetic notices of the work. One of them remarks:—"There is now being conducted at the Gaiety Music Hall, Brighton, a mission to young men, conducted by a party of medical students from the Edinburgh University, who have devoted themselves to this work in different parts of the country. On each occasion, so far, the room has been closely packed by audiences composed entirely of men, young men considerably predominating. The proceedings consist of singing, prayer, and short addresses by the students. Their mode of address is somewhat peculiar, but well adapted for the object in view—the lifting up of young men above the commonly low level of sensuality and infidelity, to an apprehension and acceptance of the higher and more manly principles of the spiritual life. Without any pretence of what is commonly regarded as eloquence, the speakers have a directness in argument, and an earnestness of manner in setting forth the results of their own actual experience, which cannot fail to carry the weight of conviction to many minds. The characteristics of the meetings are simplicity and earnestness, combined with a manly tone and soundness of argument. One of the speakers has, indeed, powers of exhortation of a high order, and another, perhaps, great powers of persuasion. All of them are listened to with profound and reverent attention, and the spectacle of a congregation of men so engaged, combined with the accidental and somewhat incongruous associations of dramatic and stage accessories, from the decorations, proscenium, and other trappings of the old hall of the Gaiety still remaining, is very striking. The arrangements have been conducted by certain clergy and ministers of the town, combined with the executive of the Y.M.C.A."

IN EDINBURGH AND GLASGOW, and in places accessible by train for a visit from Saturday till Monday morning, the students' services are still eagerly sought for, and I hear of blessed results following the Sunday-night meetings in Viewforth Free Church, Edinburgh, and in the great circus building in Greenock. Dr. Barbour was in Greenock with the students on the 3rd inst., and I hope to be there on the 10th. A friend writes to me: "The students' work among the young men is the best I ever knew of here." This is written in full recollection of the wonderful ingathering among that class during the visits of Mr. Moody and Mr. John M. Scroggie. The very fact that, out of a population of only 60,000, the largest available building should be crowded with an audience of 3000 men—hundreds being turned from the doors—is at once a proof of the interest excited and the results obtained.

BRADFORD.

I have myself had the privilege of captaining a team of North of England students in the town of Bradford, wherein, in spite of many adverse circumstances, many souls, we believe, decided for Christ, and several young Christian men professed to have experienced a quickening of the spiritual life, which culminated in a resolution to carry on the work we had begun. I did not see a single minister all the time I was there, although the clergy of the different denominations were specially invited by circular to interest themselves in the meetings. But several laymen of position connected with the Y.M.C.A. seem willing to aid the work, and I earnestly beg prayer for that great city wherein are more than six score thousand persons who greatly stand in need of a wave of spiritual blessing. The students of Airedale College (Congregational) kindly invited us to tea, and we had the privilege of addressing them; and earlier in the day we had a most interesting meeting with the youths and boys attending the Technical College.

At our last evening meeting I spoke to two young men, both deeply anxious, one quite broken down. While I endeavoured to point them to Jesus through the Word, other three came round us, while another sat at a little distance. All professed to come into the light, and returned thanks to God. My dear fellow-workers and other labourers in the vineyard were similarly engaged, so that we have much reason to remember and praise God for our experiences in Bradford.

THE LIVERPOOL BETHSHAN (11, Great George-square).—The Report issued a few weeks since, says:—"During the year ending March 1885, 312 have been received at the Home, 421 have been visited at their homes, and 356 anointed at the Home; many of these have been healed by faith and prayer, and a great blessing has been given to the soul also. The meetings throughout the year have been full and often overflowing, in the large room and lobby; and we may state that many of the sick ones who have been healed have returned to give praise to God. These include several cases of consumption, bronchitis, heart disease, abscesses, hip disease, cancers, failing sight restored, and severe internal bruises caused by accidents of various kinds. The workers are Mrs. Crook, Mrs. Staveley, Mrs. Halsall, and Mr. T. Halsall." From a hydropathic establishment, M. M‘F. writes to us that she has been healed, at the Liverpool Bethshan, of the effect of injuries to the spine received thirteen years ago.

RESCUE WORK IN MANCHESTER.

A CONFERENCE on this subject was held on Thursday, April 30, in Roby's Schoolrooms, under the presidency of Mr. J. Wakefield MacGill, Secretary of the Manchester City Mission, the Society under whose auspices the Midnight Meeting work of the City is carried on. After a reference to the case of Mrs. Jefferies, the Chairman stated that during the past six months the Lord had guided the Rescue Work in a wonderful way. Ample funds, without any collecting, had been provided for the work. One gentleman had sent thousands of copies of the "White Cross Series," which had been given away to men upon the streets of Manchester.

Mr. Langley, the superintendent, mentioned that during the winter they had held about twenty Midnight Meetings, attended by about 1300 women. Nearly 200 had been aided by the Mission in one way or another towards the attainment of their desire for a purer life. The workers purposed holding monthly midnight meetings during the summer, and also devoting their attention to holding meetings of men, so as to interest the other sex in the protection of the young and innocent from the snares that surround them.

The Conference was of a conversational and thoroughly practical character, dealing with the best method of conducting Midnight Meetings; the need of Probationary Homes; the necessity for the elimination of the Penitentiary element from Reformatory Institutions, and the substitution of "loving-kindness and tender mercy;" the best plans for reaching those girls who have not yet sunk to the lowest stratum; Lock hospitals, and the wisdom of establishing private institutions of this kind. After a discussion of nearly three hours, followed by a prayer-meeting, between fifty and sixty workers went forth two and two, and after two or three hours of labour on the streets, brought in about eighty young women to a Midnight Meeting.

THE BIBLE SOCIETY.

AT the annual meeting, in Exeter Hall, of thi great Society the venerable President, Lord Shaftesbury, was able to put in an appearance, and received a remarkable demonstration of welcome from the large assembly. The most interesting features of the lengthy report were the four millions of copies of the Scriptures circulated; the 955,000 copies of the penny Testament; the publication of the sixth edition of Delitzsch's Hebrew New Testament for the Jews; the fact that England last year "has distributed in Russia—unhindered by its Government, unbanned by its Church—more than two-fifths of a million of copies;" and lastly, the paragraph relating to the help afforded the Society by the colonies.

In his brief and pathetic address from the chair Lord Shaftesbury testified to the deep desire shown by many in the humbler ranks of life to acquire Bible knowledge. The Archbishop of Canterbury referred to the issue of the Revised Old Testament as one of the great events of the year. He made a good point when he said: "We hear on every side of the work and efforts of infidelity, and, as some people are pleased to think, its conquest; those who are terrified by these phenomena do not take into account half enough such a phenomenon as this Bible Society presents." For real worth and weight and stately eloquence the speech of Professor Elmslie bore away the palm. We have not the heart to condense it, and, therefore, give its main portions at length on another page. Rev. E. A. Stuart stated a fact which must have been a welcome one to all who heard it—that while the new penny Testament is sold considerably under cost, there is no under payment of those by whom it is produced. Rev. A. Meille, agent of the Society in Italy, had a good report to give of Bible distribution in that priest-ridden country, notwithstanding many difficulties and much opposition. Equally stimulating was the account given by Rev. W. Muirhead with respect to China; altogether the friends of the Bible Society, from the facts put before them on this occasion, may well thank God and take courage.

MONTE VIDEO.—The Evangelista says:—"A Buddhist priest has just been converted to Christ after twenty years of sacerdotal idolatry. He was baptized at Burna, and later became a deacon of the Baptist Church of which he had been a member."

LONDON CITY MISSION.

WHEN one considers the organised work of agencies like the London City Mission, which, by its 461 missionaries, visits half a million of the poorest in the Metropolis, one feels that now-a-days the poor and the working classes in this city are appealed to without exception, and that their homes are both more completely reached and more accessible than those of their wealthier brethren. The chair at the annual meeting last week, was taken by Sir William McArthur, who read a letter from the Earl of Shaftesbury explaining his inability to be present. An abstract of the annual report was read by the Rev. T. S. Hutchinson. It mentioned that on May 16 the City Mission would complete its fiftieth year; in honour of the occasion there would be a service in Bloomsbury Chapel at 3 p.m on June 3, and a meeting in Exeter Hall on the evening of the same day. The Jubilee Fund, for which it was hoped £20,000 would be raised, has only reached £15,931, but is not yet closed. Happily this extra effort has not lessened the ordinary receipts of the year. The report speaks in a most cheerful tone about the work and prospects all round. The City Missionaries have evidently made their position felt, and have not the kind of difficulties to encounter which were recorded in earlier days.

One of the most graphic, as well as one of the most instructive parts of the report, is that which deals with the public-house visitation. Here it is stated that "whereas at first hard blows and an ignominious expulsion from the house had often to be endured, such events in the present day are of rare occurrence." Many will rejoice, on the authority of such a report as that of the City Mission, to have the assertion that "Information received from various districts tends to prove that the public-house trade is on the wane." A district is referred to where in eleven years the population has increased by over 70,000, whilst the public-houses hav deecreased by twenty-three, and the coffee-houses increased by fifty-two. Another much-needed branch of operations is that amongst the foreign residents, for whom small provision is made by the churches of their own countries; and were it not for the nine City Missionaries, who address them in their own languages, "many thousands would live and die in London ignorant of Christ and his Gospel." One sentence towards the close of this singularly valuable report summarises the happy results of the united efforts of all Christian bodies and agencies in the last fifty years in London. "Crime has decreased; brutal sports have diminished; drinking habits have been to some extent checked; the Gospel has gained for itself not only a patient hearing, but even earnest attention, and multitudes have been eternally saved."

The Chairman having congratulated the meeting upon the most able, exhaustive, and interesting report to which they had listened, Rev. Donald Fraser said there were multitudes who fell unnoticed between the Churches, or from various causes either absented themselves from or were indifferent to church or chapel. The City Mission met this need by the employment of living men, who, believing the Gospel, carried their faith and sympathy to the homes of the people. In reply to the objection that Bibles and tracts were given to people when they wanted better dwellings and more leisure, better taste, and social justice, he referred to the Bishop of Peterborough's late book, which had ably shown that Revelation alone could both explain man's condition, and adequately meet his wretchedness by bidding him arise and go to his Father.

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., lamented the wider separation between rich and poor as cities enlarged, for many links which ought to bind society together gradually became severed, and but for this and kindred agencies great spaces would be given over to wretchedness and rags. The future of London was one of the most desperate problems for the social reformer and the philanthropist. Were it not for the conserving influence of Christianity, some mighty revolution must break out and sweep it away like ancient Babylon or Rome. He expressed his liking for special missions to special classes, and advocated mission-halls, with reading and lecture-rooms, and rooms for amusement, to which the City missionaries should be attached, as an antidote to the number of working men's clubs, where drunkenness prevails to a frightful extent, and there is everything to deprave men, and where the Sunday is devoted to infidel lectures and such-like occupations.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe urged his ministerial brethren heartily to sympathise with this Society. Having alluded to a meeting he had seen of 250 navvies engaged in the South Kensington Subway, and to the fact that out of 1600 cabmen 300 were definitely on the side of Christ, he impressed upon the missionaries the absolute necessity of close communion with Christ, if amongst the dismal and depressing surroundings of their daily work they were to maintain a high spiritual tone and preserve their own spirits from being lowered by these sad influences. Rev. R. P. Downes followed in a very animated speech, abounding in brilliantly poetical passages, which were loudly cheered. He appealed for the heathen at home. A South African missionary had testified that he saw more wickedness in three months in London than in twenty years in Africa. Indeed, if we cannot save the heathen at home, how can we save the heathen abroad? Some persons said that those who went to the slums could find no Christians in the slums; and that was true, for as soon as persons became Christians they carried their children away out of those contaminating associations.—Condensed from "The Record."

RAILWAY-MEN AT EXETER HALL.

THE friends of railway-men all over the country have much cause to rejoice at the progress of the Railway Mission. Two or three years ago, little knots of railway-men who loved the Lord met together in an isolated way, to strengthen and encourage each other in the Christian life; but there was little cohesion between group and group. Then the Railway Mission began its work, first in the great London centres, next in the provinces, until, finally, the Railway-men's Christian Association started into existence through the Railway Mission, and became the unifying and consolidating power of the whole.

On Wednesday evening, last week, the second annual meeting of the Railway Mission was held in Exeter Hall, under the presidency of Lord Aberdeen. The sight from the platform must have been very inspiriting to those who had striven so hard to gather together a representative body of Railway servants. More than three thousand of them were present. The Chairman, in giving them a hearty welcome said he perceived they were filled with the missionary spirit. No doubt they might be called "eccentric." That should make them rejoice. Many of them would know that the eccentric in an engine was a part of the machinery which worked from a different centre to the rest; without the eccentric the other machinery was useless. Then his lordship went on to trace the beautiful conclusion of his illustration: that the centre around which those before him moved was Jesus Christ.

Mr. George Clarke, the General Secretary, read the Annual Report, of which the following is a brief summary: Regular meetings for railway-men and their wives are now held in twenty-nine more places than last year, and there are in all eighty-one mission stations. The objects of the mission are to preach the Gospel to the employés (hitherto a much neglected class), and to help those of them who know its power to preach it to others. The Railway Men's Christian Association has only been formed twelve months, and numbers already about two thousand members. The mission does not form churches but tends to strengthen them. More than five millions of tracts, &c., have been distributed, and the monthly organ, The Railway Signal, has a circulation of 22,000. A campaign in Scotland is contemplated in the course of the next few months; for this the ground is being prepared by the men themselves. The income of the Mission for 1884 was £3000 17s. 3d. Besides this a large sum was spent direct by voluntary helpers and the men themselves. Most of the branches meet their own general expenses. At Westbourne-park a new hall and coffee-house have been built at a cost of £1100, and another hall is about to be put up at West Brompton for the District Railway men.

After Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard, the treasurer, had given the items of expenditure, the noble Chairman invited a foreman shunter to come forward and give his testimony. "As a result of the Railway Mission," the man said, "the men are better in themselves; they are happy in the Lord, and are going on their way rejoicing to heaven. . . . Railway men and their families are not the only persons benefited by their trusting in the Lord. Railway Companies are better for it; so are the general public. Why are the Railway Companies the better for the Railway Mission? Because we teach the men not to steal, nor to lie, nor to swear, and to abstain from all intoxicating liquors; and, my Lord, I would not give a fig for a Christian man if he did not do his employment better than the unconverted man." The speaker's brother railway-men cheered him lustily as he spoke, modestly, clearly, and to the point. Then Mr. Lewis, a Liverpool man, spoke; Mr. Drew, a "private" guard from Swansea, followed; Mr. Bell, from Carlisle, came next; after him Mr. Potts, representing the West London Branch. "The ladies who come along with us," he said, "are Christians in pocket as well as in heart." Guard Pearce (District Railway), who spoke last, found a warm place in the hearts of his brethren. The testimony of these six simple, manly men was good to hear, and every word they uttered was clear proof of the value of the mission to railway men. One and all testified to the great good they had received from the Christian ladies and gentlemen who work amongst them.

The task of introducing the collection was left in the practised hands of Mr. T. A. Denny, and the following gentlemen promised £100 each: Mr. T. A. Denny, Mr. E. Denny, and Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard. Miss Du Pré promised an annual subscription of £80, and Lord Aberdeen gave ten guineas. The collection from the people amounted to more than £40.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes then rose and made a remarkable speech, in which he denounced in scathing terms the light fine which had lately been passed upon a notoriously wicked woman; and he begged his hearers to use their political privileges in the direction of better laws for the daughters of the poor, who were so little protected from the designs of vicious men and women, and for the alteration of that usage which enables the wealthy to keep the public-houses from their midst, whilst the poorer classes are compelled to have the gin-shops at their very doors whether they will or no.

During the evening the Clapham Gospel Male Choir rendered some of their beautiful choruses, Mr. Sargent played on the grand organ, and the Railway Mission Hand-bell Ringers delighted the enthusiastic host.

Prior to the meeting in Exeter Hall, delegates from all over the country met in the Y.M.C.A. Lecture Hall, at Aldersgate-street, and told of the progress of the work in the different railway centres.

Requests for Prayer.

FOR Gospel tent work, in the Border Counties, during summer months, beginning May 17.——For blessing on Gospel services at Mission Hall, Chiswick, conducted by Mr. Walter Notman.——For blessing upon evangelistic services in a large hall just to be opened in Sheffield.——For blessing on a mission by Rev. John Bright, blind evangelist, at Southwold, Suffolk, next week.

M. L'ABBE CROST, The Signal says, has resigned the post of Chaplain at the Hotel Dieu, and is now at Montaubon, studying Protestant Theology, with a view to becoming a pastor. The Signal also states that a committee is regularly at work helping priests, of whom there are several, to deliver themselves from the bondage of Romanism and enter into the liberty which the Gospel gives.

THE GOSPEL AMONG THE SEAMEN.—Gospel addresses were given by Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Maynard, of Wimbledon, on Tuesday evening last week at the Seamen's Chapel, London Docks. Notwithstanding the unfavourable character of the evening the chapel was filled with seamen, and earnest attention was paid. Much blessing resulted, and thirteen seamen remained to sign the pledge as a commencement of a new life.

HERMITAGE ROAD, GREEN LANES, N.—Some time ago, with the consent of the trustees, I transferred my Iron Mission Chapel in Grafton-road to the Rev. M. Washington. I am now arranging to commence services on Sunday, May 17, in a small hall in a new district. With the exception of an iron building (Church of England), and that is some distance off, there is no place of worship within about a mile of this hall. I ask for the prayers and sympathy of your readers. W. Forbes.

Letters to the Editor.

EMIGRATION FOR DEAF MUTES.

SIR,—I observe in THE CHRISTIAN of April 23 a notice of a scheme set on foot to promote the welfare of the deaf and dumb, who have difficulty in supporting themselves here. The plan is to form a colony of these afflicted persons in North-west Canada, and assist them to emigrate.

I am not able to say whether they would find the conditions of existence more favourable in Canada than here; but it is perfectly certain that to collect these people together in a colony would be attended by such serious evils that the Dominion Government, if informed of the scheme, would hardly sanction it. In all well-regulated institutions the sexes are kept separate as much as possible, yet there is a strong tendency to inter-marry amongst deaf-mutes, and as the defect is heriditary, their children are often also deaf.

When in America last year, on a visit to the institutions for the blind in that country, I also paid some attention to the kindred institutions for the deaf. I had much conversation on this subject with Professor Graham Bell, the inventor of the telephone, who is probably the greatest living authority on the subject. It seems that at present 84 per cent. of all the deaf mutes in America, who marry at all, marry others similarly afflicted. The result is a most alarming increase in the number of deaf mutes. This evil results, in a great measure, from the congregation of these people in special schools, and Professor Bell is actively engaged in endeavouring to have deaf children scattered through the ordinary schools in the country, instead of being sent to special institutions. It is obvious that the mischief done would be increased tenfold by forming a colony of these unfortunates. T. R. ARMITAGE, M.D.

"BAPTISMS AND LAYING ON OF HANDS."

DEAR SIR,—Are the six points mentioned in Heb. vi. 1, 2, Jewish or Christian? A brother in Christ has argued that they are Jewish. Will you allow me to plead on the other side?

It is indeed true that the ordinances of immersion and of laying on of hands were found both under Moses and under Christ. How, then, shall we discriminate?

(1) While both ordinances are found in Judaism and Christianity, they are no foundation principles of Moses. Why was circumcision omitted, which bound a man to keep the whole law?

(2) The four doctrines named are not first principles of the law of Moses. They are first principles of Christianity. (1) Moses did not call to repentance. His covenant was based on a promise not to sin (Ex. xxiv. 7). He cannot forgive a single wilful sin (Numb. xv. 30.) He did not call to leave "dead works." His religion was of the flesh, and if the worshipper were circumcised and ceremonially clean, and his sacrifice without blemish, that was all he could demand. Inquiry into the state of the heart, as alive or not toward God, was a question first pressed by Christianity.

(2) "Faith toward God" is the demand of our religion. Moses called for works as the foundation of his way of salvation (Rom. x. 5-10).

Now, to return to the two ordinances. I must first observe that our translators have wrested the two genitives out of their order in the Greek. Instead of "of the doctrine of baptisms," it should be "of the baptisms of instruction (or 'doctrine') and of laying on of hands." The only excuse for the usual translation is that in taking the two genitives in their order in the Greek, you cannot make sense of them. This plea is removed by the translation I have given. So taken, the sense is excellent, and the order of the two is that of Scripture.

(3) First came the baptism of water. And before that, the man was to be instructed in the principles of discipleship (Matt. xxviii. 10). So immersion was "the baptism of doctrine," and thus it stands out distinct from Moses' initiatory rite, which was ordinarily administered to the infant of eight days old, who could not be instructed.

(4) After the baptism of water came the baptism of the Holy Ghost, which was administered by the laying on of hands (Acts viii. 12-21, Matt. iii. 11).

(5) Point five is, "The resurrection of the dead." Now, this was no first principle of Moses. On the contrary, his promises and threats pertained to this present life. "And the law hath dominion over a man (only) as long as he liveth" (Rom. vii. 1). But the resurrection of the dead was taught as a first principle by our Lord and his apostles.

(6) The last point is "eternal judgment." Now, this is no first principle of Moses, or even of the prophets. The judgments of which they spoke were temporal judgments on living individuals, and on nations. "Eternal judgment" is the early teaching of Christianity.

Thus then, I think it clear, that the six points named are not of Judaism, but of Christianity. Indeed, how can any other view stand the opening words "Leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ?" Or, as the Revised Version gives it, "Let us cease to speak of the first principles of Christ."

Thus taken, the six points come in their proper order. (1) Repentance and (2) faith precede (3) baptism; and baptism in water preceded usually (4) the laying on of hands. The laying on of hands communicated the gifts of the Holy Ghost, and thus you have the foundation laid for the Apostle's argument stated in verses 4 and 5.

Probably this evidence will suffice for most readers. I do not attempt to say all that might be said. Yours truly in Christ, R. GOVETT.

SHOPS v. STORES.

SIR,—Some inaccuracies of statement have, I think, occurred in the course of this discussion, such as that the discount off books originated with the Stores. It was commenced long before the stores were thought of, by a secondhand bookseller, who got a large profit on old books, and made this reduction on new books to draw attention to his establishment. As the custom spread it ruined a good many booksellers, and obliged others to enter into new businesses.

"Scrutator," in your last issue, traces the origin of the stores to some clerks in the Civil Service uniting to buy a chest of tea at wholesale price. But it should first be mentioned that the reason why retail prices had become so high was the unreasonable length of credit exacted from them, more particularly by their wealthier customers.

"Scrutator" draws a picture of a retail tradesman, with his country villa, brougham, and seaside trip. But with regard to the great majority of tradesmen this is quite a fancy sketch. Nor does "Scrutator" mention, on the other hand, the very easy hours enjoyed by Government clerks, nor their retiring pension, both of which give them a very decided advantage over thousands of tradesmen.

I should certainly advocate no hard and fast rule that a Christian is never to buy in the cheapest market; but God has made a law that we should do good unto all men, especially to them who are of the household of faith; and each must decide for himself when and how this rule applies to his buying and selling as well as to his other transactions.

The same writer insists upon the principle of buying in the cheapest and selling in the dearest market. Earlier in this discussion this has been dealt with, and it has been well pointed out that express commands of God are written which at least in many instances are incompatible with this foundation principle of the so-called science of political economy. For example, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye unto them likewise." "Look not every man upon his own things, but every man also upon the things of others." But the rule of buying cheapest and selling dearest is an entirely selfish principle, and leaves no room for either of these precepts.

Here is a struggling man of business; he has lately been converted; and some of the members of the church into which he has been received have the opportunity of dealing with him, but they have adopted the axiom to buy in the cheapest market, and therefore they go to the Stores and let their brother struggle on, it may be, to his ruin.

Here is a Christian brother who is anxious to prove in his own experience that it is more blessed to give than to receive; he is, therefore, determined to reduce his expenditure that he may have the more to give. So far so good. But in carrying out his purpose he is so intent on buying in the cheapest market, that he becomes an exceedingly unpleasant customer, beating down the tradesman, possibly a fellow-Christian, that he may give to God robbery for burnt-offering. I have known a good man who never refused to give, if he could; but his provision-dealer had painful experience of his method of attaining this end.

In a somewhat remarkable paragraph "Scrutator" finds sanction for "buying in the cheapest market and selling in the dearest," in the Scriptural principle of paying a fair price; and he argues that the fair price must be ascertained by the law of supply and demand, which is, he says, as much one of God's laws as the law of gravitation. But the operation of the law of gravitation is invariable' whereas prices, under the law of supply and demand, vary from day to day; they rise and fall with the profusion or scarcity of commodities and of labour; are often dishonestly forced up or down; and are immediately acted upon by political movements or even rumours. And if the result of these and other influences by a Divine law decides what is a fair price for labour and for goods, then the Apostle James perpetrated an unwarrantable impertinence, and made an unjust charge when he said, "Behold, the hire of the labourers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of hosts."

A more extraordinary statement, it seems to me, has not been written during this discussion than that in which "Scrutator" says: "Men must . . . combine to produce . . . in the cheapest possible way. . . . It is by these processes that 'fair prices' are fixed, and that when such prices get lower than will enable the producer to live—whether he be a builder of ships, the owner of a factory, a matchbox maker, or a shoeblack—he must seek his livelihood, at home or abroad, in some other way." So that prices may be "fair," though the producer cannot live—that is, starvation wages are fair wages, and the poor matchbox maker, at twopence-farthing a gross, must get some other employment or emigrate. How is she to do either? "Scrutator" thinks that "fair prices" are attained by unrestricted competition, but that classic poem, "The Song of the Shirt," tells a tale that points a moral in a directly opposite direction.

I am not a partisan either of shops or stores. What I urge is that a Christian is an imitator of Christ, who pleased not Himself; and that there are Divine precepts which must often interfere with the selfish rule to buy in the cheapest market and sell in the dearest. It is impossible in this fallen world to carry out the rule so to buy and sell, without the danger of beating God's people to pieces and grinding the faces of his poor. A CHRISTIAN.

SIR,—Your correspondent "Scrutator" takes one side of this question, and certainly makes the best of it. He says the whole question hinges upon the inquiry, "Is it lawful to buy in the cheapest market?" Undoubtedly it is lawful, but is it always expedient? The Apostle Paul said all things were lawful for him, but all things were not expedient, and there may be considerations of far greater importance than the mere fact of buying in the cheapest market.

Besides, is it always true that what is apparently the cheapest market is the cheapest? Your correspondent says that the origin of the "Stores" was the clubbing together of a few poor clerks to buy their tea at wholesale prices. Now, how did they know they were buying in the cheapest market? Could they—like an experienced dealer—tell the value of the tea they thought they were getting so much cheaper? I know for a fact that the wholesale houses often do a fine stroke of business through the ignorance of some of their customers; and so do the Stores.

Your correspondent speaks of poor and ill-paid clerks benefiting so much by the Stores; but how about the aristocracy, the titled nobility, the "upper ten"? Are they compelled to patronise the Stores and assist in ruining the tradesman? Let the public always pay cash, and I will undertake to say that better value will be obtained at the shops than at the Stores, for the simple reason that the public have the benefit of the ten, twenty, or thirty years' practical experience of the proprietor.

The best reply to the advocates of Stores I have seen is a letter from a Rural Dean, a copy of which I enclose, and which I hope you will print. Value is undoubtedly determined, and price regulated, by the law of supply and demand, but what is to be deprecated is the grasping, selfish, "take care of No. One" spirit which is now so prevalent. A GROCER'S SON.

The following are extracts from the letter of the Rural Dean, to which our correspondent refers:—

"You have been good enough to send me a paper, proclaiming the vast advantages of joining a certain company, entitled, 'The Junior Army and Navy Stores (Limited).' Now, sir, what have we parsons got to do with the Navy and Army except to pray for them and help to pay them?—both of which I have already done for towards half a century! And as for joining their new fangled companies, I have distinct objections to them, which I hope you will allow me respectfully to state. I have no wish to rob good, honest tradesmen, who have to get their living by myself and others. My country tailor makes my coat, and my village shoemaker my shoes. If there were but a hatter here, he should have the honour of crowning me. I go out of my parish and district for nothing hardly which I can get in them, and I intend so to proceed till one of my old elms is sawn up for my coffin. As an English parson, I teach and practise my catechism, which tells me 'to do unto others as I would they should do unto me.' While my tenants pay me to the day my rents and tithes, and while my shopkeepers are honest, civil, and obliging, why should I say, 'Thank you, Messrs. Brown, Smith, and Jones, but I deal now with Messrs. Sweedenburg and Smithereen and the new Cheap Store Company?' If people would take the advice of a man who has seen a little of life, I would venture to tell them, 'Deal at home. Pay ready money, and you will get discount from your tradesman. Buy nothing till you can afford to pay for it. Help your shopkeepers to sleep comfortably, and you will sleep better yourself. Keep away from foreign parts and foreign folk, and though some of the juniors may call you a fool for your pains, you will sit all the easier in your arm-chair, and not fancy that your dressing-gown, hanging loosely on its peg in the glimmering light of your chamber, is the ghost of some poor, starved, injured shopkeeper, who hung himself when you joined 'The Civil Service Supply Association.'"

"Senator" writes:—It is a fact beyond contradiction, that clergymen and ministers generally throughout the country, have, by their example and yet more by their influence, made it fashionable to deal at large institutions or stores, outside their own parishes. They have killed "the goose that laid the golden eggs." Stores do not contribute to church or charity. Most ministers throughout the country are already feeling the effects of their example and influence.

Notices of Books, &c.

A Kiss for a Blow. By H. C. Wright. 6d. Nelson. A collection of short stories in the Home Library for Little Readers.

The Lord's Supper Explained to Young Communicants. By Marcus Dods, D.D. 1d. Mackinlay, Glasgow. A sensible, spiritual booklet, putting the matter plainly, but containing nothing new.

The Women of the Bible (New Testament). By Etty Woosnam. 1s. Partridge. A beautiful little book, full of true Scripture teaching, from the pen of one taught of the Spirit. It will be sure to impart blessing to many.

Unpolished Gems of Scripture. No. 1. By Rev. J. Hawker. 1s. Elliot Stock. Very valuable thoughts on some of the least studied "gems" of Holy Writ. The work is to appear quarterly, and should prove a boon to many students of the Word.

Health Lectures. Fifth Series, 1s. 6d. Macniven & Wallace. Would that these admirable lectures could be in every household. They are too well known to need much commendation; their utility, thoroughness, common-sense practicality, and popular style of dealing with important subjects, render them invaluable for family reference.

A Cradle of Empire. Salvation Army Book Stores. Under this suggestive, if somewhat presumptuous title, the managers of the Clapton Training Homes have issued a thrilling, earnest record of some of their labours. The "experiences" given of some of the children will startle some, while they may pain others.

Poems. By A. E. D. Messrs. Griffith & Farran. A curious mixture of verse. There are two or three short pieces of merit, notably "Childhood," and "A Sacred Song." The author possesses a poetic spirit, but it needs prompting and guiding.

The Sunshine of Religion. By I. E. Page. 1s. T. Woolmer. Sunshine, indeed! The reader seems to stand on the delectable mountains while going through this book, and to have imparted to him a vision of the true glory and sunshine of Christ. It is full of a deep-breathed peace, a whole-souled faith, a heaven-kept joy.

We have received from Messrs. Dean & Son, 160a, Fleet-street, the first two numbers of The Little Ones' Own Coloured Picture Paper. The "little ones" are sure to fall in love at first sight with the pretty and brightly coloured illustrations, and if the standard of excellence is maintained, the success of this little paper is insured. It is issued weekly, price 1d.; monthly, 6d.

The Eden Family. By Jeremiah Dodsworth. Jack, 45, Ludgate-hill. From the fact that this work is in its twenty-first thousand, it would appear to be already well known. And it deserves a wide popularity, for no one can read carefully through its thoughtful pages without an increased sense of the omnipotent love of God, and a desire for fuller harmony with his glorious creation and the Gospel plan.

Lilies; or, Letters to School Girls. By Popular Writers. Edited by Caroline G. Cavendish. 1s. Partridge. The letters contained in this valuable collection are just the very words needed by school girls at certain points of experience. Those on "Incompleteness" and "School-friendships" contain more than ordinary counsel; they are gems of thought and right principle, and might be read with profit by other than school-girls.

Scripture Biography, and its Teachings. By Joseph Hassell. 2s. 6d. Blackie & Son. The author of these lessons has endeavoured to supply comprehensive and accurate studies of Scripture Biography, making them suggestive for the teacher, and a means of real help to the souls of the taught. He has so far succeeded that we do not remember to have met with a work of the size containing more useful and solid matter, combined with freshness and originality.

The Beautiful House and the Enchanted Garden. Hatchards. Daintily got up, this "story for the little folks" will come as balm to those who have dreaded even the name of the "King of Terrors." It is a beautiful and tender allegory on the subject of death.

Anglican Hymnology. Rev. J. King. Hatchards. In this little volume there is much that is highly interesting about hymns and hymn writers, from the third century downwards. As only Church of England Hymnals have been consulted, the survey is far from exhaustive, and the book will appeal to a limited circle.

On the Imminence of the Second Advent. By E. J. M. 6d. Nisbet. The author of this tract is a student of men and manners in the light of Scripture. He gathers his facts calmly and dispassionately together, and proceeds to argue therefrom on the nearness of the Second Advent. Every earnest Christian should read his concluding words.

Not content with his pastoral and other literary duties, Rev. Jackson Wray, like many of his ministerial brethren, essays the rôle of editor. His little monthly, Good Company (2d. Nisbet.), is not unworthy of its name, though we think that if it is ever to have an extensive circulation outside of the editor's own congregation he would do well to provide greater variety, even at the risk of curtailing his own quota of "copy."

Consecrated Culture: Memorials of Benjamin Alfred Gregory. By Benjamin Gregory, D.D. T. Woolmer. Apart from the personal interest excited by these records, for the strong testimony they bear to the wealth and power of a life dedicated fully to the service of God, such a life is one of the strongest arguments for Christianity. The circulation of this volume would do good among young men and readers of uncertain doctrine.

Holy Living, a Year Book of Thought from Jeremy Taylor, with an Introduction by Archdeacon Farrar. 2s. Marcus Ward & Co. In the introduction, Dr. Farrar gives an exquisite picture of the mind of good Bishop Taylor, which will help the reader not only to understand the "Thoughts," but to appropriate them as helps to holy life. The selection is of the choicest description, and the book is elegantly got up in white vellum and gold. It would make a fitting bridal gift.

East-end Pictures; or, More Leaves from my Log of Christian Work. By Thomas C. Garland. 2s. 6d. Wesleyan Methodist Book Room. This second volume of Mr. Garland's wonderful experiences is not less entertaining and instructive than the first. There is not an incident told that, from its intense reality, has not the charm of fiction and the power of truth. As testimonies to the power of God in East-end hearts, these "Pictures" will cheer and encourage all earnest workers in the great harvest field.

Life and Letters of Adolphe Monod. By One of His Daughters. Nisbet. These recollections of a life truly sanctified and consecrated to the will of God, are very refreshing and stimulating. They act as a spiritual tonic and brace the soul for higher and nobler attainments. It was in the furnace of suffering that Adolphe Monod learned to glorify God, and his experiences as here set forth testify at once to the grace and skill of the refiner and the genuineness of the metal tried. The selected letters are full of unction and sparkle with sacred light. The book is a welcome addition to biographical literature.

The Sick Chamber. A Book for the Sick and Suffering. By Fergus Ferguson, D.D. Messrs. Hamilton, Adams & Co. These pages of consolation contain comfort for the spiritually and physically sick, and comfort of the most real and beautiful kind. The words to those "Restored to Health" might well be written in letters of gold. From first to last the solid truth, the spiritual insight, the physician's experience, the real help, the confidence in God, and the tender, faithful service offered, make these chapters indeed a "source of comfort alike to the dying inquirer and the dying believer."

Scenes and Characters of the Early World. By Rev. G. McHardy, M.A. Hodder & Stoughton. 3s. 6d. The author disclaims all intent to deal critically with the subjects he discusses, and aims only at practical usefulness. As a result he has produced fifteen thoughtful chapters full of salutary lessons drawn from Old World history as recorded in the earlier portions of the Book of Genesis. Many original and striking thoughts are found in the book, which while it abounds in the true rather than the new, yet throws fresh light on familiar themes. It is calculated to influence most beneficially the every-day life of the Christian reader.

Plenteous Redemption. By Cheyne Brady. Drummond's Tract Depot. Forcible, pointed, earnest, and true, these chapters will be a great help to evangelists and all classes of workers among those who are wavering, wayward, or wandering.

Spiritual Light and Life. By Henry Varley, B.A. W. B. Whittingham & Co. To this book we can only give qualified commendation. Any who are captivated by modern teaching on "Divine or Faith Healing," may read with profit the address on "Suffering and Prayer." It is a thoughtful comment on James v. 13, bringing out purposes of sickness which some Christians are disposed to forget. On the other hand, the address entitled "The Reputed Incarnation" (Gal. iv. 19), and parts of other addresses, are not, in our opinion, satisfactory. The believer's standing in Christ and his actual spiritual condition are not kept distinct as by the inspired writers.

ITALIAN EVANGELISATION IN SWITZERLAND.

FOR years past a multitude of Italian labourers, navvies, stonemasons, &c., have been continually crossing the Alps to the southern end of Lake Leman, to earn their bread in road-making, building, boring tunnels, &c. It is believed there are more than 800 in one district alone on the Savoy Railway. They are often disliked and distrusted by the people of the country, as foreigners; but they are generally industrious, simple, and sensible to kindness. Above all, they are willing to receive copies of the Scriptures and listen to the Gospel.

In former years much work has been done among these immigrants, and the results have been most happy; at least two evangelical congregations in the north of Italy are the fruits of these labours. But the friends who began the work are dispersed or have been called to their heavenly rest, and now there is no one on the spot able to go among these men and teach them in their own language. It is proposed to secure the services of an Italian-speaking evangelist for the six months during which they will be principally at work: after November they generally go home for the winter. About £25 or £30 would probably suffice for this, and application is made to the Waldenso-Italian Church to supply an evangelist.

We ask English Christians to help us in raising this small sum. Contributions will be thankfully received by Major Frobisher, Fishlake House, Shooter's-hill, S.E.

Clarens. E. J. Whately.

LONDON CITY MISSION.—This Society was formed by three devout men at six o'clock in the morning of May 16, 1835. It is thought well that a few persons connected with the Society should spend the first hour of its second half-century in praise, prayer, and re-dedication of its energies to the service and glory of Almighty God. Any friends are invited to join in this service at the Mission House (D.V.) on Saturday morning, May 16, at six o'clock a.m.

SAWBRIDGEWORTH, HERTS.—Mr. W. E. Bailey has spent two days in visiting the Cattle and Pleasure Fair, which draws large numbers from the surrounding villages. For several years efforts have been put forth to reach the fair people. This year it was remarked there was not the usual disturbance, bad language, and drunkenness. It is hoped a real blessing has attended the scattering of good seed. The Christian Colportage Society was most successful in its efforts to circulate the Scriptures and other religious books.

According to recent reports from the United States, Mr. Frelinghuysen, late Secretary of State and President of the American Bible Society, was very seriously ill, and not expected to recover.

A correspondent of The Presbyterian formulates a serious charge against Major Tucker, head of the Salvation Army in India, for proselytising in Christian settlements in that country, instead of seeking to carry the Gospel to the unevangelised heathen.

We are very sorry to see it stated, says the Indian Churchman, that the Maharajah Duleep Singh has "returned to the religion of his forefathers." It is quite impossible that a man of the Maharajah's intelligence and education, who has lived as many years as he has in England, can place the Sikh religion above that of Christ. We are obliged, therefore, to look for his motives elsewhere.

Brunswick Hall, Poplar.—The meetings in this hall continue to be well attended. There are twenty-six branches of work, including meetings for Railway Men, Working Men's Bible-class, Mothers' Meeting, Bible Flower Mission, &c. &c. During the past few months many free meals have been given. Help is needed in connection with the work. Mr. G. Fuller, Superintendent, 47, Dee-street, Poplar, E., would be pleased to receive help either in funds or tracts.

"JESUS IN THE WAY."

By Miss EMMA R. HYDE, Hartford, Conn.

STORY OF BLIND BARTIMEUS.

Matt. ix., Mark x., Luke xviii.

HE is coming! He is coming! in the crowd He draweth near! [hear;
If I listen, I his footsteps, yes, his very voice can
But, alas! I may not see Him, all his beauty is concealed, [are sealed.
For my vision sin hath blinded, for my eyes by sin
Jesus coming! Jesus nearing!
But no eye his smile to see!
Jesus coming! Jesus nearing;
But no comeliness for me.

Yet I'll call Him, yes, I'll call Him! What if He perchance may heed? [my need;
Son of David! Son of David! Have thou mercy on Though the multitude rebuke me and enjoin me,
"Hold thy peace," [and will not cease.
Though my own weak heart alarm me, I will cry
Jesus coming! Jesus nearing!
Though I look not on his face,
Helpless, wretched, friendless, beggared,
Shall I fail to seek his grace?

Lo, He calleth! Ay, He calleth! Jesus, Master, can it be? [calling even me?
Is it my name thou art speaking? Art thou Lead me, brothers, lead me, kindred, lead me quickly Him to meet! [feet.
Casting all that lets or hinders, I will hasten to his Jesus pausing! Jesus stilling!
Other voices far and nigh;
Jesus turning! Jesus listening!
Doth He hear my trembling cry?

I am going! I am going! his compassion to implore,
To confess my sin and ruin, and to pledge to sin no more; [hushed but eager throng,
While He's standing, while He's waiting, in this Make me room to press unto Him, for He may not tarry long.
Jesus standing! Jesus waiting!
Not to linger all the day;
Jesus coming! Jesus passing!
Can I venture to delay?

He is bidding! He is bidding! "Bring the beggar unto Me!" [I do for thee?"
And is asking, yes, is asking, "What wilt thou
Lord, behold, behold my darkness! see the midnight in my soul!
Hark! He answers, Jesus answers: "Soul, thy faith hath made thee whole."
Jesus near me! Jesus by me!
Who his presence can withstand?
Jesus greeting! Jesus pitying!
Jesus stretching forth his hand.

Oh, there's stealing, yes, there's stealing, o'er my soul a gladsome ray, [day?
Can it be the blessed dawning of a new and glorious Did He touch me? hath He healed me? that I lift my eyes to see, [for me?
Not alone the Saviour's beauty, that his beauty is Jesus smiling; Jesus loving!
Jesus calming all my fear,
Jesus shedding o'er my spirit,
Holiest light and sweetest cheer.

Oh, I'll follow, yes I'll follow, wheresoever He may lead; [tongue, his deed;
Glorifying, praising ever, both with heart and
And "let all the people praise Him," praise his grace so rich and free; [to Him and see.
And the blind still by the wayside, let them haste
Hark to Jesus! Haste to Jesus!
While his gracious call you hear;
Kneel to Jesus! ask of Jesus!
Jesus standing waiting near.

"Jesus only!" "Jesus ever!" be henceforth our trust and song; [us along;
Jesus pardoning, Jesus cleansing, Jesus guiding Jesus shielding, Jesus keeping, Jesus whispering his love; [above.
Till our walk below is ended, and He welcomes us
Saved by Jesus! Saved by Jesus!
Ring the triumph o'er and o'er, Hallelujah! Hallelujah!
Hallelujah evermore.

[May be sung to the air, "Shall we gather at the river?" or "What a friend we have in Jesus!" or, "We shall sleep, but not for ever."]

Barcelona Protestant Cottage Hospital.—Will the friends of this institution who have hitherto sent their offerings for the same through me, kindly do so now through Mrs McAulay, Buckingham House, Finsbury-park, N.; or Miss Grant, 17, Edgware-road, W., as from various reasons I find myself obliged to withdraw, for a time at least, from this department of service. ANNA VON MIELECKA.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Chiswick.—On Sunday week Mr. Walter Notman commenced a mission at Chiswick in the hall in Fraser-street. At the close of the evening service several inquirers were dealt with.

Egremont, Cheshire.—Miss Owen and Miss C. Moore have established a Cottage Mission here, which is proving a channel of much good to the people. The way is also being opened for Gospel work in the surrounding district.

Springfield, Fife, N.B.—The Gospel meetings conducted in the Christian Institute Hall, by Lieut.-Colonel Oldham, were brought to a close on April 30. The addresses were pointed and powerful, and it is gratifying to know that lasting good has resulted from the visit of this evangelist.

Church Army Gospel Missions, conducted by Church Army evangelists, have been commenced in Gwennear, Cornwall; Hadlow, Kent; and Knockbreda, near Belfast. Others will shortly commence in Abinger, Kent; Burnley, Lancashire; and two parishes in east of London.

Clifton.—A mission to young people not attending Sunday-school has been held in Clifton by Mr. E. Arrowsmith, with marked success. Addresses to parents and guardians, and to nurses, were much valued. All the meetings were well attended throughout. A large number of new members have been added to the Scripture Union and Temperance cause.

Southend-on-Sea.—Gospel services for different classes have been held at the Congregational Church here by Rev. E. T. Egg (Woodford), in conjunction with the pastor, Rev. Joseph Williams. The services throughout were well attended, deeply earnest, and impressive. The pastor and his helpers are much cheered by the results already known and by tokens of greater blessing yet to appear.

Lowestoft.—Mr. and Mrs. C. King have lately closed a fifteen days' mission here. Much blessing attended the same; overflow meetings were held in the Baptist Chapel. Night after night hundreds crowded to the meetings. Mr. and Mrs. King have arranged to pay another visit to Lowestoft in a few months' time. Mr. and Mrs. C. King, after holding successful Gospel missions at various places, have entered on a campaign in Glasgow, which will extend over six weeks. The meetings held in the large hall in James Morrison-street are crowded, and there are abundant tokens of God's blessing accompanying the word spoken and sung.

Hants.—Mr. and Mrs. Henry Morgan have passed through our neighbourhood with their Gospel van, disposing of Scriptures, &c. Meetings were arranged for and held in the villages of St. Mary Bowen, Hurstbourne Tarrant, Vernham, and Upton. These were well attended, and the addresses listened to in a most remarkable manner. It is a great work in which these friends are engaged, and one that must be productive of good. To them I know it is an arduous undertaking, often attended with difficulties and inconveniences; yet these seem to be thought nothing of in the earnest desire to bring before the people the knowledge of saving truth.
G. J. Charrett.

Leytonstone, E.—The Mission Church and Girls' Mission was commenced twelve years ago in a small room in Leytonstone-road, and was afterwards removed to the iron building in Leyton-road. This was soon too small, and had to be enlarged, and now, after four years, it has again been enlarged by the addition of a side aisle and large class-room. The opening services were of the most hearty description. The enlargement has been attended by a heavy and unexpected expense—it had been found necessary to renew all the iron of the old building, thus raising the total expenditure to £180. We are glad to hear that the work is progressing, and that many young girls are being brought under its influence.

Southgate.—An iron chapel was opened on the 30th ult., in this village, under the auspices of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Evangelists' Association. About nine months ago Mr. Cornelius Wickerson was invited to preach in the small mission room where Mr. Spurgeon's young men had been accustomed to preach. The mission room became so crowded that it was imperative to get larger accommodation. An iron room was found, and a zealous friend (Mr. Ashdown) having provided the land, the way was made plain. About £60 is still required. The evangelistic zeal which has fostered this work among the villagers of Southgate, is a distinct outcome of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's work in London. Mr. J. T. Dunn of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, presided at the opening meeting, and will gladly receive contributions towards the work.

Mobile, Alabama.—The evangelistic services here, by Mr. G. C. Needham, are attracting full houses and are deeply interesting. The evangelist's appeals are warm and telling. At the conclusion of one of the early meetings, Mr. Needham said he had seen nowhere else in the South such a meeting on the first Monday evening. About forty persons entered the inquiry-room, and numbers of others requested prayer.

JEWS IN THE GHETTO OF ROME.

THERE is an appalling mass of ignorance among the Jews of the Ghetto, old and young—the outcome of long and dreary ages of the rule of Popes and priests. It is wholly beyond the reach of any existing educational institutions, public or private. The British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews (96, Great Russell-street, London, W.C.) is trying to meet this crying want. A night-school for lads seeking a living during the day was opened last February. It took some time to weed it of the rough, unruly class, but now over forty steady, well-conducted lads are under instruction, and there is every probability that the number will go on increasing. The Bible is the principal reading and text-book.

The Missionary is most anxious to open also a day ragged-school for street waifs, &c.; day classes for girls, whose mothers could only spare them from assisting in household duties for a few hours in the middle of the day; and night adult classes. We have the requisite premises in close proximity to the Ghetto, spacious and airy rooms. Several Christian ladies and others are ready to give practical help; but the Society, having so many missions to support in different lands, cannot overtake all, and the Missionary must look to his fellow Christians for the needful means to carry on this work.

HUGUENOT SEMINARY, WELLINGTON, CAPE COLONY.

MANY who have derived help and comfort from reading Rev. Andrew Murray's books, "Abide in Christ," and "Like Christ," may be glad to know something of his recent undertaking in Cape Colony. Feeling the need of a Christian school for the daughters of European colonists, he wrote to America, in December, 1872, asking for a teacher who should co-operate with him in establishing a "Mount Holyoke Seminary," in South Africa. Miss A. P. Ferguson and Miss A. E. Bliss (of the establishment at Mount Holyoke, U.S.A.), "after reading the African call, felt that God had bade them go forth and take up this work." In 1874 the first Huguenot Seminary in Cape Colony was opened with forty pupils. In July, 1875, a second building was opened to accommodate fifty more. Other teachers from Mount Holyoke, in America, came, and amongst them Miss Elizabeth Cummings. The school has become large and flourishing, and most thorough and efficient work has been done. The decided stand for Christ taken by many of the pupils as they have gone out into the world, has rejoiced the hearts of their friends, and through them the Huguenot Seminary—which is designed to be the Mount Holyoke school for the whole country—is extending its influence throughout Cape Colony, the Orange Free States, and Transvaal.

Eleven schools and seminaries have now been established in South Africa within the last ten years under the care of American ladies and some of the pupils who have graduated at the Huguenot Seminary. Last year was the tenth anniversary of the founding of the seminary, and the hall connected with it was not large enough to contain all the pupils and converts who had come, some from a distance, to the annual meeting with Mr. Murray. The need of a new hall was greatly felt. Miss E. Cummings, who is in America for her holidays (she is returning to South Africa in the end of May), has been collecting funds for this building. One gentleman has given her £2000, on condition that the equivalent of six per cent. interest on the sum be annually devoted to the aid of needy pupils. About £200 are still required for the furniture, packing, and freight. Any help sent to Miss Mary Halhed, 25, Collingham-place, Cromwell-road, London, S.W., will be acknowledged by her and handed over to Miss Cummings before she leaves England.

THE CONGO.—Mr. Stanley thinks that if the trade of the Upper Congo were properly developed it would amount to the magnificent sum of $350,000,000 yearly!

Notes on Daily Readings.

These notes on the chapters of Scripture arranged for the 'Bible and Prayer Union" are not intended in any way to 'interfere with the "Monthly Notes." Those who desire to become members of the Union should communicate with Rev. T. Richardson, St. Benet's Vicarage, Mile End-road, London, E.

MAY 14.—ACTS XVII.

v. 11.—"These were more noble than they of Thessalonica. . . ."—Those are truly noble, and are in a fair way to be more and more so, that make the Scriptures their oracle and touchstone, and consult them accordingly. Those that rightly study the Scriptures, and meditate therein day and night, have their minds filled with noble thoughts, fixed to noble principles, and formed for noble aims and designs.—M. Henry.

It is a characteristic of true religion that it bears investigation. Wretched are they who exclude others from such investigation! Happy they who legitimately pursue it! Those souls are truly noble which are thus accessible to the things of God.—Bengel.

v. 25.—"He giveth to all life, and breath, and all things."—Life! What a sublime expression! What a gift is life! And what a giver the Author of life! Breath. Every breath we draw God gives, and all things necessary for the sustentation and continuance of both. Oh, what an idea we have here of God! In a manner it might be justly said, God is life, and life is God. Life is beyond your reach; you cannot define it, understand it. How can we speak of God's life? We cannot, and will not attempt. He is the highest form of life; He lives infinitely higher than all the forms of life we are acquainted with. He is the living God. O my soul, think of this! This "living God" is the Being with whom we have to do; there is a living eye on thee now, a living Judge taking account now.—Caleb Morris.

MAY 15.—ACTS XVIII.

v. 3.—"He abode with them, and wrought."—Note the honour God puts upon industry; and that where He has appointed means He will not work miracles. A libel on religion, to represent honest trade as detrimental to the soul. On the contrary, God's ordinance of labour may be followed with benefit to the soul. If men went to their daily employment expecting to receive messages from God through trade and through labour, as well as through preaching and communion, there would be a vast advancing towards spiritual excellence.—Henry Melville.

v. 5.—"When Silas and Timothy were come, Paul was pressed. . ."—Good people kindle one another. Paul was much heated with the zeal of God by the company of these two good men. Two flints, though both cold, yet yield fire when smitten together. Billets one kindle another. Iron sharpeneth iron, so doth the face of a man his friend.—Trapp.

v. 10.—"I have much people in this city."—Known unto the Lord are all his works from the beginning,—his works of grace as well as those of providence. Hence He saw among the gay and profligate citizens of Corinth many who, by the Apostle's word, should be brought unto Himself. As He said in John x. 16, "Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring." Christian workers should be careful to follow the guidance of the Lord as to what fields they work in; He will then lead them where their work shall prosper "in the thing whereto He sent it," and He will preserve and strengthen them there until their work is done. He is "the Lord of the harvest," and must be consulted by all the labourers, who, when working as and where He appoints, shall never be ashamed.

v. 26.—"Whom when Aquila and Priscilla had heard, they took him."—It is instructive that a man so important and influential in the apostolic age as Apollos should have been indebted to a plain married couple for his peculiar preparation for the ministry, and for the introduction into positive Christian truth. These were the persons who first took notice of him and his promising gifts, but who also perceived what was defective in him; these were they who initiated him—certainly more highly gifted and more learned than themselves—more thoroughly in the Christian truth; these were they who assisted his coming to Corinth, and did their best to place the right man in the right place. Here, accordingly, simple laity—and especially a woman of a pious disposition and of solid Christian knowledge—have performed what, according to our ideas, is the business of theological institutions and ecclesiastical boards—a proof of the universal priesthood of the apostolic times.—Lechler.

MAY 16.—ACTS XIX.

v. 2.—"We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost."—That is (as in John vii. 39), whether the Holy Ghost was poured out, given, come in personal fulness, as John had said should be the case in connection with the work of Christ.

v. 13.—"We adjure you by Jesus whom Paul preacheth."—They say, "whom Paul preacheth;" their meaning is, We will try whether evil spirits go out in his name; in a word, they had not faith. Now Satan is overcome by no words, and by no works, but only by faith in God's word; the crafty spirit, therefore, seeing that in this case they had no faith, and that the word of God was not fixed in their heart, derided them. The expulsion of Satan from demoniacs is but a type of his expulsion from the heart of man. But even as here he derided those who tried to cast out evil spirits by a mere literal invocation of Jesus' name without faith, so he mocked, and still mocks, those who by works attempt to free themselves from his power, as priests and monks, &c.; for from such attempts date his entire dominion over them, and his power of treating them completely as he will. Satan is a very crafty spirit, in comparison with whose strength all the light of reason is nothing; his craft is fully known through the Holy Ghost only; he is expelled in true faith, and by those who are most spiritual.—Justus Jonas.

v. 21.—"Purposed in the Spirit."—That is, by the instinct of the Holy Spirit, his counsellor and guide, by whom all his actions were moderated. So he went bound in the Spirit (Acts xx. 22). So Simeon came by the Spirit into the Temple (Luke xii. 27). And so still, the steps of every good man are ordered by the Lord (Psalm xxxvii. 23).—Trapp.

MAY 17.—ACTS XX.

v. 7.—"On the first day of the week, when the disciples. . . ."—The apostolic precedent, for observing the first day of the week as a day of solemn assembly, and as commemorative of the resurrection of Christ, is thus confirmed. With believers, the Christian Sabbath, though not less hallowed, is yet distinct from the Mosaic in spirit, in time, and in purpose. It is the Lord's Day, and as such is observed unto Him, and in honour of his name.

v. 16. "Paul determined to sail by (i.e., past) Ephesus, because . . ."—It is a pleasure to us to be with our friends; it diverts us, nothing more; but we must not by it be diverted from our work. When Paul has a call to Jerusalem, he will not loiter away the time in Asia, though he had more and kinder friends there. This is not the world we are to be together in; we hope to be so in the other world.—M. Henry.

vv. 17-35.—Paul's address to the Ephesian Elders.—Where shall we find in all the Church's records such a combination of greatness and tenderness of soul—such a union of ministerial humility, fidelity, purity, and self-sacrifice—such unwearied prosecution, amid tears, of one object, the grandest that man can undertake, relieved only by manual labour for the support of himself and his companions? O ye servants of Christ, study this model, on your knees drink in the spirit of it, and enter into its every detail; so shall its impress be stamped upon you as ye are able to take it on, and then shall it not have been here presented to us in vain. —Dr. David Brown.

Specially note in this address how the grace of God is magnified as the source and substance of all saving truth (verses 24, 32). Also how, in verse 28, the Divine value, as well as vicarious efficacy, of the death of Christ, represented by his blood, is set forth: "His own blood." Comp. 1 John i. 7: "His Son."

MAY 18.—ACTS XXI.

vv. 12, 13.—"When we heard these things, both we and they . . ."—Paul's embarkation at Tyre is very remarkable. The simple manner in which he was escorted to the ship by the disciples of Tyre, men, women, and children, and their affectionate and pious parting, kneeling down on the shore and commending each other to God, are both impressive and edifying. Nothing but Christianity could have produced such a spirit in persons who now, perhaps, for the first time saw each other in the flesh. Every true Christian is a child of God; and, consequently, all children of God have a spiritual affinity. They are all partakers of the same Spirit, are united to the same Head, are actuated with the same hope, and are going to the same heaven. These love one another with pure hearts fervently; and these alone are capable of disinterested and lasting friendship. Though this kind of friendship cannot fail, yet it may err; and with officious affection endeavour to prevent us from bearing a necessary and most honourable cross. It should, therefore, be kept within scriptural bounds.—Dr. A. Clarke.

v. 14.—"The will of the Lord be done."

"'Tis hard to say without a sigh,
  Lord, let thy will be done:
'Tis hard to say, My will is thine,
  And thine is mine alone.

Most truly then thy will is done,
  When mine, O Lord, is crossed;
'Tis good to see my plans o'erthrown,
  My ways in thine all lost.

Whate'er thy purpose be, O Lord,
  In things or great or small
Let each minutest part be done,
  That Thou may'st still be all.

So shall my undivided life
  To Thee, my God, be given,
And all this earthly course below
  Be one dear path to heaven."

H. Bonar.

v. 26.—"Then Paul took the men . . ."—The action of Paul in this matter is well explained by Jennings in his "Jewish Antiquities," by the fact that there was a political as well as a typical use of sacrifices; and that though the typical ceased upon the sacrifice of Christ, yet the political continued until God, in his providence, broke up the Jewish state and polity some forty years after our Saviour's death. So that Paul's action, for which he has been so much censured, probably amounts to nothing more than paying a tribute due by law, which the Apostle enjoins upon all Christians in other nations.

MAY 19.—ACTS XXII.

v. 6.—"It came to pass, that, as I made my journey."—It is an excellent thing to be able rightly to detail our own conversion. Many are thus gained over, unless beyond measure hardened. Paul thought his conversion so effective an argument that even Jews would be influenced by it, but the Lord replies, on the contrary, the Gentiles will be (verse 19). See also 1 Tim. i. 15, 16.—Bengel.

v. 13.—"Brother Saul, receive thy sight."—The application of this word "brother" deserves careful attention. From chap. ix. ver. 13 we learn that Ananias was well acquainted with Saul's character as a persecutor of believers, and as injurious to the Church of God. Yet immediately he perceives the grace of God to be at work within him, he forgives it all, opens his heart to him, and hails the penitent one as a brother in Christ. Thus should all new converts be welcomed and cherished.

v. 17.—"While I was praying in the Temple."—How close a link there is between prayer and the manifestations of God to the soul. How often we read of instances similar to this in the Word of God, and how surely is the principle involved the rule of spiritual life:—

"Prayer makes the darkened cloud withdraw;
Prayer climbs the ladder Jacob saw,
Gives exercise to faith and love,
Brings every blessing from above."

MAY 20.—ACTS XXIII.

v. 11.—"The Lord stood by him."—On two other occasions in the Apostle's life special manifestations of his Master's presence were given him for his encouragement similar to this. (See ch. xviii. 9, 10, xxvii. 23, 24). Under circumstances of special need we may assuredly expect to receive special grace. No greater joy or surer support can be afforded than for the Lord's presence to be revealed, and his word of grace applied to the heart. The words uttered by the Lord had often fallen from his lips before. (See Matt. ix. 2, xiv. 27; John xvi. 33.) He says them to all who trust in His name, and that in every circumstance of life, however dark or trying it may be.

v. 17.—"Then Paul called one of the centurions." —It is worthy of notice that while the Apostle was ready to lay down his life at any time for the glory of Christ (chap. xx. 24), yet he did not covet martyrdom for its own sake, as some enthusiasts have done. Hence, as our Lord Himself did, he took precautions against threatened dangers, and left the issue with God in calmness and trust.

v. 35.—"I will hear thee when thine accusers are also come."—Felix acted prudently when he would not even hear St. Paul till he had his accusers face to face. How many false judgments, evil surmises, and uncharitable censures would be avoided, did men always adopt this reasonable plan! Hear either side of a complaint separately, and the evil seems very great; hear both together, and the evil is generally lessened by one-half. Audi et alteram partem—hear the other side, says a heathen; remember, if you have an ear for the first complainant, you have one also for the second.—Dr. A. Clarke.

STUDENTS ON THE CONTINENT.

PROFESSOR SIMPSON, of Edinburgh, recently gave an address to some forty students assembled in Miss Howard's drawing-room, at 14, Rue Monsieur le Prince, in the Quartier Latin, Paris. The students were from the faculties of science and arts, medicine, theology, and law, and represented different nationalities. Although the majority were French, there were a few from Edinburgh, London, Germany, Mauritius, the West Indies, Russia, Poland, and Armenia. The Professor gave an interesting account of the religious revival which had lately spread from Cambridge to the Scotch Universities, and he also spoke of the testimony given in favour of the fundamental truths of Christianity by Pasteurs Laveleye, Virchow, Sir William Muir, and other eminent men, before a large concourse of students, at the late tercentenary jubilee of the Edinburgh University. With earnest and simple words he advised his young friends to study the science of the Christian religion, as it is taught in the Holy Scriptures, with as much enthusiasm as they did the other sciences, and they would find true knowledge and real happiness for time and eternity.

He added that only a few days before he had the pleasure of addressing large meetings of students in Rome and Naples, and what he had said to them he would now say to those present, that they should conscientiously weigh the consequences of their acceptance, or of their rejection, of Jesus Christ as their Saviour. He concluded by inviting any of them who would be visiting Edinburgh to knock at his door and lunch with him in the very room in which chloroform was first inhaled. He was listened to with rapt attention, especially when he referred to a question that had been put to Sir James Simpson, as to which was the greatest discovery he had ever made: "That I am a sinner," was the great physician's reply.

The venerable Pasteur Appia interpreted for Dr. Simpson. With a few earnest words he exhorted the students to ponder seriously upon what they had just heard, and decide ere it be too late to place the reins of their life into Christ's hands.

Before separating, and after a light refreshment which the hostess's generosity had kindly provided, the students heard a short account of the purport of the meetings held in Miss Howard's salon. This Christian lady has for more than ten years devoted her winters to a most interesting work among the students of Paris. The importance of this work amidst such a heterogeneous grouping of young men in a city like Paris, and in such a quarter as the Quartier Latin, within earshot of the very lecture-rooms of the University, cannot be gauged by those who do not know how difficult it is to get the young Frenchman's attention to any religious questions; how thoroughly steeped in indifference and materialism seven-eighths of the students of Paris are; and how few are the means employed by any Christian agency to reach them. Miss Howard has succeeded in getting a dozen or two students to meet every Saturday evening at her house, to discuss some moral, philosophical, or religious subject chosen beforehand, and Christ and his teachings are as a rule brought to bear upon the questions treated. Besides the Saturday evening meetings, Miss Howard "receives" on Wednesday evenings as well, and many are the letters or words of gratitude she has received from near and far, from students and their parents, for the kindness she has shown.

REDUCED GENTLEWOMEN.

THE Christian Public is aware by this time of the lamented death of my beloved sister, Julia Corke, the originator of the effort to establish the LUTHER MEMORIAL HOME, to grant rent-free rooms to the above class.

It is earnestly hoped and believed that this needed work may still be accomplished, that Christian Workers will take it up, and by their prayers, sympathy, and exertions to raise funds, strengthen the hands of the Treasurer (Miss Julia Fox, 54, Kensington Park-road, Ladbroke-square, Bayswater) and of myself, who, having worked in the cause from its commencement, will gladly take up this legacy of my beloved sister.

Funds continue to come in, which in all now amount to £300. Thanks to kind helpers. Cards for Collecting Shillings will be gratefully supplied, and Contributions thankfully received by the Treasurer, or by—

ANNETTE CORKE, Hon. Sec.,
120, Ledbury-road, Bayswater, W.

TO LADIES AND GIRLS.—Any desiring Spiritual Help are invited to write to Helper, Grosvenor House, 139, Greenwich-road, S.E. Communications made will be received in confidence. Any wishing for personal conversation must write for appointment to the same.

MR. J. VAN SOMMER, JUN., writes from Tyndall, Bon Homme County, Dakota, U.S.A., that there is an estate of 2,500 acres near there, belonging to a Russian Colony, who have out-grown the place and want to move, and which would do admirably for an Institution, where young men or boys could be trained for the life in the North-West, in farming and rearing cattle. The price asked for the land and everything on the place is about £10,000, and a further £8,000 would be required to work it; when under a competent manager it should be a paying institution. There are two stone blocks of houses to accommodate 25 families, large school-room, stone stables, steam flour and saw mill, 150 acres of timber, 1,100 sheep, and sheds, 180 cattle, 25 horses, and machinery. Also an orchard, producing over £100 worth of fruit a year. The place is prettily situated along the cliffs, and on the pasture land by the Missouri River.

Calls to Christ.

A Series of Addresses. By Rev. R. W. Nicoll, M.A. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

"Force and freshness are eminently the characteristics of these 'Calls to Christ;' they are also brief to a proverb, and hence they may be of great service to an earnest evangelist who knows how to use another man's thoughts."—Kelso Courier.

"Every worker in the Lord's vineyard would be helped by reading it. The character of Daniel, and the mighty influence he wielded, are well portrayed."

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

Miss E. F., of STOCKWELL PARK ROAD.

About eight months back this lady called to consult me (I am not at liberty to give her full name and address, except to private inquirers). Her case was one of dyspeptic asthma, with pulmonary weakness and general prostration. In addition to the ordinary dyspeptic symptoms, there was expectoration and distressed breathing, great tightness behind the sternum. She had suffered more or less for eight years. Now the complaint was telling severely upon her, and her strength fast failing.

"I was induced to come to you (she says) in consequence of my late father having taken your medicine many years ago, and considered it saved his life. I have frequently heard him speak of you with the highest praise."

She continued my treatment for some time, and writing me about November, she says,—I have found such very great benefit from your medicine and advice, I am recommending it to a poor gentleman, &c. With grateful thanks, &c., E. F."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY MORNINGS ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

"MANNA CAKE."

Children take it readily; they do not suspect its properties; they like its sweet, strong flavour. Truly termed by an Agent, "The Children's Friend." Manna Cake is the mildest and yet the most certain in action of all aperients; it does not gripe, and leaves no after constipation. A singularly mild, pleasant, and efficacious substitute for Castor Oil.

From W. H. Hayward, Chemist, Trowbridge:—"A Physician in the West of England says he gave Calomel and Jalap in repeated doses without effect, but a Manna Cake acted almost immediately."

MAGNETO ELECTRIC TREATMENT OF PARALYSIS.

"Magnetism does not supersede ordinary medicines, but can be used in conjunction with them without at all affecting, or being affected by, their action. But its chief value is that it will reach cases which ordinary medicine will not touch. Take paralysis. Mr. Garratt can point to people who were bedridden, and, to all appearance, bedridden for life, but who, thanks to Magnetism, have left their couches, and are now engaged in the active work of life."

"Another class of sufferers who derive incalculable benefit from Magnetism are people of overworked brain. In such cases the physician usually prescribes complete rest and a total change of air, medicine being of little use. Mr. Garratt affirms that he can give the overworked man, who is unable to obtain rest and change, the like benefit he would derive from them, in a very much quicker, simpler, and cheaper way. At the same time Mr. Garratt's system is not opposed to other means of combating disease; on the contrary, it is an auxiliary which may be used in conjunction with, and as a supplement to them."—Extracts from "The Fountain."

Mr. Edgar D. DAVIES, Forest Hill, S.E.

"Some time since, I had a paralytic stroke, which, though not severe, left me very weak, and, to a certain extent, helpless, my medical advisers telling me that I should never be better, and unless very careful, probably worse.

"Hearing of your success in the treatment of paralysis, I determined to consult you, and accordingly did so. You made no promises, but said you knew of nothing so likely to do me permanent good as a judicious application of Magnetic Treatment. I adopted your advice, and since doing so I am thankful to say I am much better in every way. Formerly, I could scarcely lift my pen to write; now you have proof that I can do so; my hands and limbs are as free as ever, and I do not display such irritability of temper as I did then.

"I have taken no medicine, therefore, I am bound to infer that my improved state of health is due to your treatment alone, and that it has saved me from being an invalid for life."

Jan. 1, 1885.—"Thank God, I am well in health, and had a good stiff foot-race with my boy of twelve to-day, and beat him."

Mr. DAVID LEE, Cottingham Junction.

Oct. 25, 1882.—"My sister, who adopted your Magnetic Treatment three months ago, is so far recovered as to be able to walk without assistance; her recovery seems too good to be true, as owing to the complete paralysis of her legs she could neither walk nor stand, in fact had been helpless for over two years, and given up by medical men as incurable; and the fact that she can now walk after using your Treatment for so short a time speaks volumes for its efficacy.

"I have already recommended some of my suffering friends to you, and shall continue to do so as opportunity arises."

Feb. 15, 1883.—"I am happy to say that my dear sister continues well; the paralysis is completely cured, and I trust will not return any more."

Feb. 23, 1885.—"I am thankful to say that my dear sister has never been troubled by the paralysis since she was first cured by your treatment, for which we are devoutly thankful to God; and we take pleasure in recommending your treatment on every possible occasion. We wish you success in your work."

Mr. B. Copson Garratt has devoted many years of his life to the practical adaptation of Magnetism to the alleviation and cure of various forms of disease. His published essays clearly demonstrate the natural action of the remedy; they may be had on application at his Consulting Rooms, where a private list of 1,000 names may also be obtained.—B. "GLADNESS FOR SADNESS."

The Gospel Missions Country Holiday Cottage.

WE are encouraged to plead once more for the many hundreds of poor needy London Children attending our EIGHT SUNDAY and RAGGED NIGHT SCHOOLS, that as far as possible we may give them at least ONE WHOLE WEEK IN THE BEAUTIFUL COUNTRY during the present spring and summer, together with a number of their more weakly mothers, at our "Country Cottage," Chase Side, near Enfield.

We find it hard to write undemonstratively, as we think of the world of joy that this country week has crowded into the hearts of the hundreds of city children, little and big, taken since it was opened last Spring.

Some dear cripples and invalid children have spent two or three weeks amid these happy surroundings. With scarce an exception they have never left their homes before, and few of the parents can afford either the time or the money to visit them, yet it is a general plea of the little ones to stay another week, and often the "going home" is preceded by a good cry.

Those who have, either from an ample purse or personal connections, an open door to "The shady nooks, the murmuring brooks,

The moors or sparkling shores," can but faintly imagine what it is to be shut up in the close rooms of the crowded slums and back streets of London, with no hope of ever so small a release from such prison-like confinement, unless a way is made by practical charity, to give what otherwise is denied them.

Nor can we easily imagine what an enjoyment it is to these poor children—living as most of them do on the barest subsistence—to share the regular meals of wholesome food, with meat and pudding every day, which our dietary affords them.

We happened the other day to be at the home of one of these happy children upon her return, and we need scarce say the marked contrast the week had made was gladdening indeed to the widowed parent, while her healthy appearance was conspicuous beside the remaining members of the family.

To remove any occasion of failure, we pay the fares of the children, and in a few cases have given either clothes or boots, and write to School Managers and Boards of Guardians for the "permit" in the case of children under parish relief. We give each child a cheap copy of the New Testament upon their leaving, which serves to secure proper behaviour.

But we feel sure we need say no more to gain your sympathy, and, we trust, your practical help. The sum of FIVE SHILLINGS provides the board for one child for a week, ONE POUND four, FIVE POUNDS will board twenty, and so on in proportion.

We have seen a good farmhouse, with orchard and meadow of 4½ acres, which is offered to let, but we wait to see whether sufficient help is forthcoming to warrant us moving into larger quarters.

One friend kindly offers FIVE POUNDS towards a fund for purchasing a suitable house for this good work, which would be a very desirable thing; and could be easily accomplished were the means to hand.

Contributions may be sent either to THE EDITORS at 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C., or to yours most respectfully,

During the last two years more than 700 men, women, and children have been sent into the country for a fortnight's change of air, of scene, and food; and much sickness has been prevented.

There are more than thirty missionary agencies in operation.

Friends are invited to visit the Institution any day but Saturday.

Post-office Orders should be made payable at 66, High-street, Whitechapel, E. Letters and Parcels should be addressed to George Holland, The Ragged Schools, George-yard, High-street, Whitechapel, London, E.

LAMB AND FLAG
RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION,
10, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

The many calls daily made on Christian benevolence have for some years kept me silent, but the time has now come when I must ask for help.

Larger premises are absolutely required for the increased work of this School and Mission, and I cannot, without making the facts known, continue to turn away from our doors the many boys and girls who are eagerly seeking admission, at the dangerous age of 14 and upwards. Will some of those who are blessed with means help me to raise £1,500? This would provide the accommodation needed to gather in the wanderers.

The Lamb and Flag Ragged School has taken for the sixth year consecutively, the largest number of prizes for long service and good conduct at the hands of the Ragged School Union.

Contributions will be thankfully received by J. C. Sherrard, Hon. Director and Treasurer, 7, Oxford-square, Hyde-park.

ZENANA AND MEDICAL MISSION, School and Home, 58, St. George's-road, S.W. Christian ladies trained for Foreign Medical Mission Work, by two years' curriculum. Ladies so desirous may attend midwifery alone. Dr. Griffith, Hon. Sec. Treasurer, G. J. Green, Esq., L. and C. Bank, 3, Victoria-street, S.W.

Funds urgently needed.

THE BENEVOLENT OR STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Treasurer, Alderman R. N. Fowler, M.P. (Lord Mayor); J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman; Mr. Ex-Sheriff Clarence Smith, Hon. Secretary.

For ninety-nine years this Institution has visited and relieved the destitute sick, by an entirely unpaid agency, consisting of over 280 Christian men and women. Many sad cases have constantly to be passed over from want of funds.

The Committee will be thankful for the Society being remembered in the testamentary arrangements of the benevolent.—Office of the Society, 52, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

GREAT COLEMAN'S. — Gentlefolk of limited means needing change and rest, will find all advantages of a gentleman's country house Drives given. Terms 21s. per week, inclusive. For particulars apply to
Mrs. Griffith, 45, Finsbury-square, E.C.

RESCUE WORK IN POPLAR.—Manor Cottage, Kerbey-street, Poplar, E. Founded by Mrs. Wilkes, 1878. Treasurer, Henry Green, Esq., Blackwall, E. Miss Cooke, 68, Mildmay-park, will also receive contributions for this work of mercy. Mrs. Wilkes at home Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Fridays, to see friends and give information respecting this effort to seek and save the lost.

LECTURES AT STAFFORD ROOMS.—Mr. B. W. Newton proposes (D.V.) to resume his Lectures on Prophetic and Other Parts of Scripture, at the Stafford Rooms, Titchborne-street, Edgware-road, on successive Tuesday Mornings, commencing on Tuesday, May 12, at Half-past Eleven o'clock.

COSTERMONGERS' COTTAGE MISSION, Vinegar Ground, City-road, E.C. Treasurer, The Hon. A. F. Kinnaird; Superintendent, Walter Penrose.—Funds are greatly needed at the present time to carry on the Lord's work in this little corner of his vineyard. Any gifts of clothing or money will be gratefully acknowledged by printed receipt.—Your obedient servant, Walter Penrose.

SAILORS' REST AID SOCIETY.—Rests for Naples, Messina, Pozzuoli, &c. Mission ship for Mediterranean. Seamen's Gospel Temperance League. Treasurer, S. J. Alexander, Esq., Weston-super-Mare; or office of The Christian.

FAITH-HEALING and Power for Service.—Meetings conducted by the Rev. John Allen or his workers. Blackheath Hill, Greenwich (Auction Rooms, Trinity-street), Tuesdays, 7 p.m. Camberwell Gate (The Hall, Horsley-street), Tuesdays, 7 p.m. Hackney (Trinity Church, Triangle, Mare-street), Sundays, 3 p.m.; Mondays, 7 p.m.; on Fridays, Baptism of the Spirit, 7 p.m.

Postal address, Balclutha Lodge, Southgate, N.

THE COMMITTEE of the Ladies' Samaritan Society of the National Hospital for the Paralysed and Epileptic, 25, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, earnestly plead for contributions in aid of the poorer patients and their families. The smallest gifts in money or clothing will be thankfully acknowledged by the Committee.

ANXIETY OF SOUL.—Any to whom the way of salvation is not clear, are invited to communicate, either personally or by letter, to W. S., care of Evangelistic Secretary, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

LONDON FEMALE PENITENTIARY, 191, High-street, Stoke Newington, N. (Founded at Pentonville.) This door of mercy, opened in 1807 as an asylum for friendless and fallen women, after having benefited nearly 6,000, is suffering from lack of funds. Its endowment is spent, and the income is insufficient to meet necessary expenditure. Present number of inmates, 70. Those who sympathise with this Christian work are earnestly entreated to become Annual Subscribers, or assist by Donations, paid through the Society's Bankers, Barclay, Bevan & Co., 54, Lombard-street; the Office of "The Christian;" or at the above Institution.
W. E. Page, Secretary.

LIVERPOOL BETH-SHAN Faith Healing Home, 11, Great George-square. Meetings every Tuesday, 7.30, and Friday, 3 o'clock, Sunday, 7.30.—Address Miss Bailey.

WILL ANYONE, who is charitably inclined, kindly give an old Piano to an Invalid Home, where one is much wanted.—Mrs. Crowie, Invalid Home, Jevington, Polegate, Sussex.

THE ANNUAL MISSIONARY BREAKFAST will (D.V.) be held at the Powis Hall, Powis-gardens, Westbourne-park, on Monday, May 25, 1885, at 9 a.m., when addresses will be given by Rev. G. A. Shaw (Madagascar), Rev. W. Holman Bentley (Congo), and Rev. Evan H. Hopkins (Richmond) Tickets One Shilling, of which a limited number only can be issued, to be obtained of Mr. Everett, 75, Cornwall-road, Westbourne-park, W.

GLOUCESTER CONFERENCE, June 2, 3, 4, at Bell Assembly Rooms.—Speakers: Revs. C. Campbell, J. B. Figgis, C. Graham, &c. For particulars, apply to Rev. J. J. Luce, Gloucester.

PARIS CITY MISSION (6th year).—Mr. J. M. Weylland, Hon. Secretary, 31, Carlton-hill, St. John's-wood, N.W., respectfully invites applications for Drawing-room Meetings, or Meetings in School-rooms, to hear interesting statements from Mr. W. J. Lockie, the Paris Secretary (who is in London for a few weeks), respecting the work of two Missionaries, who visit the English poor in Paris, and of six French Missionaries, who visit the domiciles of the Parisian "ouvriers," aid in evangelistic meetings, sell Bibles, distribute portions of Gospel, tracts, &c. Mr. Weylland will gratefully acknowledge contributions, which are urgently needed to support the eight agents now at work.
